Dolph,	Hampton,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

235. Sheep, 50 cents per head.
236. All other live animals, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I did not hear the Secretary read paragraph 234.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was read. The Senator can revert to it if he desires.

Mr. VEST. I can not resist the temptation to call attention to the increase of duty upon hogs, increased by the Senate bill from 20 per cent. to 21.10 per cent. ad valorem. The tables of exports and imports show that we imported in 1887 1,634 hogs, valued at $3,871.25, and the exports of hog products from the United States for the same time in 1887 were 364,417,744 pounds, valued at $27,383,943, and for 1888, 331,306,703 pounds, valued at $27,187,175. The committee have increased the duty 1.10 per cent. ad valorem.

As a matter of course, this was not done to keep out hogs, for there are practically none coming in. The duty is now absolutely prohibitory in effect, the prohibition coming not so much from the duty as from the nature of the product, but this was put in for the purpose of pleasing the agricultural interest and the hog-raisers of the country, and under the pretense of protecting the farmer in order to justify an increase upon manufactured goods. It has no sort of effect beyond that.

The value of the hogs imported into the United States in 1887 was $3,871.25 and we exported in the same year $27,383,943 worth of hog products; but there is an increase of this duty and it can only be for the purpose I have named.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

237. Bacon and hams, 2 cents per pound.
238. Barley and rye 10 cents per bushel.
239. Barley-malt, per bushel of 34 pounds, 20 cents.
240. Barley, pearled, patent, or hulled, one-half of 1 cent per pound.
241. Beans, per bushel of 60 pounds, 25 cents.
242. Beans, pease, and mushrooms, prepared or preserved, in tins, jars, bottles, or otherwise, 25 cents per gallon.
243. Beef, mutton, and pork, 1 cent per pound.
244. Butter, and substitutes therefor, 4 cents per pound.
245. Cabbages, 1 cent each.
246. Cheese, 4 cents per pound
247. Chicory root.—Burnt or roasted, 1 cent per pound; ground or granulated, or in rolls, or otherwise prepared, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the committee the purpose of this paragraph. If it is the intention to build up the industry of the manufacture of ground chicory root, it seems to me scarcely of a character to warrant any particular care on the part of the Government. I believe the article is used for nothing except to adulterate coffee, and the adulteration of food products of this kind is not an industry which it seems to me ought to require the active, vigilant attention of Congress to build it up.

Mr. ALLISON. What does the Senator propose?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. As far as I am concerned, I would be willing to have the importation of it absolutely prohibited. I would like to know, however, the purpose of the committee in putting the paragraph in the bill. I am not responsible for the report of the tariff bill, and of course do not understand the purpose of the committee in framing the bill. I suppose the committee had a reason for putting in this clause.

Mr. ALLISON. Chicory is now on the dutiable-list. It is used for the adulteration of coffee, and a great many people like it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not an adulterant.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not an adulterant, but an addition to coffee.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is considered injurious to life, I believe.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is a very thriving and profitable industry in the State of California.

Mr. ALDRICH. A very large amount is invested in its manufacture there. There may not be in Arkansas, but there is in other States.

Mr. HISCOCK. Again, it is an agricultural interest and industry, and the agriculturists of California wish this duty.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator says the ground chicory root is a product of California.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as the ground is concerned, I will supplement that by saying that there is this feature in the bill, of putting a higher specific rate or a higher ad valorem rate, as the case may be, upon the prepared article than there is upon the raw product which may be imported here, with a view of protecting those who are engaged in the manufacture of it, in the grinding of it here. The same thing occurs with rice, the same thing occurs with tobacco. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] a little while ago made a speech in favor of just that thing.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If I remember correctly, raw, unground chicory root is at present admitted under the free-list, but the Senator from Rhode Island stated a while ago that because it is grown in California there should be a tax of 2 cents a pound put upon ground chicory root. The question I asked was what was the purpose of the committee in putting a tax upon this article? Do you propose that that which comes in competition with the farmers of California shall come in free, but when it has gone through some sort of manufacturing process you propose to tax that 2 cents a pound for the purpose, I suppose, of building up this laudable industry of committing a fraud upon the people who consume coffee, of adulterating coffee with a deleterious article, with an article that is harmful to health and can not do anybody any good?

Mr. CHACE. I should like to ask the Senator what authority he has for the statement that chicory is more deleterious than coffee. My understanding is that of the two coffee is much the more deleterious substance to the human system. I would like to know his authority for stating that this is an injurious adulteration of coffee. I do not so understand it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am in favor of allowing people to select their deleterious drugs if they propose to drink what is harmful, but I should like them to know what they drink. I understand that in many European countries where this article is used the laws require that every package of coffee mixed with chicory root shall be labeled "chicory and coffee" or "coffee and chicory." In this country I presume the consumers of coffee will be allowed to drink whatever they can drink, and whether it is coffee or chicory root makes no difference so far as the law is concerned.

Now, I have not the highest respect in the world for any effort to build up an industry that is intended in its very foundation and in all its ramifications to carry out or perpetrate a fraud on the consumers of coffee. I believe that if they are admitted here people ought to be allowed to select their own noxious drinks; and if coffee does greater harm than chicory root, and the people choose to drink it and know what they are drinking, that is their own affair and I am not responsible for it.

My impression is that the use of chicory root is harmful. I may be wrong about that. But whether it is harmful or not, I do not believe people ought to be compelled to drink it by a fraud, and I do not believe the Congress of the United States ought to lend itself to building up this great industry of manufacturing an adulteration of food products. You are wonderfully careful to protect people against mixtures of butter, and it seems to me you ought as well to protect them against mixtures of coffee; and you certainly ought not to lend yourselves to the promotion of this kind of adulteration when you are exercising the power of Congress to prevent the adulteration of butter. Congress ought not to treat differently these various articles of food and drink.

I simply rose to ask the question for information, what was the purpose of the committee in putting this item in the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the Democratic platform puts it on the free-list.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Puts what on the free-list?

Mr. ALDRICH. Ground chicory.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Is that in the platform?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, in the St. Louis platform.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator is remarkably well posted if he can find that in the platform.

Mr. ALDRICH. The platform indorsed the Mills bill, and the Mills bill puts it on the free-list.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. That a resolution was adopted by the St. Louis convention approving the Mills bill I believe is true, but I do not think the Senator will be able to find out the article of chicory in the Democratic platform. But if it was put in the platform, that does not get away from the fact. What I am asking for is what the intention of the committee was in providing for this article in this way. One of the members of the subcommittee tells me that it is to protect the farmers, and another comes in and says that such is not the case, but at the same time they know that the raw chicory root, which would have to be taxed to protect the farmers at all, is not taxed, but comes in free. You only propose to tax it after it has been subjected to some sort of manufacture, after it has been prepared as a fraud, after it has been put in such shape that it can be sold as coffee when it is not coffee and is worth very much less. If the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is right in supposing that it is not harmful in its nature, it certainly is worthless in its character practically, and people ought to be allowed to buy what they choose to drink.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

248. Chocolate, other than chocolate confectionery, 2 cents per pound.

249. Cocoa, prepared or manufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 2 cents per pound.

250. Cocoa-butter or cocoa-butterine, 3½ cents per pound.

251. Comfits, sweetmeats, or fruits preserved in sugar, sirup, molasses, or spirits, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, and jellies of all kinds, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

252. Corn-meal, per bushel of 48 pounds, 10 cents.

253. Dandelion root and acorns, prepared, and other articles used as coffee, or as substitutes for coffee, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1½ cents per pound.

254. Extract of meat, all not specially provided for in this act, 35 cents per pound; fluid extract of meat, 15 cents per pound; but the dutiable weight shall include the extract and the tins, jars, bottles, or other articles containing the same, and no separate or additional duty shall be collected on such coverings unless as such they are suitable and apparently designed for use other than in the importation of meat extracts.

Mr. VANCE. I want to make a remark about paragraph 254. In the first place, the change of rate from 24 per cent. ad valorem, which is the present law, to 35 cents a pound is a very large increase. I could stand that; but I think when it comes to taxing the tin cans or the glass jars in which the extract comes 15 cents a pound it becomes rather intolerable. The committee very generously agree to let the importer off with only 15 cents a pound on the can, provided he can make satisfactory proof that he is not going to put anything else in the can or use it for any other purpose when he has exhausted the extract of meat in it. I can not see the slightest necessity for any such increase, and I move to amend by restoring the present law. In fact, one of the objections I have to this bill is that these provisions are so odious that it has absolutely made the present law respectable and in some degree tolerable and fair, and that is so in this place. I am begging now for the old law. I move to strike out "35 cents per pound" and insert "20 per cent. ad valorem," and strike out all the remainder of the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 254, line 970, it is proposed to strike out "35 cents per pound" and insert "20 per cent. ad valorem;" and to strike out all after the word "pound," in line 971, as follows:

But the dutiable weight shall include the extract and the tins, jars, bottles, or other articles containing the same, and no separate or additional duty shall be collected on such coverings unless as such they are suitable and apparently designed for use other than in the importation of meat extracts.

So as to make the clause read:

Extracts of meat, all not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. The present duty upon all extracts of meat, as stated by the Senator from North Carolina, is 20 per cent. ad valorem. It was the purpose of the committee in submitting this paragraph to substitute a specific duty which should be simply equivalent to 20 per cent. ad valorem. The rates here fixed are based upon information received through the Treasury Department from the custom-house in New York, which are based upon importations for six months, and the rate fixed is the exact equivalent in a specific rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem, as shown by the returns of the Democratic custom-house officers in the city of New York, received by the committee through a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury; and the information is on file in the committee-room, and the Senator from North Carolina can examine it, if he chooses, at any time.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator from Rhode Island of course has not escaped observing the fact that in the analysis sent us by the Treasury Department, which he says furnishes the information, there is a note attached connected by an asterisk, which note says there are no data upon which to base a computation. The rates of the present law are given in order to fill up the column of figures. There is undoubtedly a large increase in this article.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will look at item 254 upon the statement to which he is referring, he will find that the ad valorem equivalent to the rate in the Senate bill is 20 per cent., as stated by the Treasury Department.

Mr. VANCE. That is explained, I think, if the Senator will observe the note.

Mr. ALDRICH. The words "no data" apply only to "fluid extracts of meat."

Mr. VANCE. The amount of duties collected under the present law is inserted. Then what says the note? That there are no classifications given in the importations from which the specific duties of the Senate substitute can be computed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know from what the Senator is reading.

Mr. VANCE. The statistical abstract of the Treasury Department which is before us.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no such note upon the copy which I have.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator will observe that there is an asterisk attached to the computation under the Senate bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no asterisk on the copy which I have before me.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will turn to the close of the schedule, on the third page following, he will find the note which I have read, and which I assure him I have not manufactured from my own head and imagination.

Mr. ALDRICH. The copy which I have before me, "paragraph 254, extracts of meat," the extension is all along, and in the very last item, in the column the "ad valorem equivalent" of the Senate bill is put at 20 per cent. ad valorem. Under the head of "Fluid extract of meat" there is a simple statement as to importations, "No data," and nothing else.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator do me the favor to turn over two leaves, to the close of Schedule G, and there he will find the asterisk which connects it with the statement I have made on the first page of Schedule G?

Mr. ALDRICH. That refers to items which are starred in the schedule.

Mr. VANCE. And this item is starred in this schedule which I have before me.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Under the column of "Senate bill" the Senator from Rhode Island will find it.

Mr. ALDRICH. As to fluid extracts, that is true.

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; as to extracts of meat. Importations $208,549 in value, but no quantity given.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is in the column headed "Senate bill."

Mr. VANCE. "Collected in 1887, $41,709.80."

Mr. ALDRICH. There may not have been any data in the possession of the gentlemen who prepared this statement, but there are data in possession of the Committee on Finance, and they are open to the inspection of the Senator from Arkansas or the Senator from North Carolina. Those data disclose the fact that the rate which we have here fixed is simply equivalent to 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. Whatever amount of secret information may be found in the archives of the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance of the Senate of the United States of the Fiftieth Congress, I do not know; but I do know that the explanations given by the experts of the Treasury Department are as I have stated, accompanied by a note that because the quantities given of importations under this item were not stated anywhere they had no means of estimating the unit of value, and therefore they give the ad valorem equivalent of the present proposed specific duty according to the present law.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is very easily explained. This table probably came from the Bureau of Statistics. That was the information on which it was based. The information received by the committee came through the customs division of the Treasury from the New York custom-house, and I have no doubt the data were not at that time available to the Bureau of Statistics in the preparation of its statement.

Mr. VANCE. What does the Senator from Rhode Island say to 15 cents a pound for a tin can?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the only way in which the duty can be collected. The officers can not take the goods out of the cans for the purpose of ascertaining what proportion of the weight is in tin and what proportion is meat itself.

Mr. VANCE. What particular industry in the United States is protected or encouraged by this tax of 15 cents a pound on a tin can? This is a most unreasonable feature of the bill, as it seems to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless their separation is demanded, the two amendments proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be treated as a single question. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] is temporarily paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. VEST. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Coke,	Gray,	Pugh,
Blodgett,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Ransom,
Butler,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Call,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Payne,	Walthall.

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Stewart,
Allison,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Hale,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Spooner,

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Berry,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Blair,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Bowen,	George,	Paddock,	Vest,
Brown,	Hampton,	Platt,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,
Dolph,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

255. Fruits.—Dates, grapes, plums, and prunes, 1 cent per pound.
256. Figs, 2 cents per pound.
257. Oranges, lemons, or limes, in packages of capacity of 1½ cubic feet or less, 10 cents per package; in packages of capacity exceeding 1½ cubic feet and not exceeding 2½ cubic feet, 20 cents per package; in packages of capacity exceeding 2½ cubic feet and not exceeding 5 cubic feet, 40 cents per package; in packages of capacity exceeding 5 cubic feet, for every additional cubic foot or fractional part thereof, 8 cents; in bulk, $1.50 per one thousand.

Mr. CALL. I move to amend paragraph 257 by striking out, in line 981, before "cents," the word "ten" and inserting "twenty;" in line 984, by striking out "twenty" and inserting "forty," and in line 986, by striking out "forty" and inserting "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Oranges, lemons, or limes, in packages of capacity of 1½ cubic feet or less, 20 cents per package; in packages of capacity exceeding 1½ cubic feet and not exceeding 2½ cubic feet, 40 cents per package; in packages of capacity exceeding 2½ cubic feet and not exceeding 5 cubic feet, 50 cents per package; in packages of capacity exceeding 5 cubic feet, for every additional cubic foot or fractional part thereof, 8 cents; in bulk, $1.50 per one thousand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the three amendments will be treated as one question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this amendment proposes an increase over the existing law, but inasmuch as the people of the State of Florida, whom I in part represent, are paying this high rate of taxation upon all the necessaries of life, and this is one of the chief articles of a large portion of that State for revenue and income, I think the duty should be increased. I therefore move the amendment in their interest. If the system of a high rate of duties upon the necessaries of life is to be continued we should increase the amount of duty upon oranges.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not understand what the Senator from Florida stated. Did he say that oranges are necessaries of life?

Mr. CALL. I said that they are not.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are not necessaries of life?

Mr. CALL. They are not. They are not necessary for existence.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Senator is entirely mistaken. With the downtrodden and oppressed workingmen of the North they are necessaries of life, and are so treated.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the amendment now offered by the Senator from Florida is to double the duty upon these necessaries of life.

Mr. CALL. Yes; the duty under the existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. He proposes to double the duty fixed in this paragraph.

Mr. CALL. Yes; I propose to increase the duty on oranges.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there any other article in the bill that the Senator thinks ought to be increased?

Mr. CALL. Yes; the duty on bananas and cocoanuts ought to be increased, that is, they should not be on the free-list, and a duty ought to be imposed on sponges, which are on the free-list. Those are the subjects in which I am particularly interested in this bill so far as an increase of duty is concerned. By the present law oranges in packages of a capacity not exceeding 2½ cubic feet pay 25 cents per box. The Senate bill has reduced the rate to 20 cents in place of 25 cents.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is the Senator from Florida quite sure that the bill reduces the duty?

Mr. CALL. I think so, if the text of the law indicates what it means.

Oranges, in boxes of capacity not exceeding 2½ cubic feet, 25 cents per box.

That is a difference of 5 cents to the box between the existing law and the pending measure.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has the Senator had his attention directed to that feature of the bill which abolishes damage allowances on packages and things of that kind, and has he calculated the effect that would have in increasing the duty?

Mr. CALL. Does the Senator refer to the allowance for damages?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, damage allowances.

Mr. CALL. The allowance for damaged fruit?

Mr. HISCOCK. For all imported goods and merchandise.

Mr. CALL. I have not, but that is not at all pertinent to this question. Whether a man shall pay for damaged goods or not is one thing, and stands upon its own merits altogether.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not desire to have the Senator's constituents in Florida understand that we have reduced the duty on oranges, because we have not done so. The practical effect of the bill will be to increase the duty.

Mr. CALL. That is a very singular remark of the Senator from New York. An allowance for damages of goods and withdrawal or continuance of duty because or irrespective of the damage is one thing and stands upon its own merits. I think it eminently proper that a man should not pay duty for that which is of no value, and that he should pay a duty upon the actual value. Whether a person shall be required to pay duty for goods that have been lost in transit or so damaged as to be worthless or in part worthless has no kind of connection with the rate of duty that should be imposed upon salable goods brought here, articles in good condition, as they are supposed to be and ought to be, in the regular course of trade. They are two distinct things.

You can not tell what is going to be the effect upon a cargo of fruit by allowing or refusing allowance for damage. It may be a damaged cargo or it may not. There may be one package out of a hundred damaged, and there may be fifty out of a hundred damaged, or there may be more, and in each case the duty would be different. It depends upon the distance and the season altogether. No man in the world, neither the Senator from New York nor anybody else, can inform me by an approximate opinion as to the effect of the rebate or refusal of allowance for damaged goods upon a single cargo, or upon any number of cargoes, upon the rate of duty on the sound article.

I base my amendment upon the proposition that articles of luxury which are not necessary for the subsistence of human life are eminently the proper subjects of taxation, and when a section of the country is engaged largely in producing that kind of a product, and it is an income-producing product, and the people are paying a high rate of duty upon all the necessaries of life, they should have the benefit of the system for such things as they produce.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into a discussion of the philosophy which makes oranges a luxury and steel beams a necessary of life, but I wish to say in regard to this paragraph that while we have nominally reduced the specific duty upon oranges, lemons, and limes, the provision referred to by the Senator from New York in the bill which abolishes damage allowances will more than compensate the producers of oranges in this country for the reduction which we have made in rates in the paragraph.

The average allowances made in the duties upon fruit are more than 25 per cent. on account of damages on the voyage of importation. Under the bill as we now have it those are entirely abolished, and whether they are one-quarter damaged or one-half damaged on the voyage of importation, the importers are obliged to pay the duty upon the full amount of the capacity of the boxes.

Instead of being a decrease, the provisions of the bill, as the Senator from New York has already said, will result in an increase of the duty upon fruit, especially upon oranges, lemons, and limes.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion upon this subject. The proposition is a perfectly plain one. The average damage upon cargoes of oranges imported from the Mediterranean or from portions of Central America is one thing. The West Indies, Hayti, Jamaica, Cuba, portions of the British West Indies or British Central America and Honduras are capable of supplying oranges and fruits which are almost wild, which grow without any care, without any cost, and require only the gathering of the fruit. They are capable of supplying the entire demand for oranges in this country.

Upon that source of supply the Senator from Rhode Island has no knowledge. It is a mere guess—a conjecture of his as to the amount of damage upon cargoes. In great part the distance is short, and in great part there may be no damage at all.

The question now presented is, shall the people of Florida who are dependent upon this product alone for their income be required to pay a high rate of duty for the iron utensils that they use, for every article of consumption—be remitted to the conjecture of the Senator from Rhode Island or the Senator from New York as to the effect of withdrawing the allowance made for damaged fruit which affects the general importation of oranges from the Mediterranean and everywhere else.

It is a discrimination in favor of the oranges in Cuba, in Jamaica, and in the islands of the West Indies, which are near to the coast of Florida, and that is the effect of it upon the people of Florida.

Mr. ALLISON. I am rather in sympathy with the Senator from Florida upon the question of oranges, lemons, and limes, but I submit to him that he asks too great an increase. We must be a little moderate in our demands for protection in this bill. I have been endeavoring to keep down the rates as much as possible.

The Senator from Florida insists upon a very large increase over the present law. It was the purpose of those who framed the bill, as the Senator from Rhode Island has stated, to keep the rate about what it is now, and there is no doubt of the fact that the remaining provisions in the bill will retain substantially the present rate of duty.

For myself I should be willing to make a small increase of duty on oranges if the Senator from Florida insists upon it, but I submit to him that his amendment is entirely too great an increase for the sake of protection, even. The proposition of the Senator is practically to double the duty. I do not think we ought to do that upon an article of such universal consumption as oranges and lemons.

Mr. CALL. I am perfectly willing to reduce the amount. I moved the amendment in pursuance of the request of a number of citizens of Northern and Northwestern States interested in Florida fruit-growing, who are very firm believers in the policy of increasing the duty upon everything. I am content to have it placed where the existing law fixes it if nothing better can be done.

I insist, however, that as long as the collection of duties shall prevail, and be so laid as to increase the cost of living to the people of Florida, I shall insist on their right to have the value of their farm and garden and fruit products increased in value by the same means, and with much greater justice, and by a much wiser public policy, because they, as luxuries, are properly the subject of a high rate of taxation.

I do not desire to make this duty an oppressive one to the consumers of foreign fruit, but I will say that the effect of the withdrawal of the damage allowance is simply a discriminating duty in favor of the West India orange and the orange of Central America, as it depends upon the amount of damage sustained in the shipment of oranges of different localities.

For instance, as to the Mediterranean orange making long voyages, there will, at some seasons of the year, be a great loss, and from those regions of country where but little care is bestowed in the preparation and shipment of the oranges, there will be greater loss and damage and the price of the importations will depend upon the amount of duty that shall be imposed, with the loss or damage added. If there is no average damage, if a vessel coming here in thirty-six or forty hours from any of the West India Islands will sustain no damage in her cargo of fruit, manifestly the allowance will have no effect upon the trade from that locality.

That is a very clear proposition. Upon the Mediterranean fruit and that from countries where there are long voyages the average damage may affect the rate of duty seriously, and where the trade is regular and controlled by the same persons they will make an average of their loss and obtain repayment by an increased price put upon the sound fruit.

I think as a matter of justice that there ought always to be allowed something for fruit or anything else that is lost or damaged in transit. There is nothing that can justify the imposition of a duty upon that which is of no value, or the imposition of a duty upon a greater value than the thing possesses.

There can be no propriety in a duty of that character. Damaged fruit when brought here of course is worth little or nothing. It is sold immediately at the place where it is landed, and that is the end of it; it perishes in a day, and to require a tax to be paid on it is a discouragement of commerce almost equal to a prohibition.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am entirely opposed to the maintenance of the present law as to the duty on oranges, and for the reason that I am somewhat selfish in respect to it. Certainly the orange industry in Florida is very largely a Northern industry, and I for one have a sympathy with it, I am frank to admit. I know that large orange groves are now operated there by people from my own locality. I am opposed to the present law because I know that it is not as good for the orange-growers as the provision which we propose in this bill. A careful investigation as to the amount of damage allowances that are made in our Northern ports has demonstrated that this provision is far better for the orange-growers than the present law.

Therefore I am opposed to the change of the Senate substitute as reported to the present law. I am in favor of the provision as found in the bill, because it is more protective and more certain in its results.

Mr. CALL. I should be very glad if the Senator from New York will inform me what is the average damage on oranges, especially from Jamaica or Cuba to the city of New York or the cities of Boston, Baltimore, or Philadelphia.

Mr. HISCOCK. From 15 to 20 per cent.

Mr. CALL. Even if that were so, if we should protect the Florida fruit by requiring damaged fruits to pay full duty, that is a new theory of protection. It is not to be done with justice and fairness by imposing taxes or duties on damaged fruit, but so far as Florida and that section of the country are concerned, the principle which you propose to apply is that you are going to make a man pay for the fruit that is damaged or worthless, and thus increase the cost of the sound fruit unless he throws it overboard and abandons it. How are you going to charge him? Upon his invoice cargo from the place of shipment, and not upon his invoice as entered at the place where it is delivered? This would be a varying and uncertain quantity and would give no steady or reliable rate of duty.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is a specific duty fixed upon the boxes which are shipped here, and if rendered at all it is assessed upon the boxes.

Mr. CALL. It is on the invoice.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is assessed upon the box and not upon the invoice value at all.

Mr. CALL. Of course it is assessed upon the boxes, and whether they contain anything or not they must pay duty. Whether they are full of decayed fruit or full of sound fruit, it is the same thing; so that if the boxes are all unsound, still the rate of duty must be paid.

Let us suppose that the owner of one of the little fishing vessels of the West Indies or Central America, making a fishing venture to the coast of Florida, loads his vessel in bulk with oranges and delivers them at Tampa Bay, or Cedar Keys, or Charlotte Harbor, or Jacksonville, or Pensacola, and they are sound. He has to sell them; they are perishable and he can not wait. Under this Senate bill he pays 5 cents less duty than under the present law, and there is no increase on the sound fruit because of his paying duty on damaged fruit. This is largely the course of trade. The importer from the Mediterranean in large quantities may impose an additional price on sound fruit, but in no other case will the law have any effect.

Mr. HISCOCK. They can be abandoned.

Mr. CALL. Oh, of course.

Mr. HISCOCK. As the Senator pursues the investigation he will come to the conclusion that he is attacking that great industry of his State by proposing to substitute the present law for the provision here.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me the Senator ought not to make a proposition of that kind, that I am attacking an industry.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is not any doubt about it. If the Senator from Florida will take time to investigate this question he will ascertain that when he proposes to substitute the present law in place of this provision, he is striking at the protection of the orange-growers of his State.

Mr. CALL. The instance I have stated, which is the usual course of trade, proves that the Senator from New York is in error in this opinion. The large importer who is constantly in the business can charge his damages paid in duties on unsound fruit on the sound fruit, but the small trader who makes a single voyage and has no damaged fruit can not do so.

I did not propose to introduce the existing law as an amendment at present. I submitted an amendment to increase the rate imposed by the present law, to protect the market on the coast of Florida where fruit should be landed which might be salable. That is one damage to the fruit-growers, that they ship a species of fruit in bulk which costs very little and may be sold at very small prices, and there will be a discrimination in favor of the foreign countries which are so near the coast of Florida that fruit may be brought there not damaged and in salable condition and sold with a profit at almost nominal prices as compared with the cost of the Florida fruit.

But as to the provision that you shall discourage commerce whether it is oranges or anything else, by providing that a person shall pay the same duty for damaged fruit that he pays for fruit that is of full value and perfectly sound, I should not support a proposition of that kind in reference to anything, because of its manifest unreasonableness and injustice. However, in reference to the protection of the fruit-grower, that is a very different thing altogether from the question of protecting the revenue laws against fraudulent practices.

The principle that should control in imposing duties or taxes is to impose the duty most heavily on luxuries, and, as I said before, it applies to oranges and every other luxury; and I insist that everything is a luxury that is not in some degree necessary for the support of human life. But I do not care to discuss that proposition.

The Senator from Rhode Island says he can not see the difference between an orange and a steel beam in respect to the one being a necessity and the other not. I think there are a good many people who can see the difference, and can also see the difference in the philosophy of the two ideas. Be that as it may. Even if it is a theory peculiar to myself, I am very willing to avow my opinion that those people who are able to consume and use articles not necessary for the subsistence of human life, not essential to its comfort, ought to pay the highest rate of taxation, because they have the greater means with which to do it.

The importation of fruit in this country from different parts of the world is made frequently at almost a nominal cost. The orange from the West Indies grows almost in a state of nature without the aid of man.

The orange in the State of Florida that is used in commerce is produced at a considerable expense. That is the difference. The West Indiaman, a short distance from the coast of the United States, within from forty-eight to fifty hours of all the great cities upon the coast, imports an orange that has cost him nothing, except the cost of gathering, with a very small amount paid for the labor of gathering. The transportation is by sea. The orange is brought largely in bulk, and it is sold and can be sold here for a much less price than the Florida orange.

It is very true that the fruit grown in Florida is far superior, and in that respect it has an advantage; but the people of that State, both Northern and Southern (for while we have, as the Senator from New York says, quite a large number of Northern persons there who are spending their money and their time in making that country their residence and engaged in fruit-growing, we have also people from every State in the United States, largely Southern, largely from the Northwest), are impressed with the idea that the orange, the lemon, the pine-apple, the banana, and the cocoanut are proper subjects for a high rate of duty. I agree with them, and if you are going to continue this system and make them pay a high rate of duty for everything that they consume, it is only fair you should accord to them the same benefit as to the fruit products which they grow.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am very greatly surprised at the silence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] upon this proposition to double the duties upon articles in universal use. I am afraid that that Senator is neglecting the interests of the people whom he represents.

Mr. DAWES. The oppressed people.

Mr. ALDRICH. The oppressed people whom he represents.

Mr. VANCE. Did the Senator from Rhode Island address his remark to me? I did not hear him. Will he be kind enough to repeat his remark, for if it was good it can not be said too often?

Mr. ALDRICH. I expressed my surprise that the Senator was deaf when a proposition of this kind was pending to double the duties upon an article in universal use.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator's surprise would have been a surprise if there had been anything to be surprised at. I was not deaf. I was hearing all that was said, and the vote has not been taken yet. So I do not see the force of the Senator's remark.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from North Carolina up to this time has not contented himself with merely voting. His clarion voice has been heard in behalf of the people usually.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, but I have left the discussion of questions about which Senators were peculiarly informed in their own localities to themselves, and I have not seen proper to say a word on this occasion. I will say something very soon, if the Senator is hungry for any more of my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALL. At the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa I will move to insert the provisions of the existing law in place of this paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida withdraw the amendment now pending?

Mr. CALL. I withdraw it at the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. As I said, I offered the amendment at the suggestion of a number of orange-growers, but it is evidently impossible to obtain any increase above the existing law.

I am content to leave this argument where it is, and the Senator from Rhode Island, whose opinions will control this matter, thinks it is a position which will be approved by reasonable men that oranges are an article of necessity, that the consumption of fruits is of universal use, that every man in this country not only consumes this fruit—I wish they did—but that it is as necessary as a coat, as a woolen garment, as necessary as salt; that human life and comfort can not be preserved without it; and that it had better be made free or allowed to come in at a low rate of duty. I am very glad to hear that he is willing to put something at a lower rate of taxation upon the ground that he regards it, however erroneously, to be an article of necessity; but I insist that oranges and fruits of all kinds are essentially a luxury, and that the use of fruits of every kind is confined to the rich. Of the sixty-five million people of the United States, two-thirds of them do not consume any of these fruits. The use of them is confined altogether to people who are well to do. Therefore I will move my amendment in that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send the modification which he proposes to the desk?

Mr. CALL. I will say that the proposed change does not affect the provision in regard to the allowance of damages which the Senator from New York imagines has such a wonderful effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to move to strike out the paragraph under consideration and insert that which he has sent to the desk?

Mr. CALL. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida, as modified, will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 257 and insert:

Oranges, in boxes of capacity not exceeding 2½ cubic feet, 25 cents per box; in one-half boxes, capacity not exceeding 1¼ cubic feet, 13 cents per half box; in bulk, $1.60 per thousand; in barrels, capacity not exceeding that of the 196-pound flour barrel, 55 cents per barrel.

Lemons, in boxes of capacity not exceeding 2½ cubic feet, 30 cents per box; in one-half boxes, capacity not exceeding 1¼ cubic feet, 16 cents per half box; in bulk, $2 per thousand.

Lemons and oranges, in packages, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Limes and grapes, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. GRAY. I rose to ask the Senator from Florida whether the substitute which he moves changes the old law above its present rate.

Mr. CALL. In reply to the Senator from Delaware, I will say that the substitute I have moved is the language of the existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Florida intend to follow that up by restoring the existing law in regard to damage allowances?

Mr. CALL. No, I do not. I have not examined that provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. The abolition of damage allowances increases the rate of duty upon these articles at least 25 per cent.

Mr. GRAY. If that be so, it seems to me it ought to be opposed by those who are in favor of direct methods of legislation. It would be pretty hard, I suppose, to frame a bill according to the scheme of this one, or any bill which undertakes to grant favors to a portion of the citizens of this country engaged in particular industries without incorporating in such a scheme some very iniquitous features.

When you attempt an artificial regulation of the business of a great people who are competent to manage their own business for themselves; when you delegate to three hundred or four hundred average Senators and Representatives in Congress the right to interfere with the normal course of business of sixty or seventy million people stretching over a vast continent, then, of course, you are bound to encounter in such a scheme and in such an attempt inequalities and discriminations, and the mass of the people are bound to suffer.

But when we are discussing the details of this scheme item by item and paragraph by paragraph, even those who are opposed to the general policy involved may be allowed to call attention to certain glaring inequalities and attempt to improve what they can not altogether reform. It would seem to me a very sorry confession that those who are in favor of protecting an industry must do so by indirection, and by this so-called damage clause give to an industry a protection which is uncertain, varying, at times exorbitant, while at other times it may be on a plane that is quite within the reach of reason from the protection standpoint.

Mr. ALLISON. May I call the attention of the Senator for just a moment to the fact that the provision respecting damage allowances is a provision recommended by the Treasury Department, and is a provision that was in our undervaluation bill, so called, and it is a provision in the Mills bill, so called?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, it is in the Mills bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It is in the House bill as it came to us. It is a question relating to the protection of the revenue and not a question of by indirection attempting to do what we do not do directly. I think the Senator is under a misapprehension in respect to it.

Mr. GRAY. I do not profess to be at all familiar with what are called, I believe, the administrative features of this or any other tariff bill, but I do know that there are a great many necessities devolved upon the Government which are injurious in their operation, from the fact that we have embarked upon a scheme that is unnatural, artificial, and abnormal.

Whether there be an administrative necessity or not I shall make my comment upon this feature of the bill. It serves to give character to such schemes that here is an attempt to carry out a protective policy, and yet by what they say is a necessity of administration a man may be compelled to pay a tariff tax on a cargo 75 per cent. of which is damaged and only 25 per cent. is available to him for the purposes of his business, or he must abandon the whole. Is that a necessity which may arise under this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. No, that would not arise at all. If the damage exceeds 10 per cent. the importer can abandon the damaged goods.

Mr. GRAY. The damaged part?

Mr. ALLISON. The damaged part only. That is the provision.

Mr. GRAY. The contingency which I have suggested can not arise?

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, no.

Mr. GRAY. Then I would much rather, it seems to me, see a certain stable and fixed rate of protection (if protection is to be given to any industry) that is not contingent upon the vicissitudes of a voyage or upon the condition of the article when it arrives, so that we may know just what the tax is, that the importer may make his calculations and the consumer may know precisely what he has to pay.

Mr. President, one word more in regard to a criticism that was made by the Senator from Rhode Island in reference to what he said in a humorous way as to the supposed silence of the Senator from North Carolina when this part of the bill was reached. The scheme of this bill is one conceived in selfishness and in avarice, meant to protect the few and to levy a tax upon the many, to distribute the bounty of the Government to the rich and trust to their being almoners for the poor; and in a scheme of this kind it may be well sometimes to refer to its discrimination, and to the inequalities that it seeks to establish between the different industries and different classes in this country.

The agriculturists of this country as a class are out of the reach of any protective tariffs that this bill or any other may propose. They can not be benefited by it. Although there are provisions in it which impose a tax upon agricultural products, upon grain and other products of the soil, yet as a matter of fact the great staple agricultural products of this country have to be sold in a free and open market, and their price is established under the competitive conditions of absolute free trade, whilst those who raise them must buy all that they are enabled to buy with the price so obtained in a highly protected market. That is true.

There may be some who have been deceived by the mere presence of the so-called protective provisions in this measure for agricultural products, but the one that we are considering now does have a practical effect upon the agriculturist. While I would not seek to impose a tax upon the mass of the community in favor of the agriculturist, yet in considering a bill of this kind I can not but observe that there is an attempt to discriminate all through against one class in favor of another, and the class discriminated against is the agricultural.

When we come to consider the tax upon fruit, every bushel or pound or package of fruit that comes into this country comes in as a substitute for home-grown fruit of whatever kind. As long as this is said to be a protective measure, one intended to go all around, as a Senator on the other side said the other day—I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]—then we may as well consider that the grower of oranges in Florida, the grower of fruit in Delaware, and Maryland, and New Jersey is entitled to the same protection that the favored manufacturers of the East and North receive from this bill; and that the fruits which come from the West Indies and the Mediterranean in substitution for the fruits grown on the fruit-growing soil of this country do come into competition with them, and a tax upon them is measurably a protection in the sense that other taxes laid on a foreign article are a protection to the industry engaged in producing it here.

Therefore, as long as the other provisions of the bill are kept as they are I shall vote to keep the tax where it is upon oranges and the other fruits that are attempted to be dealt with in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Delaware says that the fruit-growers of Delaware, New Jersey, and Florida are entitled to protection.

Mr. GRAY. They are entitled to protection if——

Mr. ALDRICH. They are as much entitled to protection as the manufacturing industries of other States.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is not the reverse of that proposition true?

Mr. GRAY. Yes; of course the reverse is true.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are entitled to no more and no less?

Mr. GRAY. I do not ask, as representing an agricultural community, any protection on their behalf if they shall be treated fairly in regard to taxes imposed upon them in favor of the manufacturing industries.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to make one other suggestion.

The Senator from Delaware criticises the provisions of the measure, not only the Senate bill, but, as has already been stated, the House bill and the recommendations of the Treasury Department as to the abolition of damage allowances. A bill to abolish damage allowances passed the Senate at the last session by his vote after discussion here, and that matter is entirely disconnected from the pending question as a general proposition.

Mr. GRAY. When I rose, I think I with becoming modesty confessed my ignorance of what are called the administrative features of the bill, but even I may be allowed sometimes to rise upon this floor and speak in a general way about the effect of a tariff bill. I asked for information in the case that I supposed, and the information was given me as to the effect of this bill by the Senator from Iowa, if a man imported a cargo of oranges, 75 per cent. of which should turn out to be damaged, whether in that case he was put to his election to abandon the whole cargo or pay duty on the 75 per cent. He tells me, which I did not know before, that the bill is limited to a damage of 10 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, if the damage exceeds 10 per cent. the cargo to that extent may be abandoned.

Mr. GRAY. That is, the damaged part of it?

Mr. ALLISON. The damaged part of it.

Mr. GRAY. That is, I should think, a very proper and necessary restriction of the power given to a collector to collect duty on damaged fruit. But my criticism was not as to the necessity under this or a similar measure of administrative features of that kind, but I merely pointed out these inequalities, and how monstrous it was to collect duty on worthless articles, and that that was one of the necessities that grow up when once you adopt an artificial system like this of regulating the business of a great people which had better be left to its natural condition of freedom.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from Delaware to impute to this side of the Chamber, or to the committee, the motive of trying to do by indirection in this bill what they did not dare to do directly, and to intimate that this item is only one of a great many where, in various devious ways, we had increased the duty without appearing to do so upon the face of the bill.

Mr. GRAY. I am not in the habit of imputing motives to individuals. Of course, if the Senator understood anything of that kind, I disclaim it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not individually; not personally.

Mr. GRAY. But I did impute to all measures of this kind and I did make the criticism that when once you embark upon legislation that protects a few at the expense of the many you are under the necessity of incorporating inequalities and indirections just such as these.

I thought that these were proper subjects of criticism; and I say now that it seems to me still monstrous, notwithstanding the explanation of the Senator from Iowa, that a man should be compelled to pay a tax upon an article that is imported which turns out to be absolutely valueless, that has perished during the voyage before it has entered the port of delivery. Whether there is an administrative necessity for that I do not know personally, but I accept the statement of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Rhode Island that there is some such necessity under the existing law.

Mr. STEWART. I prefer the classification of the Senate bill to the existing law, and I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Florida for that reason. But further on, unless the committee shall make some modification, when the bill comes into the Senate or at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, if I understood the argument of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] it was that the bill under discussion really gave the orange-growers in this country an additional protection over that in the existing law indirectly by virtue of the damage clause.

Mr. HISCOCK. It does not do it indirectly; it does it directly. There is no indirection about it.

Mr. PASCO. The statement is that it increases the duty, and it is of no importance whether it is done directly or indirectly.

Mr. HISCOCK. It does it absolutely directly.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that the damage clause in the House bill is the same as that in the Senate bill—substantially at all events, and I think, precisely. Consequently, the provision in the Senate bill does not give to this industry the same protection that it has under the House bill, and his argument falls to the ground.

It seems to me there is no reason why this proposed reduction should be made in regard to oranges. The Senator from New York claims to be a special friend of this industry. He claimed, I believe, that it was to some extent a New York industry. But, sir, it is an American industry. As the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has suggested, a measure affecting foreign fruits affects the fruit-growers all over the United States.

I can see no good reason why this reduction should be made, and hope that the proposition to leave the duty where the House bill leaves it will prevail. The damage clause being the same as in the House bill does not increase the protection, and if there is to be no increase in the duties upon oranges, lemons, and the other fruits, certainly the committee should be content with the existing law.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate any further in the consideration of this subject beyond making one observation.

Section 33, which, as I understand, is placed in this bill in accordance with the general statute passed at the last session to protect the revenue against fraud, provides that if the cargo or the package is damaged to an extent less than 10 per cent., the owner must pay the duty upon the package, upon the whole ten-tenths. If to a greater extent than one-tenth, he may abandon that particular package and pay no duty.

The theory of the Senator from New York, upon which he insists, is that the provision now incorporated into this bill and a part of the general law is an addition to the charge against the foreign orange, and in favor of the domestic orange. That is upon the idea that a general average of 10 per cent. or 15 per cent. is made by the importer for loss, and that that amount is imposed upon the sound oranges sold in this country, and therefore that it is a duty of 15 per cent. in favor of the domestic grower.

The error of that idea in its application to this product of Florida will be readily seen if we come to analyze it. A cargo of oranges is brought from Cuba or Jamaica in bulk. It arrives upon the coast of Florida. Whether in packages or in bulk when it arrives there it must be sold. If it be a sound cargo, it will perish within a short period of time; it can not be kept and it must be put upon the market and sold. That cargo will be the whole ten-tenths for sale, and the price may be diminished to whatever will pay the transportation and some profit. The fruit market of the home grower at that time, by that importation and that sale, is reduced below a compensating profit, for he can not produce and sell his oranges in competition with those of the fertile lands of the West Indies, where the orange grows as the product of nature, without the aid of man or of labor.

So there is a constant fluctuation of necessity. The fact of its being a perishable commodity and an immediate sale necessary, is an essential feature that fixes the price at the lowest rate that will bring a profit. It must be put upon the market and shipped all over the United States in a short period and sold to the wealthy people who use and consume this fruit. There is no time for delay, and the venture is a profitable one provided the loss from damaged fruit is not great.

That is the reason why this is, I think, a very mistaken provision and a very unjust one in regard to all importations, imposing a loss of 10 per cent., or some amount less than 10 per cent. upon the importer as an arbitrary loss simply for the purpose of protecting the revenue, which can be easily guarded without it, while it gives no certain or reliable increase of price to the producer of the domestic fruit.

Upon that ground I voted against the law in the last session, and I shall oppose it here and everywhere upon the theory that the duty should be levied upon the actual value, and if a specific duty be imposed for the purpose of preventing a fraudulent ad valorem being put upon the article, it should be used for no other purpose than that. Therefore I am opposed to that provision.

I only desired to show to the Senate that the provision of the thirty-third section imposing a perpetual loss to the importer upon the fruit to the extent of 10 per cent. by his being required to pay the duty for the damage, will be no adequate protection to the fruit-growers in the State of Florida against cargoes of oranges shipped in bulk, many of which come without injury. The sound cargoes arriving destroy the market for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

258. Raisins, 2 cents per pound.
259. Fruits preserved in their own juices, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
260. Ginger or ginger-root, preserved in sugar or otherwise, and citron preserved or candied, 4 cents per pound.
261. Orange-peel and lemon-peel preserved or candied, 2 cents per pound.
262. Fish.—Mackerel, pickled or salted, 1 cent per pound.
263. Herrings, pickled or salted, one-half of 1 cent per pound.
264. Salmon, pickled, 1 cent per pound.
265. Other fish, pickled, in barrels, 1 cent per pound.
266. Anchovies and sardines, packed in oil or otherwise, in tin boxes measuring not more than 5 inches long, 4 inches wide, and 3½ inches deep, 10 cents per whole box; in half-boxes, measuring not more than 5 inches long, 4 inches wide, and 1½ inches deep, 5 cents each; in quarter-boxes, measuring not more than 4½ inches long, 3½ inches wide, and 1½ inches deep, 2½ cents each; when imported in any other form, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CALL. There is another amendment which I desire to propose. I move, after line 989, paragraph 257, to add the following:

Bananas, pine-apples, and cocoanuts, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I have nothing further to say upon the subject than what I have already said in regard to oranges, and that is that under this bill we are oppressively taxed upon everything that we use, every article of necessity, every article of consumption, and the only products we have in a large portion of the State of Florida, the fruit-growing products, are without protection, or any adequate protection, from our neighbors in the West Indies and Central America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida?

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I will not call for the yeas and nays upon these amendments, but I desire to give notice that I will reserve them, and when the bill comes into the Senate will then ask for the yeas and nays upon them.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. VANCE. The Chair appointed me this morning a member of the committee of conference on the direct-tax bill, Senate bill 139. I ask permission to be excused from service upon that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection. The Chair appoints in place of the Senator from North Carolina the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to reconsider the action of the Senate this morning in non-concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives on the direct-tax bill and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and I also move that a message be sent to the House of Representatives asking for the return of the bill with the amendments. I do this at the request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who has just returned, and it is right and proper for him to have an opportunity to examine it.

The motion was agreed to.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

267. Foreign-caught fish (imported otherwise than in barrels or half-barrels), smoked, dried, salted, pickled, frozen, packed in ice, or otherwise prepared for preservation, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, one-half of 1 cent per pound.
268. Fish preserved in oil, except anchovies and sardines, 30 per cent. ad valorem.
269. Salmon and all other fish, prepared or preserved, and prepared meats of all kinds, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
270. Cans or packages made of tin or other material containing fish of any kind admitted free of duty under any existing law or treaty, not exceeding 1 quart in contents, shall be subject to a duty on each can or package of 1½ cents; and when exceeding 1 quart, shall be subject to an additional duty, for each additional quart or fractional part thereof, of 1½ cents.
271. Hay, $2 per ton.
272. Honey, 20 cents per gallon.
273. Hops, 10 cents per pound.
274. Indian corn or maize, 10 cents per bushel.
275. Lard, 2 cents per pound.
276. Macaroni, vermicelli, and all similar preparations, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. VANCE. I move to strike out of the bill paragraph 276.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 276, as follows:

276. Macaroni, vermicelli, and all similar preparations, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, in my perambulations around this Capitol some time last summer, I dropped accidentally into the room of the Committee on Finance, and the subcommittee were having a hearing when I peeped in, and a chipper old Dutchman was giving testimony as to the importance of placing macaroni upon the dutiable-list. I have procured a copy of his testimony, and I propose to read somewhat from it and to comment upon it.

Macaroni was put upon the free-list in 1883, and soon after it was put upon the free-list the establishment to which this witness belonged went into operation for the manufacture of it. He says he had no idea in the world when he went into the business that macaroni was on the free-list, and he worked on very well and his operations went forward very successfully and he never once thought of dying and destroying a great American industry and flooding this country with the products of the labor of cheap Italian lazzaroni in the form of macaroni, vermicelli, and so on, until a contract was advertised for supplying the Dayton Soldiers' Home with macaroni for the year, and he put in a bid for 8 cents a pound, and to his astonishment the contract was awarded to some importers in New York at 6¾ cents, whereupon he wrote to his Representative, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, to know what was the matter, and he said he never was so astonished in his life as when he received Mr. BUTTERWORTH'S reply stating that there was no duty upon macaroni. He said his firm had not been making much money for some time past, and he did not know what was the matter until he found that macaroni was on the free-list, and it was protection that he wanted against foreign pauper labor; so he came up, and happening, and as I said, casually to have strayed into the committee-room, I asked him a few questions. I read from his testimony:

I had only been in this business three months when I learned, to my great astonishment, that the Mills bill had fixed no duty whatever upon macaroni. I could scarcely trust my eyes when I saw that statement. I had written to Mr. BUTTERWORTH, our Congressman, to know what the duty was in the Mills bill, and then I learned to my astonishment that there was no duty whatever. From what I have already stated you will see that about one-fourth of our product is what we pay for wages. Of course, when they pay only from 6 to 10 cents a day for wages in Italy, and we pay our men and women five times that much, we can not very well compete with the Italians.

Senator VANCE. Can not our men, with the advantage of the better machinery that we have in this country, make more than the Italians can?

Mr. BOECKE. That is true; we have got as fine machinery in this country as anybody.

Senator VANCE. And flour is cheaper in this country than it is in Italy?

Mr. BOECKE. Yes; that is true.

Senator VANCE. And sugar is cheaper also, is it not?

Mr. BOECKE. Yes.

Senator VANCE. Your hands work more and your machinery is better. Does not that pretty nearly equalize the conditions?

Mr. BOECKE. It appears that it does not.

Senator VANCE. Are not your factories doing pretty well?

Mr. BOECKE. They are striving to, but they are not doing well.

Senator VANCE. What percentage do you suppose they clear on their capital now, on the average?

Mr. BOECKE. They are not clearing very much. I have only been in partnership about three months, and I am sorry to say that since I have entered into partnership my partner has told me that before that time they lost money; that is a fact.

Senator VANCE. What kind of people do you employ in your factory?

Mr. BOECKE. We employ girls and men. Each factory has about two men, my partner and another man, and one factory has two men besides my partner, and twenty boys and girls.

Senator VANCE. Are they natives or foreigners, those whom you employ?

Mr. BOECKE. Just as we get them; they are all born here, all born in Cincinnati.

Senator VANCE. What do you pay your boys and girls per day?

Mr. BOECKE. About $3.50 a week on the average, while in Italy they only get from 6 to 10 cents a day, women and children both. That is too much difference. We made a low enough offer for the Soldiers' Home, but still we did not get the contract. It was given out to foreigners at 6¾ cents, and they are offering macaroni to-day in New York City at 7 cents.

Senator VANCE. If we were to put 3 cents a pound duty on the macaroni would you add that amount to the wages of your workmen, or would you put it in your pocket?

Mr. BOECKE. Of course we could afford to pay higher wages to the girls and men that we employ.

Senator VANCE. But would you do it?

Mr. BOECKE. Of course.

Senator VANCE. It does not always follow, of course.

Mr. BOECKE. Yes, sir.

Senator VANCE. If we were to give you this tariff duty of 3 cents a pound would you not still hire as cheap labor as you could get in the market?

Mr. BOECKE. That is a reasonable thing; but I say while we pay low wages now we would gladly pay more.

Senator VANCE. All the increased profit arising from the tariff duty; would you pay that to your workmen?

Mr. BOECKE. As near as we possibly could, yes.

Senator VANCE. Why should you not do it altogether?

Mr. BOECKE. As I told you a while ago, my partner told me that the last year he lost money. In order to make it here at all, to get along, we would have to have a little of that.

Senator VANCE. How long have you been at work in this business?

Mr. BOECKE. I have only been at it about three months.

Senator VANCE. But I mean your factory, this factory you have been connected with; how long has it been going?

Mr. BOECKE. Three or four years altogether. We have had a pretty hard time, Senator.

Senator VANCE. Do you not suppose that the people who eat macaroni, some of them, have had a pretty hard time too?

Mr. BOECKE. We have not made much money; if we had it would be a different thing.

Senator VANCE. Do you not think that, if you have not been making any money in a certain business for four or five years, you ought to stop that business and go to something else?

Mr. BOECKE. We expect each year to do better than the year before. But so far as I am concerned as an individual I was not in it until about three months ago, and the gentlemen who have been in it, it appears, neglected altogether this thing of the tariff.

Senator VANCE. They established that factory, though, after the duty had been taken off?

Mr. BOECKE. No, they never established it; they just got into it the same as I did. I went into it expecting to make money, of course, but I found that my partner had been losing money last year, and we have been crippling along doing work not to amount to anything.

Senator VANCE. But the factory was established or the business was founded while there was no duty, after the act of 1883?

Mr. BOECKE. That is true; but still we have been going along and not making anything. We are struggling for existence, that is about the way of it; that is actually the way of it. The business is a struggle for existence.

Senator VANCE. Do you not think that if any one goes into a business and ascertains that he can not make money it is his duty as a sensible man, as soon as he ascertains that, to go to work at something else?

Mr. BOECKE. We did lose money, and this is the time we are making up for winter use.

Senator VANCE. Do you think the Government is bound to act the part of an insurer and make good all losses to a man in his business?

Mr. BOECKE. No; but I think it would be just to give us protection. I was in the malting business for twenty-two or twenty-three years, but since they have got to using corn meal, rice, and glucose in the place of malt that business has run down.

Senator VANCE. Then you got out of that business?

Mr. BOECKE. Yes, sir; and went into this.

Senator VANCE. Then, if you can not make any money in this business, do you not think you had better quit?

Mr. BOECKE. But I have my money in it.

Senator VANCE. Sell out.

Mr. BOECKE. Oh, yes; it is easy to say sell out, but who is going to buy a business that is not prospering? We have got a 20-cent duty on malt, and I wish the Government would be kind enough to protect this industry too. I have shown you here in this paper that one-fourth of our product is the wages we pay. I must say that I was very much astonished when Mr. BUTTERWORTH sent me a copy of the Mills bill and I then discovered that there was no import duty on these goods.

Senator VANCE. You did not know what was the matter until you found out that there was no duty on foreign goods?

Mr. BOECKE. No, sir. Now, when they sell their imported goods to the Dayton Soldiers' Home at 6¾ cents a pound, our factories can not compete with that price at all, although they are so near to the place, and have the best flour and the best machinery in the world. Still, if we competed with such prices as that we could not make anything at all, because of the large amount that is paid for labor.

Senator VANCE. According to your showing here you pay about 50 cents a day to your labor; that is not a very large amount to pay for labor?

Mr. BOECKE. To the girls and boys we pay about $4.

Senator VANCE. You said the average was about $3.50?

Mr. BOECKE. Yes.

Senator VANCE. That is a little over 50 cents a day.

Mr. BOECKE. Yes.

Senator VANCE. While in Italy they pay from 6 to 10 cents a day?

Mr. BOECKE. The wages is a big element, Senator.

Senator VANCE. I know it is a big element, of course.

Mr. BOECKE. We would like to have 3 cents a pound on 1-pound packages, and 2 cents a pound where it is loose or in bulk. That would be a big thing for us.

That is just what the committee have given him.

Senator VANCE. Three cents a pound would be nearly 50 per cent. duty ad valorem.

Mr. BOECKE. We can not sell our best goods for less than 8 cents a pound.

Senator VANCE. And yet foreign goods are laid down in Dayton for 6¾ cents a pound.

Mr. BOECKE. Some people make a distinction between foreign goods, even if they are made better here, and domestic goods. There are so many people that are not able to tell the real difference between the two, and that is the mischief. One grocer in Cincinnati told me that the people wanted the imported goods whether they knew what they were or not. But I dare say that with our fine flour and better machinery than they have over there we can make the goods here much better than they can be made there, and still parties will say that they want the fine imported goods. As I said, if it was the case of Havana cigars, sardines, or olive oil, something that we could not make here, then I would admit it, but these articles can be made much better here, or at least just as well in this country as they can be made abroad. I think 2 or 3 cents a pound would not amount to much, and I think you ought to allow that, because, as I say, we are struggling, actually struggling for existence. And so far as making money is concerned, I have only been in business three months myself, and yet I have been informed by my partner that last year he lost money. They sent me here because I am the oldest man in the concern, and I came to Senator SHERMAN, and he told me to come here. Two or 3 cents a pound is certainly not asking too much. You can not do any better than that. They ask for more than that in this petition that I have presented, as you will see.

Senator VANCE. What shall we do with the money when it comes into the Treasury? We have more there now than is needed. Do you think that we ought to impose a tax for your especial benefit?

Mr. BOECKE. You gentlemen will take care of that. The taking off of the duty in 1883 must have been an oversight; at any rate it was an indiscretion and foolishness.

Senator VANCE. You were not in this business at that time?

Mr. BOECKE. No; not as an individual. This is a struggling industry, as I have said. Those people who eat macaroni can very well afford to pay this little tariff that we ask; it amounts to hardly anything.

Which piece of political philosophy I commend to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

It is not like imposing a big rate of duty upon an article of necessity. I think you ought to try to persuade your committee to put a duty of at least 3 cents or 2 cents on this kind of goods. I do not think that is asking too much.

Senator VANCE. There is a man down in my country who is driving a pair of mules; his industry is also struggling, and he gets 75 cents a day and boards himself. What are we to do for him? He makes nothing to sell that could be benefited by any tariff.

Mr. BOECKE. In the first place, he has no one to do for but himself; he has no industry.

Senator VANCE. You have no one to do for but yourself and your family, who are dependent upon you, just as that man's family are dependent upon him. If we impose a tax in favor of people to support and help along every man who is making something that comes in competition with foreign products, what are we to do for this poor man in my country, and who can not be reached by any tariff?

Mr. BOECKE. That is very true, Mr. Senator; but in our industry our firm has been barely able to get along.

Senator VANCE. This poor fellow does not get along; there is no place for him to go, though he is bound to live.

Mr. BOECKE. It is but very little that anybody will have to pay in consequence of this tariff; it is so small that it does not amount to anything, you might say.

Senator VANCE. Then, if it is so little, it does not matter to you whether we put it on or not?

Mr. BOECKE. But it is a big thing to us.

Senator VANCE. It might be a big thing to this poor man I speak of to add that much to the price of his dinner.

Mr. BOECKE. If you add 2 or 3 cents to the price of macaroni, that doesn't amount to anything scarcely for him, but it amounts to a great deal for me and for my family. It is a big thing for those who are engaged in its manufacture.

Senator HISCOCK. Do you want more than 2 cents a pound?

Mr. BOECKE. We would like to have 3 cents a pound on 1-pound packages.

Senator HISCOCK. Could you not get along right straight through with 2 cents a pound?

Now, that's a good fellow!

Mr. BOECKE. Yes, I could.

Senator HISCOCK. That would be doing a good deal better than you are now?

Mr. BOECKE. Yes. I am only one in the trade.

Senator HISCOCK. What does the Mills bill do for you?

Mr. BOECKE. It does not do anything. To my astonishment, when I wrote to Mr. BUTTERWORTH to send me a copy of the Mills bill, I found that there was no import duty on macaroni.

Senator HISCOCK. It is on the free-list, is it not?

Mr. BOECKE. Yes. Then I wrote to Senator SHERMAN, and he wrote me a letter, saying——

Senator HISCOCK. Do you want it on the free-list?

Mr. BOECKE. No, sir; without protection we all know that everything would not go along as smoothly as it does now. I do not understand why it was put on the free-list in 1883.

Senator HISCOCK. I do not know, unless it was upon the theory that at that time we were the great flour-producing country of the earth, and that with our machinery and facilities we could produce macaroni as cheaply here as anywhere else.

Mr. BOECKE. In Cincinnati I think they must be sleepy-heads and not watch out for their own interests in the business, and probably it was done on account of carelessness and inattention. But when we pay out one-fourth of our product in wages we think we are entitled to protection.

That is the history of the whole concern. He epitomizes all the arguments in favor of a protective tariff. Although his establishment had been going ever since 1883 on free trade and without any protection, because, as the Senator from New York suggested, this was the greatest flour-producing country on the earth, and, as the witness said, they had the best machinery and the cheapest sugar in the world and all the facilities for making it, yet never until the cry of protection was dinned into his ears did he find out that he was not making as much money as he ought. He thinks 2 cents a pound, as he says, would be a good thing for him. I think it would, too.

I move to strike out the paragraph and remit this article to the free-list, where it belongs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I was requested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to state that he is absent from the Senate Chamber at work on a conference committee, and is paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If the Senator from Missouri were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL. I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and the pair of my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Blodgett,	Daniel,	Pugh,	Vance,
Butler,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	Harris,	Reagan,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Stewart,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Frye,	Paddock,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Sherman,

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Faulkner,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Bowen,	George,	McPherson,	Spooner,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Dawes,	Hearst,	Platt,	Walthall.
Eustis,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

277. Milk, preserved or condensed, including weight of packages, 3 cents per pound.

278. Mustard, ground or preserved, in bottles or otherwise, 10 cents per pound.

279. Spices, ground or powdered, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 4 cents per pound.

280. Nuts.—Almonds, not shelled, 5 cents per pound; clear almonds, shelled, 7½ cents per pound.

281. Filberts and walnuts of all kinds, 2 cents per pound.

282. Peanuts or ground-beans, unshelled, 1 cent per pound; shelled, 1½ cents per pound.

283. Nuts of all kinds, shelled or unshelled, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1½ cents per pound.

284. Oats, 10 cents per bushel.

285. Oatmeal, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

286. Pease, green or dried, in bulk or in barrels, sacks, or similar packages, per bushel of 60 pounds, 10 cents; split pease, per bushel of 60 pounds, 20 cents; pease in cartons, papers, or other small packages, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

287. Rice.—Cleaned, 1 cent per pound; uncleaned rice and rice flour and meal, one-half of 1 cent per pound; rice, broken, which will pass through a sieve known commercially as No. 12 wire sieve, and paddy, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. BUTLER. If it is entirely agreeable to the Senator from Iowa and the committee, I should be very much obliged if they would allow paragraph 287 to be passed over informally for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that amendments can be offered at any time to any paragraph of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no amendment ready now, but I think I shall have some to offer to this item.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

288. Rye-flour, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. VANCE. The next paragraph refers to salt. I have some remarks to offer on salt which I do not feel able to do this evening. I ask that that paragraph may go over.

Mr. ALDRICH. It can be taken up at any time.

Mr. VANCE. If I may be permitted to recur to it, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina ask that the paragraph be passed over?

Mr. VANCE. Let it be read, with permission to recur to it hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

289. Salt.—Salt in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages, 12 cents per 100 pounds; in bulk, 8 cents per 100 pounds: Provided, That exporters of meats, whether packed or smoked, which have been cured in the United States with imported salt, shall, upon satisfactory proof, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, that such meats have been cured with imported salt, have refunded to them from the Treasury the duties paid on the salt so used in curing such exported meats, in amounts not less than $100: And provided further, That imported salt in bond may be used in curing fish taken by vessels licensed to engage in the fisheries, and in curing fish on the shores of the navigable waters of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; and upon proof that the salt has been used for either of the purposes stated in this proviso the duties on the same shall be remitted.

290. Seeds.—Castor beans or seeds, 25 cents per bushel of 50 pounds.

291. Garden-seeds, agricultural seeds, and other seeds, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

292. Flaxseed or linseed, and other oil seeds, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 cents per bushel of 56 pounds; but no drawback shall be allowed on oil-cake made from imported seed.

293. Starch, including all preparations, from whatever substance produced, fit for use as starch, 2 cents per pound.

294. Tallow, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. VANCE. In paragraph 293, line 1096, I move to strike out "2 cents" and insert "1 cent" per pound as the duty on starch.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 293, line 1096, it is proposed to strike out "2 cents" and insert "1 cent;" so as to read:

293. Starch, including all preparations, from whatever substance produced, fit for use as starch, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. VANCE. That is an article of universal consumption, an absolute necessity. It is made very cheaply; and with the means of making it as cheaply in this country as anywhere in the world, I think the duty ought to be reduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PUGH. I wish to inquire if a quorum is present and voting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum has not yet voted.

Mr. PUGH. Then I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Call,	Harris,	Turpie,
Berry,	Coke,	Pasco,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Colquitt,	Pugh,	Walthall.
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Ransom,
Butler,	Gorman,	Reagan,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Allison,	Hale,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Chace,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Dawes,	Manderson,	Sherman,

ABSENT—36.

Beck,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Blair,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Brown,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Cameron,	George,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Cullom,	Gray,	Morgan,	Vest,
Daniel,	Hampton,	Payne,	Voorhees.
Dolph,	Hearst,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

295. Vegetables of all kinds, prepared or preserved, including pickles and sauces of all kinds, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I move to strike out paragraph 294, so as to place tallow upon the free-list.

This is the greatest tallow-producing country in the world, and tallow ought to be on the free-list. It can not be said that we are not able to compete with the tallow of other countries, and free tallow would be of very great use to that large portion of the country which is engaged in soap-making, and enable the price of soap to be reduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 294, as follows:

294. Tallow, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GRAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is not in his seat, and I therefore withdraw my vote. I have a general pair with him.

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. I transferred my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] this morning to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] and voted. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] being in his seat and the Senator from Kentucky having returned, I announce my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan.
Berry,	Colquitt,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Payne,	Vance,
Blodgett,	Harris,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—19.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Allison,	Frye,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Chace,	Hale,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—41.

Beck,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Blair,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Spooner,
Brown,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Butler,	George,	Morgan,	Teller,
Call,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Vest,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Plumb,	Walthall.
Cullom,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Daniel,	Hearst,	Quay,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote having disclosed that there is not a quorum present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Davis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sherman,
Allison,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Berry,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Teller,
Blodgett,	Gray,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Call,	Hale,	Pasco,	Vance,
Chace,	Harris,	Payne,	Vest,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Coke,	Hiscock,	Reagan,	Wilson of Iowa,
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators having answered to their names, the presence of a quorum is disclosed. The Secretary will again call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from North Carolina having tested the sense of the Senate on this important question of tallow, I ask him to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VANCE. Oh, yes; I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn, and the amendment is not agreed to. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

296. Vegetables in their natural state, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I move to strike out that entire paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 296, as follows:

296. Vegetables in their natural state, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. The bill which came to us from the House of Representatives put those perishable vegetables that hardly admit of importation, except for short distances across the line from Canada, on the free-list. I think there is where they ought to be, and therefore I move to strike out the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine withdraws his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Coke,	Payne,	Turpie,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Pugh,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Ransom,	Vest,

George,	Hearst,	Quay,	Voorhees,
Gibson,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,	Walthall.
Gorman,	Kenna,	Sabin,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. In the preceding paragraph, which was read without my observing it, I ask leave to offer an amendment in line 1100, striking out "five" after "thirty," so as to make the rate 30 per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 295, line 1100, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

295. Vegetables of all kinds, prepared or preserved, including pickles and sauces of all kinds, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to state before the vote is taken, for the benefit of those who may not have observed it, that this is an increase of the present duty of 5 per cent. My motion is to restore the present law.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the affirmative). Is the name of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not recorded.

Mr. VEST. I am paired with him, and withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri withdraws his vote.

Mr. BLAIR. If it is not too late I might transfer my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. That I ought to have done before, but by mistake I failed to do it; and if permitted I will do so now and vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The name of the Senator from New Hampshire will be called.

Mr. BLAIR. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Pugh,	Turpie,
Berry,	Harris,	Ransom,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Pasco,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Coke,	Payne,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—24.

Call,	Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Stanford,
Cameron,	George,	Kenna,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vest,
Cullom,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Voorhees,

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1931) to increase appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal., agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. NEWTON, and Mr. POST managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also returned to the Senate in compliance with its request the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the resolution of the House fixing the date for the adjournment of Congress.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee River; and

A bill (H. R. 10323) to incorporate the American Historical Association.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11878) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2579) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Andrew J. Smith, late colonel of the Seventh United States Cavalry and a major-general of volunteers; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 236) to pay the officers, clerks, and employés of Congress their salary for December on December 20, 1888.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3751) for the relief of certain settlers in Hettinger County, Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3752) to incorporate the Homestead Savings Bank of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 3753) for the relief of Franklin Rives and Wright Rives; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 3754) to construct a road from the village of Plattsburgh, N. Y., through and along the Government military reservation in said village; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 123) tendering the thanks of Congress to certain physicians for services rendered in the treatment of the recent yellow-fever epidemic; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

GEORGE F. ROBERTS.

Mr. TURPIE submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to estimate the amount required to pay George F. Roberts, administrator, etc., Silas Q. Howe, and Henry W. Smith, the alleged excess money erroneously collected as set forth in Senate bill No. 2001, first session Fiftieth Congress, and report the amount for the information of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "requested" and inserting "directed," as that is the usual form.

Mr. TURPIE. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the House bill making appropriations to meet certain deficiencies may be taken up and referred to the Committee on Appropriations at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 11878) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to offer a resolution, and ask its present consideration:

Whereas there have recently appeared in the press of the country certain charges of irregularities and violations of law in the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury as to the selection of sites for public buildings, the letting of contracts for the erection thereof, the methods in which plans and specifications and contracts have been prepared and drawn, and otherwise: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and the same is hereby, authorized and instructed to make, either by the committee or a subcommittee thereof, an investigation into the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department during the administration of the present Supervising Architect, and for that purpose the committee, or said subcommittee, if appointed, is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths; said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VEST. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rules.

Mr. VEST. The resolution goes over, and it will be printed under the rules, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed.

TREASURY BOND PURCHASES.

Mr. PLUMB. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate, at the earliest possible moment, a full statement of all purchases of bonds made by the Treasury Department, during the period from March 4, 1885, to date, specifying in detail the classes of bonds, amount and date of purchase, the party from whom purchased, the price paid, the market quotations in New York at the date of respective purchases, and in addition thereto a statement of bids rejected, showing date of bid, premium asked, and market quotations; also showing the available surplus in the Treasury on the 1st of each month during the period above named.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to the general scope of the inquiry, but I suggest to the Senator who offers the resolution whether he thinks it proper in that connection to have a report as to the names of the persons from whom the bonds were purchased. Does the Senator desire to be informed from whom they were purchased? The remainder of the resolution I have no objection to.

Mr. PLUMB. We have already had a partial statement of that kind which, I think, has done no harm, and I do not see, as this is no larger or wider in scope than the resolution formerly adopted, that any harm is to come to the public service from the adoption of this.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I object to the present consideration of the resolution. Let it go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over under the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the message from the House of Representatives in regard to the direct-tax bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 20, 1888.

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

Mr. SHERMAN. I formerly moved the reconsideration of the vote by which a committee of conference was ordered. I now move that the bill with the amendments of the House of Representatives be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

297. Potatoes, per bushel of 60 pounds, 15 cents.

298. Vinegar, 7½ cents per gallon. The standard for vinegar shall be taken to be that strength which requires 35 grains of bicarbonate of potash to neutralize 1 ounce Troy of vinegar.

299. Wheat, 20 cents per bushel.

300. Wheat-flour, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

SCHEDULE H.—WINES, LIQUORS, ETC.

301. Champagne and all other sparkling wines, in bottles containing each not more than 1 quart and not more than 1 pint, $7 per dozen; containing not more than 1 pint each and more than one-half pint, $3.50 per dozen; containing one-half pint each or less, $1.75 per dozen; in bottles or other vessels containing more than 1 quart each, in addition to $7 per dozen bottles on the quantity in excess of 1 quart, at the rate of $2.25 per gallon.

302. Still wines, including ginger wine or ginger cordial and vermuth, in casks, 60 cents per gallon; in bottles or jugs, per case of 1 dozen bottles or jugs, containing each not more than 1 quart and more than 1 pint, or 24 bottles or jugs containing each not more than 1 pint, $1.60 per case; and any excess beyond these quantities found in such bottles or jugs shall be subject to a duty of 5 cents per pint or fractional part thereof: Provided, That any wines, ginger cordial, or vermuth imported containing more than 24 per cent. of alcohol shall be forfeited to the United States: And provided further, That there shall be no constructive or other allowance for breakage, leakage, or damage on wines, liquors, cordials, or distilled spirits. Wines, cordials, brandy, and other spirituous liquors imported in bottles or jugs shall be packed in packages containing not less than 1 dozen bottles or jugs in each package; and all such bottles or jugs shall pay an additional duty of 3 cents for each bottle or jug.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to ask the Senators having this bill in charge why it is necessary to increase the duty on still wine in casks from 50 cents a gallon to 60 cents a gallon, an increase of 20 per cent., and increasing the revenues about $340,000. That seems to be the effect of the addition of 10 cents per gallon. I ask for information. If there is any necessity for it, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. ALLISON. The object of the committee was to aid our California friends in making pure wine.

Mr. VANCE. Well, that is an answer, most undoubtedly, but how the addition of 10 cents per gallon will enable them to make their wines pure I can not see. All they have to do to make wine pure, I suppose, is to observe the proper processes and use the proper materials.

There is an increase of $340,000 in the revenue. I suppose that is for the benefit of the wine-growers.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that in addition to that it will enable us to take off some taxes which are now imposed in other directions.

Mr. VANCE. That is a good reason, but unfortunately I see no evidence of that reason being carried out yet. The duty, as you will observe, on wine in quart bottles is 29 per cent., whereas it is 85 per cent. on still wine in casks. The general rule of commerce, I believe, is to make a discount where an article is taken by the wholesale, but here the discount is taken on the retail. The less a man buys the cheaper he gets it. Twenty-nine per cent. on a bottle containing not more than a quart, and 37 per cent. per dozen on bottles containing a pint or less. There seems to be an incongruity, an inconsistency in the whole schedule of the duties upon wines, and I rose to ask for the reason of it.

I move to strike out, in line 1124, the word "sixty" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

Fifty cents per gallon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 302, line 1124, before the word "cents," it is proposed to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

302. Still wines, including ginger wine or ginger cordial and vermuth, in casks, 50 cents per gallon.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

303. Brandy and other spirits manufactured or distilled from grain or other materials, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, $2 per proof gallon.

304. Each and every gauge or wine gallon of measurement shall be counted as at least 1 proof gallon; and the standard for determining the proof of brandy and other spirits or liquors of any kind imported shall be the same as that which is defined in the laws relating to internal revenue; but any brandy or other spirituous liquors, imported in casks of less capacity than 14 gallons or in bottles of less capacity than one quart, shall be forfeited to the United States: Provided, That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to authorize the ascertainment of the proof of wines, cordials, or other liquors by distillation or otherwise in case where it is impracticable to ascertain such proof by the means prescribed by existing law or regulations.

305. On all compounds or preparations of which distilled spirits are a component part of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, there shall be levied a duty not less than that imposed upon distilled spirits.

306. Cordials, liquors, arrack, absinthe, kirchwasser, ratafia, and other similar spirituous beverages or bitters containing spirits, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, $2 per proof gallon.

307. No lower rate or amount of duty shall be levied, collected, and paid on brandy, spirits, and other spirituous beverages than that fixed by law for the description of first proof; but it shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of first proof, and all imitations of brandy or spirits or wines imported by any names whatever shall be subject to the highest rate of duty provided for the genuine articles respectively intended to be represented, and in no case less than $1 per gallon.

308. Bay-rum or bay-water, whether distilled or compounded, of first proof, and in proportion for any greater strength than first proof, $1 per gallon.

309. Ale, porter, and beer, in bottles or jugs, 35 cents per gallon; otherwise than in bottles or jugs, 20 cents per gallon.

310. Malt extract.—Fluid, in casks, 20 cents per gallon; in bottles or jugs, 40 cents per gallon; solid or condensed, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

311. Cherry juice and prune juice, or prune wine, and other fruit juice, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, containing not more than 24 per cent. of alcohol, 60 cents per gallon; if containing more than 24 per cent. of alcohol, $2 per gallon.

312. Ginger-ale, ginger-beer, lemonade, soda-water, and other aerated waters in plain green or colored molded or pressed glass bottles, containing each not more than three-fourths of a pint, 25 cents per dozen; containing more than three-fourths of a pint each and not more than 1½ pints, 50 cents per dozen; but no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles; if imported otherwise than in plain green or colored molded or pressed glass bottles, or in such bottles containing more than 1½ pints each, 50 cents per gallon; and in addition thereto, duty shall be collected on the bottles, or other coverings, at the rates which would be chargeable thereon if imported empty.

SCHEDULE I.—COTTON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri will pardon me a moment. In paragraph 302, line 1128, I move to strike out "sixty" and insert "eighty." I will say to Senators that that is to make the duty on still wine in bottles in exact proportion to that on still wine in casks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 302, line 1128, before the word "cents," it is proposed to strike out "sixty" and insert "eighty;" so as to read:

302. Still wines, including ginger wine or ginger cordial and vermuth, in casks, 60 cents per gallon; in bottles or jugs, per case of one dozen bottles or jugs, containing each not more than one quart and more than one pint, or twenty-four bottles or jugs containing each not more than one pint, $1.80 per case.

Mr. VANCE. I have never found any difficulty in obtaining the consent of the Senators on that side to the leveling-up process. They are perfectly willing to the equalization of duties if that equalization goes heavenwards, but when it comes to leveling down they are generally not found willing to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to level up also in line 1130 of the same paragraph, by striking out "five" and inserting "seven and a half."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 302, line 1130, before the word "cents," it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "seven and one-half;" so as to read:

And any excess beyond these quantities found in such bottles or jugs shall be subject to a duty of 7½ cents per pint or fractional part thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I understood yesterday that the schedule on cotton and the manufactures of cotton would not be taken up to-day. I understood the Senator from Iowa to state that after we had finished the two last schedules, which we have done, then we should stop on this bill for to-day. I will say that I propose to make a motion in regard to the first item in the cotton schedule, but not expecting that it would be taken up to-day I left the statement at my residence. I am not prepared to-day to go on with the bill. I have been misled entirely.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not mean to say yesterday that we should stop at any particular point in the bill to-day. I only meant to say that we should pass over the sugar and wood schedules, but I have no objection, if the Senator prefers, to pass over for the time being the cotton schedule, if it be understood that we can go back to that to-morrow morning. I am willing to go on, with the consent of the Senate, leaving all these textile schedules for the time being and go over to "Schedule M, books, papers, etc."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What number?

Mr. ALLISON. Page 152, Schedule M.

Mr. VEST. I hope that will not be done. I am not prepared, for myself, to go on with the matter. I was called out to-day on a conference committee, and have been unable to be in the Senate during all the time the bill has been under consideration, but I thought honestly, as I stated, that after finishing the last two schedules we would stop work upon the bill for to-day. I am not ready to go on now.

Mr. VANCE. On yesterday evening before the adjournment I appealed to the Senator from Iowa, in consideration of the situation on this side of the Chamber in relation to these schedules, to designate before adjournment each day what would be considered the next day, if he could, in order that we might be prepared for the particular things to be considered. Here is what occurred:

Mr. VANCE. I was going to suggest that I should be glad if the Senator from Iowa would say definitely on this evening or on any evening what is to be considered the next day, so that those of us who may have occasion to prepare can obtain the information necessary.

Mr. VANCE. Page 371.

Mr. ALLISON. That was my object in making the statement to-night. The schedules to be considered next will be Schedule F, tobacco, and Schedule G, provisions. We can go on regularly with the schedules to-morrow morning.

I understood that to mean that we should not be asked to go on with any of these schedules, except the two we have considered to-day. I admit that the language of the Senator from Iowa, as it appears in the RECORD, does not positively imply that, but that was my understanding. I am in the position of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I am not prepared to do justice to these schedules this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, I suggest that we go on with the free-list, and it might be well to consider that now if Senators are not ready to proceed with the other schedules.

Mr. VEST. We might as well go on with one schedule as another if we are to go on without preparation. I have not any choice if we are to be forced into it. We have agreed upon the day on which the vote is to be taken, and it is a matter of the personal convenience of Senators as to how we shall proceed. Nobody can get any advantage.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the method of proceeding on the part of the subcommittee is not fair in another respect. Whenever a schedule is reached on which the committee are not prepared to take action, they propose to have it go over until the rest of the bill is disposed of, and then they propose to take that up. In a number of instances where that has been the case, members of the Senate who expected to go on regularly have been prepared and ready to proceed with the schedule, but when reached it has been passed over at the request of the committee.

Now, when the committee have had charge of the matter for months, when they have known it would be under consideration before the House bill came up, and when they have had the House bill in their hands for a long while, it seems to me to be reasonable that some sort of consideration ought to be had for the wishes of Senators on this side, who would like to know at least a few hours beforehand what is going to be considered by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to be unfair, and this is the first intimation we have had that the committee has been unfair in any matter connected with the consideration of this bill. I do not see why we can not go on with the free-list. I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] at least must be prepared for that. We could see whether or not there are things in this free-list which should be struck from it and put on the dutiable-list, or it may be that the Senator from North Carolina would be glad to add something to the free-list that is not there now, and that would make progress. Of course the only object I have is to go on with this bill, so that during the last two or three days or week of the session we shall not be pressed into the consideration of the items of this bill unduly. Of course I desire to accommodate the convenience of Senators as much as possible.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator will perhaps remember that we agreed this morning upon a definite time to determine the consideration of this bill, so that I do not see anything to be gained now by applying whip and spur when we are not due until a certain time at a certain point.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, Mr. President, as I understood the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] to say that he desired at some time this afternoon to consider pension bills, I am willing to give way to accommodate Senators.

Now, I give notice that to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to consider the cotton schedule, the flax, hemp, and jute schedule, the wool and woolen schedule, and the silk schedule. If we get through with those to-morrow I shall be glad.

Mr. VANCE. I should think so. [Laughter.] If we get through with those to-morrow we shall do a tolerably fair day's work, I think. [Laughter.] That is a very definite and very generous response to the request made on this side that the work should be designated on the evening before that was expected to be done the next day. We are also indebted to the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa for passing over schedules at our request this evening, inasmuch as a Senator on his side desires to do something else.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3155) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Alexander, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLISS, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. DE LANO managers at the conference on the part of the House.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar which are not objected to.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator to give way for one moment and let me call up Senate bill 3677 to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry.

Mr. DAVIS. Will it lead to discussion?

Mr. STEWART. There will be no discussion. If there is, I will give way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield the floor?

Mr. DAVIS. For that purpose alone, if I can retain my rights.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we are to go on with the pension cases, let us go on with them.

Mr. STEWART. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont to let the title of the bill be read, and then, I think, he will let it go through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] yielded to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] yield to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]?

Mr. DAVIS. I insist on my motion to take up pension cases.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the first private pension bill on the Calendar.

MRS. R. S. HORTON.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 2312, a bill (H. R. 8) to restore Mrs. R. S. Horton upon the pension-roll.

Mr. COCKRELL. A question was raised by me on that bill before, and I have a copy somewhere marked with an amendment that I intended to offer. It is a question as to whether this bill will carry arrears of pension. I believe it has not been the habit of the committee to allow arrears. I suggest that the words be added "and pay her a pension from the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. DAVIS. Let the bill go over. Is was reported by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. It is a bill for the restoration of the pensioner, and I should prefer that it go over and not be acted on now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

JESSE SPENCER.

SAMUEL J. MURPHY.

The bill (S. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Murphy, of Marengo, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Samuel J. Murphy, late a private in Company D, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, a pension at the rate of $16 per month, in lieu of that which he now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BAKER SAINE.

The bill (H. R. 2707) granting a pension to Baker Saine was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Baker Saine, of Fort Seneca, Seneca County, Ohio, late a private in Company K, Forty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISA ROGERS.

The bill (H. R. 8549) granting a pension to Louisa Rogers was announced as the next pension bill in order.

Mr. DAVIS. Let that bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

WILLIAM A. MATHES.

The bill (H. R. 8521) for the relief of William A. Mathes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of William A. Mathes, late of Company B, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, to $45 per month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the bill provide when the reallowance shall begin?

Mr. COCKRELL. It begins from the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no doubt about that?

Mr. DAVIS. There is no question about it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. SPRINGSTEIN.

The bill (H. R. 10199) for the relief of William E. Springstein was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William E. Springstein, of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment of Michigan Volunteers, at the rate of $45 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. PRINCE.

The bill (H. R. 3608) to grant an increase of pension to William E. Prince was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William E. Prince, late a private of Company I, Twenty-third Regiment of Missouri Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $45 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. SCOTT.

The bill (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Charles E. Scott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles E. Scott, late a private in Company G, Twenty-third Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEMIMA STERLING.

The bill (H. R. 4648) granting a pension to Jemima Sterling was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jemima Sterling, mother of James Goldsmith, deceased, late of Company I, One hundred and third Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARK TOMLINSON.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to go back to Order of Business 2465, the bill (S. 1455) for the relief of Mark Tomlinson, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a pension bill really, although reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. What bill is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appears by the Calendar to be a bill reported by Mr. WALTHALL, for Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment. That can not be included under the order.

Mr. DAVIS. Can it not be included by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered.

Mr. HAWLEY. The object of the bill is that the beneficiary may get a pension. It is to correct an error—that is to say, an injustice, as we thought—in the record of his service.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of this man on the pension-roll notwithstanding the sentence of a court-martial. It is nothing but a pension bill, and it ought to be considered now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant a pension, in accordance with the general pension laws, to Mark Tomlinson, late lieutenant and acting adjutant of the Tenth Connecticut Volunteers, notwithstanding the sentence of a court-martial, as shown by General Orders, No. 78, series of 1863, Department of the South, dated September 18, if said Tomlinson shall appear to be otherwise entitled to said pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELI J. YAMGHEIN.

The bill (H. R. 2236) granting a pension to Eli J. Yamghein was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eli J. Yamghein, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment of Kansas Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA BIDDLE.

The bill (S. 3628) granting an increase of pension to Emma Biddle was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of Emma Biddle, widow of Charles J. Biddle, late captain of United States Infantry, transferred to a captaincy in the United States Regiment of Voltigeurs, Mexican war, and colonel of First Rifles (Bucktails) of Pennsylvania in the rebellion, and acting brigadier-general, be, and the same is hereby, increased from $20 to $45 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IDA M. HOWELL.

The bill (H. R. 2667) for the relief of Ida M. Howell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ida M. Howell, the dependent sister of the late Lieut. Col. Judd M. Mott, Sixteenth Michigan Regiment, Company I.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read in that case.

Mr. TURPIE. This is a very deserving bill. The deceased officer had no father, mother, or children, nor any relative who ever drew a pension or applied for a pension. His sister is put in the place. The sister was dependent upon him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is satisfactory to me.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH NEW.

The bill (S. 3694) granting a pension to Elizabeth New was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth New, widow of Jethro New, late captain of Company D, Twenty-ninth Indiana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN J. GORHAM.

The bill (S. 3072) granting a pension to John J. Gorham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John J. Gorham, father of George T. Gorham, who served in Company B of the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Massachusetts Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT KELLY.

The bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelly was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Robert Kelly, late a private in Company B, Third Regiment Maryland Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK D. WORCESTER.

The bill (S. 3451) granting a pension to Frank D. Worcester was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Frank D. Worcester, late a member of Company B, First Maine Battery of Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE J. CLARK.

The bill (H. R. 9654) granting an increase of pension to Jesse J. Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Jesse J. Clark, late a private of Company I, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3677) to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is quite an important measure. It ought to wait until morning. I am sure my friend from Nevada will not misunderstand me. I shall not object to-morrow morning.

Mr. TELLER. He will not get a chance to call it up to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, he will. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me that I may make a report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

WORK OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] relating to the work of the Committee on the Census, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census, in conducting its investigations, is hereby authorized to employ a stenographer, and shall have power to examine experts, send for persons and papers, and to have reports of hearings and papers printed for the use of the committee, the expenses of the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "same" it is proposed to insert the words "except the expenses of printing;" so as to read:

The expenses of the same, except the expenses of printing, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

ABANDONED MILITARY RESERVATIONS.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3677) to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SAWYER. Let us pass two or three little bills, and then we can adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to interfere with the wishes of Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his motion?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill moved by the Senator from Nevada will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3677) to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 3, after the word "all," to insert the words "the agricultural lands embraced within the," and in line 4, after the word "which," to strike out the words "are useless for military purposes and;" so as to make the bill read:

That all the agricultural lands embraced within the military reservations in the State of Nevada which have been placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior for disposition be disposed of under the homestead laws, and not otherwise.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOTIER HOWE.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11042) for the relief of Motier Howe.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to grant, relinquish, and confirm to Motier Howe, of Oregon, his heirs and assigns, the interest of the United States in and to the west half of the northwest quarter and northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 22, in township 12 south, of range 23 east, of Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. P. SWINEFORD.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6012) for the relief of A. P. Swineford.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a bill regularly reported from the Committee on Claims. There are a large number of bills of the same kind reported before it, which are upon the Calendar. I do not see why we should not go to the Calendar and dispose of those cases. It is not a very pleasant job for Senators to be objecting, and yet unless each Senator makes a contest to get the floor and to be recognized the bills he has reported will be ignored.

I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that we take up the bills on the Calendar regularly. We have not time to do it to-night, but let us take some time and go through the Calendar regularly, and give every one a chance.

Mr. SAWYER. I shall not press it if the Senator objects.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is the last case on the Calendar.

Mr. SAWYER. I know. It was reported by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. COCKRELL. It was reported on the 19th of the present month.

Mr. SAWYER. However, it was some time in the other House. It is a House bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it is in so much better condition than Senate bills that have to go to the other House. Therefore there is no danger in delay. I think we had better adjourn for this evening.

Mr. SAWYER. I should like to have the bill passed. Still, if the Senator thinks differently, I will let it go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the character of the bill?

Mr. SAWYER. It is to pay Mr. Swineford about $600 for money he has advanced. He is the present governor of Alaska, and is in need of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. He will not be governor long.

Mr. SAWYER. No; but I think we ought to pay what is due him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let him have it, then.

Mr. SAWYER. That is what I thought. He used to live in the town I did. He was always a stanch Democrat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6012) for the relief of A. P. Swineford.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to A. P.

Swineford, governor of Alaska, $611.33, amount of salary from July 1 to September 13, 1885.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM R. WHEATON AND CHARLES H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. At the request of the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California.

Mr. COCKRELL. Pending that, I move that the Senate adjourn. We have passed three bills now coming from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion to adjourn for a moment.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Missouri will recognize the fact that this is a bill which failed for want of the President's signature, after having been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It passed both Houses.

Mr. COCKRELL. I had forgotten the bill. I now remember all about it. I enter a motion to adjourn as soon as this bill is passed. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to William R. Wheaton, ex-register, and to Charles H. Chamberlain, ex-receiver of the land office at San Francisco, Cal., jointly, $3,800, being a portion of the amount deposited in the Treasury of the United States by them as fees for testimony which was taken by clerks whose compensation was paid from the private funds of the ex-register and the ex-receiver.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 21, 1888, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 20, 1888.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock m. by Mr. CRISP, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1888.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP to preside temporarily as Speaker pro tempore at the opening of the session of the House to-day.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

VETO MESSAGE—C. B. WILSON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 5030, entitled "An act for the relief of C. B. Wilson."

This bill directs the Postmaster-General to credit to the beneficiary therein named, who is the postmaster at Buena Vista, in the State of Colorado, the sum of $225 for post-office funds forwarded by him to the deposit office at Denver, but which were lost in transmission.

A general law was passed on the 9th day of May, 1888, authorizing the Postmaster-General to make allowances and credits to postmasters in precisely such cases.

On the 8th day of September, 1888, under the sanction of that law, the credit directed by this bill was made. It is plain, therefore, that the bill herewith returned ought not to become a law unless it is proposed to duplicate the credit therein mentioned.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 19, 1888.

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10323) to incorporate the American Historical Association.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill. They are purely formal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments will be read, after which objection will be asked for.

The Senate amendments were read.

There being no objection, the amendments were considered and concurred in.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE TENNESSEE AND CUMBERLAND RIVERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the amendment to this bill is purely formal, inserting the words "commencing or" before the word "building," in the twenty-second line.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment.

There was no objection.

ELIZA J. ALEXANDER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 3135) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Alexander, with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. HUTTON. I ask unanimous consent that the House insist upon its amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on this bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the amendment read.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

In line 42, strike out "50" and insert "40."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would suggest that this bill lie on the table for the present, to be called up hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being a disagreement between the two Houses on an amendment to the bill, it has now reached that stage where it is privileged and in order to move to agree to the conference asked.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am aware of that, but I only wanted to suggest that as I remember when this bill passed the House its passage was resisted, and stress was laid upon the fact that the pension was only increased some five or ten dollars, $5 I believe, and thereupon it was permitted to go through without a quorum. Now, if it is to go through as originally submitted to the House merely by the form of a conference committee, it certainly would not be in accordance with the intention of the House when it was permitted to pass without a quorum.

Mr. DOCKERY. But I understand that the pending motion is in the line of the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SPRINGER. The motion is that the House further insist upon its amendment disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand that, but I wanted to make this statement in advance of the appointment of a conference committee, so as to show the circumstances under which the bill passed.

There being no objection, the motion of Mr. HUTTON was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1931) to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal., with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in exactly the same condition as the preceding one. The Senate requests a conference on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House further insist upon its amendment to the bill, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE RED RIVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 3666) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across the Red River," approved May 1, 1888; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DINGLEY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KELLEY, until January 8, 1889, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILKINSON, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GROUT, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BLOUNT, for ten days from Friday next.

To Mr. LAGAN, until the 16th of January, 1889, on account of important business.

To Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CLARK, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. TARSNEY, until January 7, 1889, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. DAVENPORT to withdraw from the files of the House of the Forty-ninth Congress, without leaving copies, papers in the case of DeWitt C. Amey.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House on the bill (S. 1931) to increase the appropriation for the purpose of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal., the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. DIBBLE, the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. NEWTON, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. POST.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Regular order.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. PEEL. I ask consideration of the report of the committee of conference I submitted the other day, but will not demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. O'DONNELL] to present a privileged report.

BRANCH FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I ask consideration of the report which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to continue the lease of the house No. 225 Pennsylvania avenue, northwest, for a branch of the folding-room for one year from January 1, 1889, the expense of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The report (by Mr. O'DONNELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. RICHARDSON (Miscellaneous Document No. 29) authorizing the Doorkeeper of the House "to continue the lease of the premises No. 225 Pennsylvania avenue for a branch of the folding-room for one year from January 1, 1889, the expense of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House," have had the same under consideration.

Your committee find that the house, 225 Pennsylvania avenue (known as the old Adams Express building), is now occupied as a branch folding-room, and the lease of the same expires December 31, 1888. We find it necessary to lease this or some other room for another year. There are now stored in this building 206,000 books and 100,000 envelopes; there are 60,000 agricultural reports for 1887 yet to be delivered, which it is proposed shall be stored in the leased premises, besides CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and other valuable publications which will from time to time be received from the Public Printer. There is no other room suitable for the storage and safe-keeping of documents. We find there is no room in the Government buildings available for such purposes. The building on the Library reservation and also all the storage rooms in the vaults of the Capitol which are dry enough for the purpose are now filled with public documents.

In order to provide a suitable place for the storage of the great number of volumes of public documents it is necessary to continue this lease, as the building is well suited for the purpose.

The committee propose that the resolution be amended by striking out the words "the expense of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House" and inserting "the rental of the said premises for two months, amounting to $200, to March 1, 1889, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and that the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to make provision for the payment of the remaining ten months of said lease, amounting to $1,000, in the general deficiency bill."

Your committee recommend the adoption of the resolution as amended.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to know whether this is a provision for the use of that building till the 4th of March only?

Mr. O'DONNELL. It provides for the payment out of the contingent fund until the 1st of March, and instructs the Committee on Appropriations to provide for the remainder of the year.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. O'DONNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Regular order.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. MCCREARY. I have a privileged report to present.

Mr. SOWDEN. I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], who submits a privileged report.

DIGEST OF CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound for the use of the House the usual number of copies of the digest of contested-election cases of the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, together with an index of the same, to be prepared by the clerk to the Committee on Elections, for which, and for the necessary preparations and superintendence connected therewith, there shall be paid said clerk by the Clerk of the House from the contingent fund the sum of —— dollars; not more than $500 of which amount shall be paid before said work is completed, but the entire sum when the manuscript or copy for said work has been delivered to the Public Printer.

The report (by Mr. SOWDEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, in relation to preparing and printing a digest of the election cases of the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, have considered the same, and report it back with the following amendment:

In line 7, immediately before "dollars," insert "fifteen hundred;" so as to make it read: "There shall be paid said clerk by the Clerk of the House from the contingent fund the sum of $1,500;" and as so amended your committee recommend that the resolution do pass.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. SOWDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of joint resolution (H. Res. 236) to pay the officers, clerks, and employés of Congress their salaries for December on December 20.

It also announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. VANCE as conferees on its part.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3645) granting to the Astoria and South Coast Railway Company the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in the county of Clatsop and State of Oregon, in which concurrence was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment of the two Houses from Friday, December 21, to January 7, with an amendment in which concurrence was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 236) to pay to the officers, clerks, and employés of Congress their salary for December, 1888.

A bill (H. R. 2579) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Andrew J. Smith, late colonel of the Seventh United States Cavalry and a major-general of volunteers.

ELIZA J. ALEXANDER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. BLISS, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. DE LANO as conferees on the part of the House upon the bill (S. 3135) to increase the pension of Eliza J. Alexander.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS, MINNESOTA.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 7935, which has heretofore been read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on House bill 7935, a bill for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. PEEL. I move the adoption of the report; but before I call the previous question I desire to yield some time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], who wishes to make some remarks upon this subject. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. PAYSON. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, I ought to be grateful for five minutes' recognition upon a bill involving $15,000,000 worth of property. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to inquire whether, if the House shall refuse to adopt the report of the committee of conference, any further result will be brought about than simply to send the bill to another conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A new conference would then be ordered by the House.

Mr. PEEL. I did not hear the gentleman distinctly. Do I understand him to move for another conference?

Mr. PAYSON. Well, I think that is what it will come to.

Mr. PEEL. That is not in order.

Mr. PAYSON. I am not making that motion now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] merely made a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] is entitled to the floor, and the Chair understands that he yields five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care for five minutes. I would like to be heard with reference to the merits of this bill; but I would rather be recognized in my own right.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of very great importance to have this bill disposed of, and I do not think the gentleman ought to ask more than five minutes. The only question before the House is whether it will adopt the report of the committee of conference or reject it. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois desire?

Mr. PAYSON. Probably fifteen minutes; perhaps not more than ten.

Mr. PEEL. I will yield the gentleman five minutes, and that is all I can yield.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not care to take that, Mr. Speaker. I desire to say, however, that this is one of the most important bills that have been presented for consideration since the last half of the last session. It involves millions of acres of land and millions of dollars in money, and it seems to me that the gentleman from Arkansas ought not to attempt to insist that it shall be disposed of in five minutes. I have some observations to make with reference to this bill which I think will be of interest. The gentleman from Arkansas knows as well as anybody else that I never ask for recognition simply for the purpose of talking. If he insists upon the demand for the previous question I hope that motion will be voted down, but I will not attempt to debate a proposition so important as this is in five minutes' time, and I submit to the gentleman that he ought not to insist upon my attempting to do so.

Mr. NELSON. I trust that, for the sake of harmony, the gentleman from Arkansas will yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinos.

Mr. PEEL. I do not see any necessity for that. The gentleman from Illinois, as I understood on yesterday, objected only to the mode provided in the bill for disposing of the pine lands, and I should think he could state his objections to that in five minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist that the provisions of this bill are understood by the committee itself, much less by the House?

Mr. PEEL. It has been printed in the RECORD for several days in order that it might be understood by everybody.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my friend from Arkansas that he had better yield my friend from Illinois the time he desires, fifteen minutes.

Mr. PEEL (to Mr. PAYSON). Will ten minutes do?

Mr. PAYSON. No.

Mr. PEEL. Go ahead, then. I yield the gentleman fifteen minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the House with reference to this bill, it proposes to dispose of 4,731,000 acres of land in Minnesota. The bill as it passed the House provided that the Indians, seven tribes, aggregating some seven thousand souls, should be located upon a tract of land in Minnesota containing thirty-six townships of what is conceded to be excellent agricultural land; that the balance of this body of land (which aggregates, as I have said, 4,700,000 acres) should be classified into two classes, agricultural and pine lands. Any land upon which any pine is growing, no matter to how great or how small an extent, was to be designated as pine land, and the House bill provided that the timber upon it should be appraised. It also provided that the agricultural lands should be taken only under the provisions of the homestead law, with this addition, that $1.25 per acre should be paid by those who took possession of them in that way.

The pine land, it was provided, should be sold, and sold at public auction. The House bill provided that not more than one-tenth of the pine lands should be disposed of in any one year. The bill went to the Senate and was there amended, and features of the House bill which I think commendable have been stricken out, while new and I think unusual and improper ones have been inserted. For instance, the provision in the House bill restricting the disposition of these pine lands to one-tenth of the area each year has been entirely stricken out. Again, the House bill contained a provision for the negotiation of agreements with the Indians as to the amount which the Government should pay or procure to be paid for the cession of this land, and it was provided that those agreements should be approved by Congress.

Mr. NELSON. That is a mistake. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but that was not in the House bill as passed.

Mr. PAYSON. I will read the provision of the House bill.

Mr. NELSON. A provision that the agreements should be ratified by Congress?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir. The language is:

Provided, That all agreements therefor shall be ratified by Congress.

This provision was in the bill when it went to conference, and at all events is now stricken out by the report of the committee of conference. There was a provision in the bill that the agreements of cession and relinquishment which may be made by the commissioners and reported to the Secretary of the Interior shall be ratified by Congress. This provision for the ratification by Congress is stricken out, leaving the matter solely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

On that point, Mr. Speaker, let me say that 3,200,000 acres of this land is land the title to which is in the Government of the United States to-day. The Indian right to it is the bare right of ordinary occupancy. It stands upon the records as unceded Indian land. The only right that the Indians have upon this land is the right to hunt and fish upon it. Of course the buffalo and other game have disappeared; there is now no game there. But the provision for the approval by Congress of the agreement which may be made between these commissioners and the Indians for this vast area of land has been stricken out by the conference committee. It seems to me it ought to be retained. Congress should approve or reject the commission's action.

Then, there is another provision that all the pine lands shall be appraised and sold at public sale, with this further provision inserted by the Senate:

The residue of said lands remaining unsold after such public offering shall hereafter be subject to private sale for cash at the appraised value of the same, upon application at the local land office.

That amendment, Mr. Speaker, introduces into this bill the old provision as to offered public lands, out of which so much scandal has arisen in the disposition of the public lands of this country, and particularly the timbered land in the Northwest. Everybody who has ever paid any attention to these matters knows that wherever great bodies of these lands are thus offered at public sale at a fixed minimum price not one acre in a thousand is ever sold at public sale if thereafter the lands are to be subject to private entry.

Now, this bill as it comes to us from the Senate with this provision will, if the conference report be adopted, put it in the power of any combination of capitalists who may desire to acquire all this timber land in the Northwest to simply refrain from bidding at the public offering, and thereupon the land becomes offered public land, subject to private entry, in unlimited quantities, at the minimum price. Gentlemen living in public-land States know what this means. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this provision in the bill will not commend itself to the judgment of a single Representative living in a public-land State, or of any one who has ever seen the effect of permitting provisions of the public-land laws allowing private entry to operate in this way. This feature of the bill, incorporated by the Senate, ought not to be agreed to. The provisions in the House bill are preferable.

Recurring to the point from which I was diverted a moment ago, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the action of any commissioners upon a subject involving so great an acreage of land as this, and where the rights of the Indians are so shadowy and slight, ought not to be permitted to become final without the approval of Congress. We ought to retain in our hands the power either to approve or to reject the action of these commissioners when the subject-matter of their agreement amounts, as I have been shown by the figures, to 7,000,000 acres of public land, and may amount to ten, fifteen, or twenty million dollars of the public money. If I have made myself understood, this is all I care to say.

Mr. REED. What are the commissioners to agree to?

Mr. PAYSON. To all the terms of cession of the Indians' rights in this land. The bill provides—

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, within sixty days after the passage of this act, to designate and appoint three commissioners, one of whom shall be a citizen of Minnesota, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable after their appointment, to obtain and acquire for the United States of America, from all the different bands or tribes of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, their complete cession and relinquishment in writing of all their title and interest in and to all the Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota, except the White Earth and Red Lake reservations, etc.

Now, on the map of these reservations which I hold in my hand, the portions colored in pink are the reservations affected by this bill. This [illustrating] is the Great Red Lake reservation, covering something over 4,000,000 acres. This [illustrating] is the White Earth reservation, six townships square, upon which it is proposed to settle the Indians when we shall secure these titles. Then, scattered about the State and as far over as the shores of Lake Superior, hundreds of miles away, are still other reservations. The entire acreage of land which is shaded in pink on this map is land over which these commissioners are given jurisdiction and as to which they are to negotiate with the Indians; and whatever agreement they may conclude, if approved simply by the Secretary of the Interior, is, under the provisions of the bill as agreed on in conference, to be a finality.

That right and that control ought to be reserved in Congress beyond all question. That, it seems to me, is too plain a proposition and too clear to need any discussion; and those provisions of the bill which provide, as I have shown, for the practice of all the evils that grew out of the right of private entry upon timber lands, pine lands in the Northwest, at the minimum rate and in unlimited quantities, ought to be voted down. No harm can result from a failure to adopt this report. It simply sends the bill to another conference committee to make another report after considering all these details.

I reserve the remainder of my time if I shall not have exhausted the whole of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. NELSON rose.

Mr. PEEL. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota, my colleague on the committee, to state how much time he desires.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to have sufficient time to explain this report, twenty or thirty minutes.

Mr. PEEL. I will yield to my colleague ten minutes now, and if that is not found sufficient will yield further time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, these propositions of the gentleman from Illinois that he has been advancing here by way of objection to the bill, superficially and on their face seem to be well founded; but if I can have the opportunity and the attention of the House for a few moments, I shall endeavor to show that there is really no foundation for the objections he urges. I shall show that as a matter of fact, based upon the provisions of the bill itself; and shall also show that the House has treated this question in the same way in other cases.

I want to premise what I have to say by the statement that the whole question involved in this bill relates to these Indian reservations in Northern Minnesota [pointing to a map of Minnesota], in the Fifth Congressional district, which I have the honor to represent upon this floor, including over thirty counties, representing over 60,000 voters, who have sent me here, and among other things desire me to secure the opening of these reservations in a proper and legitimate manner, and the colonization of the Indians upon a reservation where they can become good and useful citizens.

Now, in the first place, the gentleman from Illinois says that this bill when it went into conference contained the provision to which he has referred, requiring its ratification by Congress, and the striking out of which, as he alleges, took all the life out of the bill. In that he is mistaken, as I shall endeavor to show.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, the Senate bill contained that provision, and it has been stricken out by the conference.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, but it was not in the House bill at all.

Mr. PAYSON. No; but it was stricken out of the Senate bill in that conference.

Mr. NELSON. So the gentleman concedes that it was not in the House bill after all.

Now, there is nothing discretionary in the bill for the commissioners to do. All the provisions of the agreement are fixed by the bill from beginning to end. The nature and manner in which the Indians are to be dealt with, the price to be paid to them for their lands, the manner in which the lands are to be sold and conveyed, the whole is clearly defined in the bill, and these commissioners are simply the instruments to carry out the legislative intent. If the plan proposed in this bill—and we have said so by our action—is just and proper, the three commissioners who are to negotiate have nothing to do but to carry out the provisions of the law in that regard. What further action, if we have given them proper power at the outset—as we say we have—is necessary on the part of Congress to ratify the action of the commission after they shall have performed their duty?

Mr. ADAMS. Does this bill fix the price of the lands?

Mr. NELSON. The bill defines how the lands are to be disposed of.

Mr. PAYSON. From the Indians to the Government?

Mr. NELSON. The Indians are to get the proceeds of the land, and the bill prescribes how these proceeds are to be obtained.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the bill fix the price of the lands?

Mr. NELSON. I am coming to that in a moment. It involves the question of the manner of disposing of the lands.

If the gentleman will bear with me perhaps I can answer the question better by a brief recapitulation of the provisions of the bill, and the answer will appear as I proceed. The three commissioners to be appointed by the President of the United States—one of whom shall be a citizen of Minnesota—are clothed with certain powers. They are to obtain the cession and relinquishment of the Indians, from the Indians themselves, of their title to these reservations—all or so much of the title as is not required for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians according to the general allotment bill—and while that is being done they are to take a census of the tribe, because in order to get the proper consent of the Indians it requires the assent of two-thirds of the male population, and a census is necessary to ascertain this fact. Then after the Indians agree to the cession and relinquishment, the commissioners are to see that the Indians are removed to the White Earth reservation, all except the Red Lake Indians, and after that lands are to be allotted to the Indians according to the general allotment law, known as the Dawes bill.

The gentleman from Illinois, unintentionally no doubt, misstated the quantity of land, and seemed to lay stress upon it by making the quantity of land enormously great.

Mr. PAYSON. I read from the report of the gentleman himself, which was furnished to me on yesterday afternoon.

Mr. NELSON. I will explain what the gentleman failed to explain. He apparently stated the truth——

Mr. PAYSON. I stated the facts as they appear on the face of the bill and from the report.

Mr. NELSON. Of course I do not mean that the gentleman would state intentionally what was not the truth, but I want to say that he overstated the quantity of land, the total acreage, as I will show. The total amount is 4,731,000 acres.

Mr. PAYSON. That is what I said.

Mr. NELSON. And there are seventy-five hundred Indians.

Mr. PAYSON. Seven thousand four hundred and ninety-six, I said.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; seventy-five hundred in round numbers, and they are to have their allotments out of the land, and after that there will not be 4,000,000 acres left, and that fact the gentleman failed to allow credit for in his statement, which is the error of which I complain.

Instead of having 4,700,000 acres to dispose of, there will be less than 4,000,000—not much more than 3,500,000 acres.

Now, coming to the disposal of the public lands, I will show to this House how foolish is the suggestion that frauds can be perpetrated under this law as under laws of the past, and comparing it with the frauds of the past. This bill classifies the land into two great classes. First, all the lands on which there is any pine timber are called pine lands, and all other lands are called agricultural lands. The agricultural land can only be taken under the homestead law, as it passed the House, at a dollar per acre, but the Senate amendment increased it to $1.25 per acre. This price is to be paid in five annual installments, and at all events before final entry.

You all know what the homestead law is. But under this bill there is no commutation allowed. The settler must live five years before final entry. What does the bill provide for the pine lands? And first I will tell you where the frauds are committed in pine lands. Cash entries have for years been interdicted, and the lumbermen have undertaken to get these pine lands under our pre-emption and homestead laws; and to do so they have sent their mill-hands and choppers to go and settle on them, some for a week, some for a month, and then to go to the local land office and prove up or commute, as the case may be, and then get a transfer of the title. That is the way in which frauds have been committed under existing laws, but that can not be done under this law. These frauds that have transpired in the past in the lumber regions in Minnesota under the homestead laws and pre-emption laws I am as much opposed to as the gentleman from Illinois; but these frauds can not be perpetrated here, because no pine lands can be taken under the homestead law or pre-emption law under this bill.

Now, how are these pine lands to be sold? We provided in the House bill that there should be three appraisers appointed to pass upon the value of these lands, and the limitation upon their power was that they were not to appraise any of it at less than $3 per acre, and then after the land was appraised only one-tenth was to be sold at public sale in any year. The Senate modified these provisions, and improved them in my judgment. The Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint appraisers—without limiting the number—who are to go and examine the lands and ascertain the amount of pine upon the lands upon the plan which is established by lumbermen—that of estimating the stumpage. Now, it is provided in the Senate amendment that after the examiners have examined the lands and estimated the amount of pine they must make their report of it to the Interior Department, and then the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is to make the final appraisal and fix the price of the land, but such appraisal can not be less than $3 per thousand feet, board measure. Just think of that. Have you ever heard of pine land anywhere sold on a fairer basis than this? You gentlemen representing the pine regions in Michigan and you gentlemen who represent the lumber districts of other States, have you ever heard of a bill as fair as that?

This is exactly the same plan on which lumbermen deal one with the other. Any one who knows anything of the lumber business knows that the stumpage in Minnesota is worth from $1 to $3 a thousand feet, according to locality. Ascertaining stumpage is the way of estimating the value of the pine. And here in this bill the minimum is put at $3 per 1,000 feet. Well, now, if there is any pine on an acre at all there is at least 1,000 feet, so that the value of any acre can not be less than $3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] to yield his colleague sufficient time to answer the inquiry I made.

Mr. PEEL. I will yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. NELSON. Now, the House bill, as I have stated, limited the amount of the minimum put upon such pine land at $3 per acre. The Senate makes the minimum $3 per thousand feet, board measure; and you can all see that in that respect the Senate bill is a superior bill. For instance, if an acre of land will cut 10,000 feet of lumber, then it can not be sold for less than $30 per acre.

After the pine lands have been estimated and appraised as stated, they are to be sold at public sale, after due notice, to the highest bidder, but not for less than the appraised value.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The pine lands or the pine timber?

Mr. NELSON. The pine lands. After they have been offered at public sale what remains can be taken at private entry, but not at less than the appraised value, and always bear in mind that that can not be less than $3 per thousand feet.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the Senate amendment provide for these estimators giving any bond or security for the faithful performance of their work?

Mr. NELSON. No, it does not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then there is nothing to prevent their making a false return and no punishment if they do.

Mr. NELSON. But there is authority in the Commissioner or Secretary of the Interior to revise and change the estimate or appraisal if he thinks it is incorrect.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He can revise the appraisal, but can he change the estimate?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, I think so. I do not think it would make much difference whether we put these officers under bond and oath or not. It remains, after all, a question of the selection of honest agents to do the work, and we on this side of the Chamber at least ought to have confidence enough in the next Administration to suppose that it will select proper and competent men.

Mr. PERKINS. Not only that, but the Commissioner can send them out a second time if he is not satisfied with the result of the estimate.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly he can.

Mr. REED. What does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] say as to the change from one-tenth to the whole?

Mr. NELSON. Now, I will be as honest with this House as though I was in a Methodist prayer-meeting. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. That is not a great guaranty.

Mr. NELSON. If I had my own way about it I would prefer that only one-tenth of these lands should be sold each year, for the reason that it is better to have this pine string along through a number of years for the good of the settlers in that country.

But the objection made by the Senators—and gentlemen can see the force of it—is that fires are continually breaking out and destroying the pine from year to year, and that if you do not sell it now in a legal and proper manner, before you get around to it in the other way fires will have destroyed it, so that the Government and Indians will get nothing at all. And as a matter of fact from year to year the lumbermen have, by crooked ways, been getting this pine.

I will tell you how they do it. They get the Indians to set fires and burn portions of the pineries, and then they induce them to make application to the Department here for leave to sell "dead and fallen timber," and in that way the lumbermen get it for a mere trifle, just about what it costs the Indians to cut and bank it. That has been going on for years, and the only opposition to this bill that comes from Minnesota is from certain lumbermen who have a monopoly of getting this pine under the guise of "dead and fallen" timber. Now, I have given you the reasons why it was thought desirable to sell it at once instead of stringing it out over a series of years. The House will see that there is force in both these views. If the pine could be preserved intact without destruction, I should greatly prefer to have it sold only one-tenth each year; but if it is continued to be destroyed as it has been in years past, then the House will see that as a matter of business and as a matter of justice, it is much better to dispose of it at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to have two or three minutes more.

Mr. PEEL. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] makes a question, and I see its force, as to the provision allowing the private entry of what remains of this land after the public sale, and he refers to what has happened in the past. Recollect that in the past all of these lands that have not been sold at public sale have been sold at $1.25 an acre by private entry, no matter how valuable they may have been; and recollect, in this connection, that the portion of these lands that are not sold at public sale can not be sold at less than their appraised value, and that can not be less than $3 per thousand feet for the standing pine. I think that perhaps it is not a bad plan to allow the residue of these lands that are not sold at auction to be sold at private sale, for the reason that it will give an opportunity for the settlers in the surrounding territory to come in and enter small pieces of these lands, 40, 80, or 160 acres, whereas if there was only the public sale they would not have the opportunity at all. If the lands are not sold at public sale we all know by experience that private entries will string along from year to year for a number of years, thus giving an opportunity to the people of small capital in the surrounding country to get small portions of these lands, whereas if you force all the lands to be sold at public auction you put the matter entirely in the hands of the large capitalists, who will bid for them en masse.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I have taken so much time. I would like to have had an opportunity to explain this bill more in detail, and now if any gentleman desires to ask a question for information I shall be glad to answer it if in my power to do so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] say that the opposition to this bill in its present shape comes from the lumber merchants?

Mr. NELSON. I said in Minnesota; not anywhere else. I said the opposition in Minnesota comes from the heavy lumbermen who control the pine lands of the surrounding country. They are opposed to this bill because under it they can not get these lands, as they have been in the habit of getting land, for $1.25 an acre.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill allows the settlers to go on the lands and the Indians to get the proceeds?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; all the proceeds of these lands to go to the Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] and of the House for a moment to a fact in regard to this measure which ought to control our action for the present. On the day before yesterday, the 18th of the present month, my friend from Arkansas made this report from the conference committee of the two Houses. Upon an objection made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] the matter then went over. By request of the gentleman from Arkansas the report of the conferees, with the bill, was ordered to be printed. It was taken for granted, I think, by all gentlemen desirous, like myself, to examine the question that the bill to be printed was the bill agreed upon by the conferees.

But it turns out that the bill as printed in the RECORD is the House bill, and the features to which objections are now urged do not appear in the House bill, except as to whether the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, or Congress should ratify the agreement of cession which may be made by these Indians. The provision objected to in this regard was in the House bill; the other provisions objected to are in the Senate amendments, and do not appear in the bill as printed. For instance, here is one of the provisions of the House bill as printed:

SEC. 5. That after the said pine lands have been surveyed, ascertained, listed, and appraised as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall, after having given two months' notice of sale through a newspaper of general circulation, published at St. Paul, Duluth, and Crookston in said State, through the United States land officers for the district where the said lands are situated, offer for sale and sell the same at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, in 40-acre or lesser subdivisions; but such sale shall not be for a less price than the appraised value, nor shall more than one-tenth of said pine lands be disposed of in any one year, nor otherwise than in this act provided.

This is a provision of the House bill, and from reading the RECORD of yesterday morning it would naturally be taken for granted that this was included in the measure agreed upon by the conferees of the two Houses. But such is not the fact. The truth is that the bill as agreed upon by the conferees provides that the remaining lands not sold at public sale shall thereafter be subject to be entered at private sale at the appraised price. The objection to this provision has been pointed out by my friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. It will enable combinations to be formed by which there will be no competition at the public sale, and no lands sold, and immediately afterward these lands will be subject to private entry at the appraised value.

Mr. PAYSON. In unlimited quantities.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; in unlimited quantities.

I wish to call the attention of my friend from Arkansas to another fact. In the general land bill, which was during the last session fully considered and passed by the House and is now pending in the Senate, it was provided that there should be a severe limitation imposed upon the purchase of timber lands to be sold; that they should not be sold in such a manner as to enable a single combination to purchase vast bodies of land; that as far as practicable or possible a monopoly of these timber lands, and, indeed, of all other lands, should be prevented.

Mr. REED. Those were lands to be sold at a definite price, were they not?

Mr. HOLMAN. Under this bill?

Mr. REED. Under the bill you are talking about.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, under an appraisement.

Mr. REED. But these lands are to be sold under an appraisal as to their contents, so to speak.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was provided in the general bill.

Mr. REED. But that case is very different from this.

Mr. HOLMAN. That bill provided——

Mr. REED. What answer does the gentleman make to the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that these pine lands are to be appraised and are not to be sold for anything less than the appraisal of their contents in pine lumber?

Mr. HOLMAN. The same provision is in the general bill. For the purpose of preventing railroad and other corporations from being engaged at the same time in business as carriers and also as owners of large bodies of land, there is a provision in the general bill directed to that end; there is a special effort made in the general bill to prevent the possibility of a monopoly of these timber lands. But that is not guarded against at all in this bill as now reported from the conferees.

Mr. NELSON. Your bill, however, contains no provision for estimating the value of the land by the thousand feet of lumber.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; but it provides for an appraisement, though the details are somewhat modified.

Mr. NELSON. We propose to get an exact estimate of the number of feet of lumber.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yet the general bill provides for the appraisement of the timber on the land.

But the fact I wish specially to call my friend's attention to, as well as that of the House, is that the gentlemen who examined the subject have been acting under the belief the bill here printed was the bill agreed upon by the conferees of the two Houses, when in fact, by inadvertence in printing, it is the bill of the House and not the bill which was finally agreed upon.

I suggest, therefore, that inasmuch as this mistake has been made, and the House has been misinformed as to the real condition of the matter, and as there is certainly great force in the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the House do not agree to the conference report, and that the subject be recommitted to the same conferees and let them further consider the several objections which have been pointed out. For, sir, this measure, which involves the remaining portion of the lands belonging to this tribe of Indians in Minnesota, over 4,000,000 acres, a very large portion of which consists of very valuable timber land, ought to be carefully considered before it is acted upon. These lands ought not to be left open to monopoly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. PEEL. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is there any limitation of the amount of land any single individual or corporation may enter under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. PEEL. Pine land?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, pine land. For, if there is no limitation of the amount which any one can enter, then any individual or corporation could enter the whole land.

Mr. PEEL. Yes, if they give the appraised value for it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. One other question. Is there any saving clause in reference to time in favor of the Union soldier?

Mr. PEEL. There is none.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I understand the gentleman to say there is no saving clause as to time of settlement on the part of Union soldiers such as is contained in other measures of a similar character?

Mr. PEEL. None that I am aware of.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I understood the House bill and the substitute were to be printed. I certainly, for one, have no disposition to mislead anybody, and I do not think I have done so in any respect whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend from Arkansas does not meet the objection which I have stated.

Several MEMBERS. Withdraw your bill.

Mr. PEEL. If I can have the attention of the House for a few moments I can show clearly from what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], as well as by my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], this matter can be as well disposed of now as at any other time. So far as reprinting the bill is concerned, I certainly have no objection, but the only questions in dispute here are few and so plain I do not see any good reason why we should recommit the report of the committee of conference.

The main objection made to the bill by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], as I understand him, is that under the provisions of the bill great capitalists throughout the country would have the opportunity to obtain large quantities of these valuable lands. Gentlemen should not forget the fact, which I understand to be true that for years past lumbermen have lived off these lands and speculated upon them, paying little or absolutely nothing to these Indians. These Indians have the right to use or dispose of the dead and down timber on these lands. I am informed as a fact that they set fire to the standing timber and thus burn through the pine forests, which furnishes a pretext to them to cut down vast tracts which they dispose of to the lumbermen, merely getting sufficient money to pay them for cutting and hauling. These Indians offer these lumbermen who live off these lands and speculate upon them merely the price of their work in cutting and hauling, and in no respect any price compared with the value of this pine timber.

Now is it not better, rather than let these lumbermen who live off these lands and speculate upon them and get this timber for a mere nominal price, is it not better, I ask, to let this land be appraised by men capable of inspecting it? According to the provisions of the bill the Secretary must appoint capable and competent men to go upon the land and report the character and value of the timber upon each 40-acre tract; that is, the value of the timber according to the lumberman's rule of value by board measure; but in no case are they to appraise any land upon which any timber is growing amounting to 1,000 feet at less than $3 an acre. The Secretary is also required to advertise for two months in the paper of largest circulation. They are to be disposed of at public sale to the highest bidder, but in no case at a less price than their appraised value.

Mr. SYMES. You said $3 an acre; you meant $3 a thousand feet, for an ordinary acre of pine land may bring $1,000.

Mr. PEEL. Yes, it might run up to $500. I meant to say that in no case is the land to be sold for less than the appraised value, and in no case, it is provided, shall they appraise any land upon which any timber is growing amounting to a thousand feet at less than $3 an acre.

But it is objected to this bill that there may be combinations made in case of a public sale of these lands. Can not they do it at a public sale as well as at a private sale? They can combine so as to prevent any sale at all. But if these lands are not disposed of these lumbermen will, in the future as in the past, live off of and speculate upon the timber upon these lands without paying an adequate price for it. Why should we permit them to steal it either from the Government or from these Indians as they have done? I do not use the word "steal" in a technical legal sense, but, as I have already stated, they take these lands from the Indians, pay them merely the price of their labor in cutting and hauling, and no more. There can be no question in my mind if we dispose of these lands at their full appraised value for the timber which is upon them and put the proceeds into the Treasury there will be some chance for these Indians getting the money fairly divided among them for these lands which belong to them.

But if it continues to stand as it is now, and these complaints from these Indian reservations all over the country where there is timber, these daily complaints of white people stealing timber and destroying it day by day, are to continue, why, then, of course, this report will be rejected. Now, if this state of facts does exist, as we believe there is no question that it does exist under this bill, the Indians can not be hurt, because the lands must be fairly appraised and exposed to public auction in 40-acre tracts and sold to the highest bidder, and combinations would be hard to make under those conditions. Besides that, there is the other saving clause with regard to lands that are not sold to the highest bidder.

I think the House understands the condition now of the question, and I see no reason why we should not take a vote at once, because the report can not be recommitted to the committee. There is but one course for the House to take as a parliamentary proceeding, and that is either to adopt the report or reject it in its entirety. There is no such thing as recommitting a conference report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, if my friend pleases, if this is not concurred in——

Mr. PEEL. Oh, of course, if this report is not concurred in the House can order a new conference, but it must either accept or reject the report as it is. It can not be recommitted.

I ask the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 72, noes 16.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe no quorum has voted upon this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. PEEL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 131, noes 33.

So the conference report was adopted.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LANDS FOR WATER RESERVATION.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (S. 426) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCCREARY, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it be necessary, I reserve all points of order upon the bill.

DEFICIENCY FOR PUBLIC PRINTING, ETC.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SAYERS. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, to submit a bill from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask unanimous consent to consider the bill which I now introduce in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11878) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the following objects, namely:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

To supply a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, in the appropriation for the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the executive offices, and the Departments, including the salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $63,000; to be expended for the foregoing purposes ratably and in the proportion provided in the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the current fiscal year.

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

For expenses of observing the total eclipse of the sun which will occur on the 1st day of January, 1889, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the aggregate amount covered by the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Sixty-eight thousand dollars.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to concur in the Senate amendment to the concurrent resolution fixing the date of adjournment and the convening of Congress after the holidays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 20, 1888.

Resolved, That the foregoing concurrent resolution pass with the following amendment:

In line 5 strike out "Monday" and insert "Wednesday," and in line 6 strike out "7" and insert "2."

The resolution as amended is as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Friday, December 21, 1888, they stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 2, 1889.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move the previous question on concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question on concurring in the amendments; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 14.

So the previous question was ordered.

The question then recurred on concurrence in the Senate amendments to the resolution, when the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

A division was called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 24.

So the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MCMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, requesting the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 7776) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and in the county of Burt, State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-route, with an amendment in which concurrence was requested.

RETURN OF BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the request of the Senate to return the bill S. 139 will be concurred in.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 22d day of January, 1889, or the night of the same day, is hereby set apart for the consideration of measures reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining, and in such order as may be reported by said committee, but not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills; and if in any case whatever said day or night shall not be used, this order to be continued from day to day until a day shall be so used.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There was no objection; and it was so referred.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask that the morning hour for submitting reports from committees be dispensed with, and pending that I ask that gentlemen having reports to make be allowed to file them with the Clerk.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I move to dispense with the first morning hour.

The question was put, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CHEADLE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 4.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I withdraw it in order to save time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

PARIS EXHIBITION.

Mr. MORROW, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably the joint resolution (S. R. 115) authorizing the Government to use articles in their possession for exhibition at the Paris exposition in 1889; which was referred to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

CATALENA LYMAN.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2626) granting a pension to Catalena Lyman; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK, LAKE ERIE AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 779) for the relief of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TEMPORARY OCCUPATION OF STREETS IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. COMPTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11785) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation of the crossings of certain streets in the city of Washington and District of Columbia by the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to admit of the increased travel incident to the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1889; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CENTENNIAL OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Rules, reported back the joint resolution (S. R. 19) relating to the celebration of the centennial of the inauguration of the Constitution of the United States for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, that order will be made.

There was none, and it was so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES AGAINST A MEMBER.

Mr. RICE (when the special committee on the investigation of charges against a member was called). I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of that matter, having already reported upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands they made their report last summer and the matter is disposed of.

FRANK BACKOF.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7326) for the relief of Frank Backof; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This completes the call of the committees for reports. The regular order is the call of committees for the consideration of bills, and the call rests with the Committee on Claims, which has a bill pending before the House.

REPAYMENT OF ADVANCES TO MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA.

Mr. SHAW. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1521, and pending that I move that all general debate be limited to forty minutes. I would suggest to the opponents of the measure that I have no desire to limit debate upon this bill except for the purpose of reaching a vote, and I am perfectly willing, if an agreement shall be reached, that the whole forty minutes shall be taken by the opponents of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Speaker. I think the motion would scarcely be in order until the bill has been read for amendment by sections.

Mr. DOCKERY. This motion is simply to limit general debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I concede that is right.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The bill has not yet been considered by paragraphs at all, and——

Mr. SHAW. We only propose to limit general debate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to say that I hope the gentleman from Maryland will not insist upon that motion. I will say for myself to the friends of this bill that I have no desire to be factious in my opposition. I know that there are other gentlemen who desire to speak against this bill.

Mr. SHAW. I have no desire to limit debate upon this bill except for the purpose of reaching a vote. I yielded half of my time to the opponents of the measure yesterday and submitted to interruptions from every source, and endeavored to meet fairly all questions that were presented to me.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I repeat that it is not my purpose to make any factious opposition to this bill.

Mr. SHAW. Will the gentleman agree that the debate shall cease in forty minutes, the opponents of the bill consuming the whole time?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no right to make any such agreement. I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand that my colleague's proposition is to give the opponents of this bill the whole of the forty minutes.

Mr. SHAW. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is very fair, and I appeal to my friend from New Jersey to consent to that arrangement. I understand the proposition is that, out of the whole hour, forty minutes shall be occupied in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Exactly; when fifty-five minutes have been already occupied in its favor.

Mr. SHAW. No; I think the record will show that the opponents of the bill consumed as much of my hour yesterday as I did myself.

Mr. McCOMAS. And you propose to give them all the remaining time up to the time of taking the vote?

Mr. SHAW. Yes. All I desire is that there shall be time enough left to have a vote.

Several MEMBERS. That is fair.

Mr. WEAVER. What is meant by the proposition that there shall be a vote?

Mr. SHAW. That at the end of forty minutes a vote shall be had on the bill.

Mr. KERR. I could not consent to limit the time to less than forty-five minutes.

Mr. McCOMAS (to Mr. SHAW). Say forty-five, then.

Mr. KERR. I had already yielded thirty minutes of my time, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] wants five minutes.

Mr. SHAW. I will agree to forty-five minutes, with the understanding that at the end of that time a vote shall be taken.

Mr. BURROWS. No. That is to be the end of the general debate, but there will be the five-minute debate after that.

Mr. SHAW. There will be only fifteen minutes of the hour left, and when the hour expires every gentleman knows that will be the end of the bill for this session of Congress.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, involving about $500,000. The principal and the interest sought to be recovered aggregate about that sum, and I submit that forty minutes' debate upon a matter of this importance is not sufficient. This is a matter of very grave concern. It not only involves the States of Virginia and Maryland, but if this bill shall pass, upon its heels will come claims from Pennsylvania and New York resting upon the same basis in justice and equity as this. I have no objection, personally, to the general debate being limited to forty minutes.

Mr. SHAW. I should be perfectly satisfied that three or four hours should be consumed in the discussion of this bill. It is not my fault that the time is so limited. It is the fault of the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Maryland that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and that all debate upon this bill be limited to forty minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I, for one, am not willing to consent that a vote shall be taken upon this bill at the end of forty minutes of general debate.

Mr. KERR. I am willing to consent that the general debate shall be limited to fifty minutes.

Mr. SHAW. If it can be agreed upon that a vote shall be then taken I am perfectly satisfied with that. All I want is a vote, and it seems to me that the most earnest opponent of this measure must admit that it has sufficient merit to entitle it to be submitted to a vote of this House.

Mr. KERR. It may have merit, but it has not merit enough to entitle it to be put through in this hurried way.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to my colleague that he ask consent that at the end of an hour's debate to-day, some evening session, or some other time, be fixed to conclude the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I shall object to that unless it is coupled with consent for a consideration of the eight-hour bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Then, Mr. Speaker, I must insist on my motion that debate be limited to forty minutes; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I had the floor when the House adjourned on this bill, and under the circumstances the gentleman has no right to move the previous question.

Mr. SHAW. I have five minutes of my hour remaining.

Mr. KERR. As I understand, the gentleman can only occupy the floor by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course the presiding officer of the House can not know what took place in Committee of the Whole. It is in the power of the House, on motion, to limit debate in the committee.

Mr. KERR. I move to amend the motion to limit debate so as to make the time fifty minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland demands the previous question on the motion to limit debate. If that demand be voted down, the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] will be in order; but if the demand be sustained, it will not be in order. The motion of the gentleman from Maryland, on which the previous question is demanded, is that when the House again resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on House bill No. 1521 all general debate thereon be limited to forty minutes.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 48, noes 28.

Mr. KERR. I make the point that no quorum has voted; but I will say to the gentleman that if the time be extended to fifty minutes I will not insist on this point.

Mr. SHAW. If consent be given that the vote be then taken, I will agree to fifty minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Tellers were ordered: and Mr. SHAW and Mr. KERR were appointed.

Mr. KERR (before the count by tellers was concluded). As a majority of a quorum has voted in the affirmative, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, renewed the point, but subsequently withdrew it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum being withdrawn, the ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion of Mr. SHAW that when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill No. 1521 all general debate be limited to forty minutes, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. When does the hour begin?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour began at five minutes before 2 o'clock; twenty minutes of the hour have expired.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. SHAW that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 1521) to provide for paying certain advances made to the United States by the States of Maryland and Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House general debate has been limited to forty minutes. The Chair understands the gentleman from Maryland to have yielded the entire time for general debate to the opponents of the bill.

Mr. SHAW. No, sir; that was the proposition I made as a compromise, and it was not accepted.

Mr. KERR. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that some arrangement had been made in regard to a division of time.

Mr. KERR. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet recognized any one for debate.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have five minutes of my hour yet remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland had five minutes at the conclusion of the debate on yesterday.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But, Mr. Chairman, the statement was made distinctly that the forty minutes would be given to the opponents of the bill; and it was upon that understanding that I urged members to withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. KERR. It was on that understanding I withdrew the point.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If that understanding is repudiated, I wish to know it, and to know it at once.

Mr. SHAW. I made that proposition in the nature of a compromise; I made it in connection with the proposition to compromise upon the time. I defy the gentleman to deny it. Whatever his understanding may have been, that is what I said and what I meant.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Was not your original proposition (which was no compromise, but an independent proposition) to the effect that debate be limited to forty minutes, that time to be given to members in opposition of the bill?

Mr. SHAW. Upon the condition that a vote should then be taken upon the measure.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That was the proposition in connection with the suggestion of fifty minutes. I call for the reading of the Reporter's notes.

Mr. SHAW. I offered to agree to forty minutes on the condition I have stated; and upon the suggestion of the gentlemen from Iowa I was willing to accept forty-five minutes; but my proposition was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I simply want to know how we are dealing in this matter.

Mr. ROWELL. I would like to ask whether the gentleman from Iowa was not entitled to the floor by recognition yesterday; and having the floor, is he not entitled to occupy the whole hour, except so much as has been occupied by this vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet recognized the gentleman from Iowa. The Chair announced on yesterday that when the gentleman from Maryland had occupied his time he would recognize the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Maryland has five minutes of his time remaining. The House, however, has limited general debate to forty minutes; and in the absence of an agreement the gentleman from Maryland would have the right to control the time.

Mr. SHAW. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that if his understanding of the matter was that the forty minutes were to be controlled entirely by the opponents of the measure, I am perfectly willing to yield the time to them, although I did not say so, and did not mean it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman having stated that he did not say so, I repeat that such was my distinct understanding. But I do not ask him to yield the time; he may take it if he wishes; and of course we shall be governed by the circumstances.

Mr. SHAW. I am perfectly willing to divide the time equally between the friends and opponents of the measure.

Mr. KERR. I think the gentleman's proposition is the most unfair I have ever heard made in this House. He occupied fifty-five minutes yesterday of the time allotted to him under the rule, and this morning he came before the House and said that if we would consent to a limitation of debate to forty minutes we could have the entire time. On that statement numbers of men on this side passed through the tellers in favor of closing debate. After making that proposition he comes here now and asks us on a bill involving half a million dollars to be content with twenty minutes when it was agreed we should have forty minutes for debate. It beats anything I ever heard before in this House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Except the bill itself.

Mr. SHAW. I ask whether the proposition to give the entire forty minutes to the opponents of the bill was not coupled with the proposition that then the vote should be taken? Was not that the proposition, and was not that proposition rejected each time it was made?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Let the Reporter's notes be read and let the matter be settled in that way.

Mr. SHAW. Certainly, let the Reporter's notes be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is indulging this colloquy in the hope that some agreement may be reached so as to make a satisfactory and equitable division of the time allotted for general debate.

Mr. BAYNE. Does this discussion come out of the forty minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. BAYNE. And out of the morning hour?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well, then.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Let the Reporter's notes be read.

Mr. SHAW. I ask for the reading of the Reporter's notes, in vindication of what I said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Reporter's notes have been sent for and will be read as soon as received.

Mr. KERR. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this time is taken out of the five minutes of the gentleman from Maryland, who has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. It is taken out of the hour. The Chair has been indulging gentlemen in the hope that some satisfactory conclusion would be reached. The Reporter's notes will be read in order to determine what the agreement was, it having been made in the House. The Chair understands that to be the request of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SHAW. It is.

Mr. KERR. As the gentleman asks the Reporter's notes to be read, of course it will be taken out of the time of the gentleman himself.

The CHAIRMAN. It comes out of the forty minutes.

Mr. SHAW. Does the delay occasioned in getting the Reporter's notes come out of the hour?

The CHAIRMAN. It does. It is at the request of the gentleman himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANHAM. As a way out of the present difficulty I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I do not know whether it can be entertained in the Committee of the Whole or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. It is this, that the first day after the holiday recess shall be set apart for the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That request can not be entertained in committee.

Mr. LANHAM. If agreed to here it would be confirmed in the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not object if a day can also be set apart for the consideration of the bill for the payment of claims under the eight-hour law.

Mr. ROWELL. That can not be agreed to in any event.

Mr. SHAW. How much of the hour still remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. SHAW I will yield fifteen minutes of that time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR], if he desires it.

Mr. KERR. The agreement was that there should be forty minutes for debate. Then the gentleman proposed to give us half of that forty minutes, although there was an agreement we should have the whole forty minutes. Now he proposes to give us only fifteen minutes.

Mr. SHAW. There are only twenty-five minutes left, and I propose to give you fifteen minutes of that time, which is more than one-half.

Mr. KERR. Under the agreement we were to have forty minutes for debate.

Mr. SHAW. Does the gentleman accept of my offer to give him fifteen minutes?

Mr. KERR. I accept your first proposition.

Mr. SHAW. Then I yield ten minutes to my colleague [Mr. McCOMAS].

Mr. McCOMAS. I do not desire to occupy the floor at present.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman has only——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. KERR. I rise to answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland has yielded ten minutes to his colleague.

Mr. McCOMAS. I do not wish to take any of the time.

Mr. SHAW. Then I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN]. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. I say to the gentleman from Maryland, as my understanding, that he has no time to yield, and I decline to accept his offer.

Mr. SHAW. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that his insinuation is unworthy of him and undeserved by me, and that the Reporter's notes sustain me in the position I have taken.

Mr. KERR. They do not.

Mr. SHAW. The Reporter's notes bear me out.

Mr. KERR. I ask to have them read.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman from Maryland is only entitled to an hour's time, and that he has occupied within five minutes. He is now assuming to control some twenty-five minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clause 3, Rule XIV. The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day he shall be entitled to one hour to close notwithstanding that he may have used an hour in opening.

Mr. DAVIS. There has been no general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. There was general debate on yesterday.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland has the floor, but if there be no objection the gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYSON. I would ask simply whether the rule which has just been read applies to any other condition than under the general rule of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not quite clear that the rule which has been read is applicable to the present situation.

Mr. SHAW. In order to vindicate myself in the position that I have taken in this matter, I ask that the Reporter's notes bearing upon the question be read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. KERR. That is what I have been asking.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done. They will be read in the time of the gentleman from Maryland, and if there be no objection the Reporter will read the notes himself, as they have not yet been transcribed.

The Reporter read as follows:

Mr. SHAW. Will the gentleman agree that the debate shall cease in forty minutes?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the Reporter go back to the original motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Reporter will read that portion of the debate which is now before him, and if that is not satisfactory the Chair will cause the entire debate to be reported by the Clerk.

The Reporter read from his notes the portion of the preceding debate referred to.

Mr. SHAW. I think that is all that is necessary to be read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I call for the reading of the minutes at the time the original motion was made in the House.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, it is apparent from the spirit manifested by the opponents of this measure that no progress can be made in the time remaining at my disposal, and I move that the committee now rise, deeming it unjust to other business to longer detain the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I claim the privilege of saying a single word after that remark.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. A single word only, and that of a very kindly nature.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. SHAW. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon the demand.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I simply wanted to say that the House will see from what has been read how very readily the gentleman from Maryland could have honestly entertained his understanding, and how readily I could also have my understanding about the matter under discussion. I did not charge him with anything, nor have I intended to make any insinuation as to his good faith in the matter, but simply desired to maintain what I consider to be the true state of things and what was my understanding, and the understanding upon which I acted when I asked the gentleman to withdraw the point of no quorum. I acquit him of any improper motive and ask that none be imputed to me.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I assure the gentleman from New Jersey as he arose without a friend he takes his seat without an enemy. [Laughter.] I now move that the committee rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1521) to provide for paying certain advances made to the United States by the States of Maryland and Virginia, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the hour be considered as having expired.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the river and harbor bill, and pending that I move that general debate be limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope that that proposition will not be supported by the House. It seems to me that the time is entirely too limited.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I object to that.

Mr. SOWDEN. I will move that it be two hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana demands the previous question on his motion. If that be voted down, then the question will recur on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was put; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SOWDEN and others. Division.

The House divided.

During the count,

Mr. KERR said: I would like to know if it is not a violation of the rules to insist upon closing debate after hearing only one side—after two hours have been spent by the friends of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be a matter in the discretion of gentlemen voting, but there is nothing in the rules bearing on the subject.

The count was completed; and there were—ayes 68, noes 12.

Mr. SOWDEN and others. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] and myself have agreed on forty-five minutes, he to control thirty minutes and I fifteen.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I renew the point of no quorum. There are several of us who have something to say about this beside those who have already spoken.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. CHEADLE. I raise the point of no quorum, if it has been waived.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to make a compromise if I can make one. I offer as a compromise that we go on with the general debate on the bill this afternoon and do not go into the bill for amendments; that we close general debate this afternoon, and after the recess that we go on with the bill by sections.

Mr. SPINOLA. I would propose to make this a special order and take it up to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not want the Nicaragua bill crowded out. We want to get to the private bills.

After some time spent in counting,

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentlemen who are opposing the limitation of the time consent with myself to an hour and a half for debate, those who are opposed to the bill controlling one hour and those who are in favor of it half an hour, those in favor of the bill taking their half hour last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum is withdrawn; the demand for the previous question is withdrawn; the gentleman from Louisiana withdraws his motion, and asks unanimous consent that when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the river and harbor bill an hour and a half be allowed for general debate, one hour to the opponents of the bill and half an hour to the friends of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before that question is put I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 8466, "to enable the people of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," be reprinted, together with proposed amendments thereto, and also proposed amendments to Senate bill No. 185, to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 11765) making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and all general debate is limited by the House to one hour and a half.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will ask the Chair who is to be recognized by the Chair as controlling the time in opposition to this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] is entitled to the remaining portion of his own time, and the Chair will recognize other gentlemen for the remainder of the time.

Mr. SOWDEN. I understood, Mr. Chairman, that I was to be recognized to control the whole of the time in opposition to the bill. That was the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, in the few moments that I shall occupy in the further discussion of the measure now before the committee, I desire to call attention to an extraordinary provision contained in it on page 38. It creates a committee to be composed of six members-elect of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-first Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of this House, and who shall

Prior to the first Monday of December next, inquire into and investigate the expenditure of appropriations for river and harbor improvements, and the condition and progress of such works of improvement. Said committee shall have power to appoint subcommittees and visit the places where appropriations mentioned in this act are expended, and in doing so they are authorized to use Government conveyances and means of transportation. A sum sufficient to pay expenses of said committee and of its clerk is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which shall be immediately available and payable on the draft of the chairman of said committee. As soon as said investigation shall have been completed said committee shall make report to Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the purpose of this extraordinary committee which this bill proposes to create? Are we to have a committee who are to go off on a pleasure jaunt during the long interval between the adjournment of the present and the convening of the Fifty-first Congress? Are they to travel at the expense of the public and to be conveyed and transported in Government conveyances from one point of the country to another to inspect every improvement for which appropriations have been made under the river and harbor bills? What amount of money is it going to cost the tax-payers of the country for this committee to make the junketing trip contemplated in the provision cited? What is the object of it?

These improvements are in charge of the Secretary of War, who furnishes Congress from time to time with the necessary information, showing exactly the nature and character of these improvements, together with estimates of their probable cost. Whence the necessity, therefore, for the creation of this extraordinary committee to be composed of six distinguished members-elect to the Fifty-first Congress, and who are to make a needless and costly pleasure trip over this country at the public expense? Is this proper legislation? Is it wise economy to expend the public moneys for such a purpose? What benefit would the people derive from such a trip? Where are the precedents for such legislation?

There is but one instance of this character that I can presently recall. I refer to the committee appointed to visit the several Indian reservations of this country and examine into their mode of living, etc., which was headed by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], than whom there is no more honest, cautious, and watchful member on this floor. Who is to head this proposed committee? What guaranty have we that this committee contemplated by this bill will not expend many thousand dollars of the public moneys in their pleasant jaunt through the country in Government conveyances in search of the very information which the Secretary of War is bound to furnish Congress from time to time as required by law?

I call the attention of this House and of the country to this extraordinary proposition which is presented to this body by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Who ever heard of a proposition like it emanating from any committee of this House?

Again, section 5 of this bill appropriates $75,000 for contingencies which the committee, with all its wisdom and foresight, have not yet been able to discover. Is it prudent to provide for these unforeseen emergencies? Why, I ask again, these extravagant appropriations of the people's money?

Do they propose to drain the public Treasury of its surplus, so as to prevent any possibility of a reduction of taxation? I am surprised that the gentlemen on this side of the House who have been talking so loudly and so eloquently in favor of tax reduction and the reduction of the surplus should now advocate a measure that ultimately must result in emptying the Treasury and leaving it without any surplus at all. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the committee having this measure in charge have entirely overlooked the kindly admonition given to this House recently by the President of the United States. On page 3, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of date December 4, 1888, I find this passage, which I read from the President's message:

Appropriation bills for the support of the Government are defaced by items and provisions to meet private ends, and it is freely asserted by responsible and experienced parties that a bill appropriating money for public internal improvement would fail to meet with favor unless it contained items more for local and private advantage than for public benefit.

The chairman of this committee told us only yesterday that this bill, carrying appropriations amounting in the aggregate to nearly $12,000,000, contains an appropriation for each and every item that was provided for in the river and harbor bill which became a law less than five months ago without the signature of the President. When the present bill was prepared it must have been known to the committee having the matter in charge that the President withheld his signature from the last bill because it contained some provisions of an objectionable nature. It contained many of a national character that were wise and in the interest of the public good. This is what saved it from the Presidential veto.

I think the President made a mistake in not vetoing it. It is to be regretted that he did not exhibit his usual courage in this particular. Had he returned the measure unapproved and in his veto message to Congress pointed out its objectionable features, another bill meeting his objections might have been passed, clean of all appropriations of a local and private nature and not calculated to benefit the commerce of the country or promote the public good. This is the only way in which we can hope to secure judicious legislation on this important subject. No patriotic citizen will oppose any reasonable appropriations for the improvement of the great rivers and harbors of the country, but the wasteful appropriation of the public moneys for the improvement of the small rivers and creeks of the country should be carefully avoided.

Why were these objectionable features not omitted in the present measure? The committee have entirely overlooked this matter in the preparation of the bill now under consideration, and have presented nothing more than a copy of the old bill, the only difference being that the sums appropriated for the improvements named are less than in the last measure——

A MEMBER. This is "only a little one."

Mr. SOWDEN. Yes; this is only a little one. We heard that yesterday. The last measure contained "two bills in one." This, then, is the third bill of its kind for this Congress. Its redeeming feature seems to be that it only appropriates one-half of the amount of the other bills. What a sad commentary for this side of the House!

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the residue of my time and yield ten or fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, in the light of past river and harbor legislation thoughtful statesmen ought to travel slow. It is only a little over six years since President Arthur vetoed a river and harbor bill carrying over $19,000,000. It was a year's appropriation. The country stood aghast at the immense sum. The House passed the measure over the President's veto. Mark what followed. The destroying angel came. He struck down the first-born of the river and harbor statesmen throughout the country. There was weeping and wailing in both political parties. The lordly ex-Secretary of the Navy was stretched at the side of that blunt statesman from Cheesequakes Creek.

The good and faithful servants were returned. I see many of their faces here to-day. They beam in the delegations from Georgia and from Maine. A namesake of my ponderous friend from New Jersey was among them. I see some of them in the Illinois and some in the Indiana delegations. They smile in the Pennsylvania and New York contingents.

The river and harbor bill was passed in the August preceding the Congressional election of 1882. Within three months the people swept its warmest supporters into political oblivion. This bill comes up two years before a Congressional election, but let its supporters not hug the delusion that their action will be forgotten.

The people have long memories. That bill appropriated $19,000,000 in one year. Pass this bill and the Fiftieth Congress will have appropriated $34,000,000 for rivers and harbors in five months and fifteen days.

Sir, I take my stand on the veto message of President Arthur. He said:

My principal objection to the bill is that it contains appropriations for purposes not for the common defense or general welfare, and which do not promote commerce among the States. These provisions, on the contrary, are entirely for the benefit of the particular localities in which it is proposed to make the improvements. I regard such appropriation of the public money as beyond the powers given by the Constitution to Congress and the President.

I feel the more bound to withhold my signature from the bill because of the peculiar evils which manifestly result from this infraction of the Constitution. Appropriations of this nature, to be devoted purely to local objects, tend to an increase in number and in amount. As the citizens of one State find that money, to raise which they in common with the whole country are taxed, is to be expended for local improvements in another State, they demand similar benefits for themselves, and it is not unnatural that they should seek to indemnify themselves for such use of the public funds by securing appropriations for similar improvements in their own neighborhood. Thus as the bill becomes more objectionable it secures more support. This result is invariable and necessarily follows a neglect to observe the constitutional limitations imposed upon the law-making power.

Now, sir, I am willing to vote for the fullest appropriations for the benefit of our genuine arteries of commerce. I would gladly vote $1,500,000 for the harbor of Galveston if needed, but to secure this appropriation I am not willing to vote thousands for the improvement of Powow River and Mingo Creek. [Laughter.]

I am willing to vote ample sums for work in the harbors of Mobile and Savannah, but to secure them I am unwilling to vote thousands for Duck Creek and the Wappoo Cut. [Laughter.]

I feel that it would be my duty to vote full appropriations for the harbors of Beaufort and Charleston, but when they carry with them appropriations for Nomini and Contentnia Creeks and for the Lumber River I am compelled to decline. I would give ample sums for the benefit of the ports of Norfolk, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Portland, but not when loaded with money for the improvement of the Narraguagus, the Waccamaw, and the Salkehatchie Rivers. [Laughter.]

I would proudly vote liberal sums for San Francisco and San Diego, but not with a Forked Deer and a Cowlitz accompaniment. I would even go my length on the Big Sunflower, but I kick when you hitch to it the Rouge and the Feather Rivers. Such appropriations do not make the people "feel as happy as a big sunflower." [Laughter.]

And even in the appropriations for these classical streams it seems to me that the committee has made an invidious distinction.

I find ample funds for the beautiful waters of the Steilaquamish, but not a cent for the purling Sagadahoc. I find thousands for the sweetly-singing Nootsack, but not a nickel for the immortal Kiskiminetas. [Laughter.] Even chaste Okeechobee and wondrous Tohopikalaga are left out. The Skagit, the Snohomish, and the Snoqualmie take the places that ought to have gone to the lovely Allokehatchie, the yellow Yalabusha, and the glorious Passamaquoddy. What's the matter with the whispering Withlacoochee? Where in thunder is the appropriation for Devil's Lake, Skunk's Harbor, and Stinking Water River? [Laughter.] The committee has not begun to do its duty by these magnificent ponds and creeks. It will not do to slight them in favor of Jekyl Creek, the Chehalis, and Caney Fork River.

No, sir. Put the money where it belongs. Give Galveston her million. Raise the appropriation for New York Harbor from $100,000 to $3,000,000, and you will not have steam-ships aground every week near Sandy Hook and United States men-of-war fastened in the mud at the Wallabout when they ought to be thundering at the water gates of Port au Prince and making music at the Samoan Islands.

Wipe out this log-rolling scheme and use the money in an honest way for the honest improvement of honest harbors, and I am with you heart and soul. Proportion the work according to the magnitude of its importance to the people and I will cheerfully vote for it. As it is, the measure can not secure my support.

Mr. SOWDEN. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors made some remarks yesterday in favor of this bill as it is; and he was followed by a gentleman who opposed the measure because it is not half large enough. I concur, however, in some of the remarks made by the gentleman who followed the chairman of the committee. I believe it is proper to make appropriations for rivers and harbors, but they should be for rivers and harbors of national importance—rivers and harbors in which it may be said the people in general have an interest.

The people of my State, and of the Western States generally, have been for years anxious that some legislation of importance should be undertaken for the creation of a water way between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi River in order that there may be some competition by water transit against the railroads of the United States; and if the vast sums of money which we appropriate or are asked to appropriate were to be expended for a few measures of national importance such as I have indicated, we would have substantial water competition with the transportation routes created by our railroads. But we have no such appropriations in this bill, or at least a very small amount is apportioned for that purpose. Not one in ten of the items of this bill is for a measure of national importance.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] stated as a reason why a larger appropriation should pass that there is plenty of money in the national Treasury. I do not agree with that remark. Within two years, or a little longer, over $100,000,000 will have to be raised in excess of the amount now in the Treasury to pay a portion of the national debt which will then have matured. That money will be needed in about two years. The gentleman said that the Senate would not pass the House tariff bill. But the Senate will pass the Senate substitute, reducing the revenues to the limits of the present needs of the Government, and if the House will act wisely and approve that measure when it is returned from the Senate we shall have such a reduction of the national revenues as will make it necessary for the Government of the United States to economize the national resources in order to meet the obligations which will mature in the fall of 1891. There is no reason why money should be taken out of the national Treasury hurriedly in order to reduce the surplus. It will be reduced soon enough if the Senate substitute shall pass, as it ought to pass.

This is the largest appropriation by twelve to fifteen million dollars that has ever been appropriated by any Congress of the United States during a single term. I mean the amount of this bill with what was appropriated at the last session. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] said, many well-known public men were defeated a few years ago because they voted for an appropriation of $19,000,000 in one term; and this Congress proposes to appropriate $34,000,000 of the public money, more than half the entire expenditure of the National Government in 1860, and nearly one-half of the amount which would be needed for everything except extraordinary expenses of our Government for a year if a large portion of the machinery for collecting the revenues were dispensed with, as it should be.

There are in this bill three hundred and sixty-one items, but not one-tenth of these can any man claim to be measures of any national importance. While I do not believe that objections based upon constitutional grounds have much weight where members are anxious to vote appropriations, I think they ought to be considered. There is no power in the Constitution to appropriate the public money for the improvement of creeks or harbors of no national importance; and if this course is persisted in there will be before long a very strong protest from the American people that will be heeded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will take the floor and yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, whenever a river and harbor bill comes into this House for consideration it is always entertained by such speeches as we have just heard from the gentleman from New York. He comes from that portion of the country which may be regarded as almost finished. Now, it is perhaps true that larger appropriations have been made in the past for the harbor of New York, the Hudson River, and for other places in the State of New York, than have been made for other portions of the country. Of this I do not complain, but ask that the same liberality be extended to other sections.

It is a sufficient answer to the objections made by the gentleman from New York to the appropriations made for what he terms "purling brooks," that there is no river provided for in this bill which does not come within the description of an interstate stream as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States. The appropriations, Mr. Chairman, contained in the last river and harbor bill were submitted to the Secretary of War, and he was requested to designate such appropriations as he thought ought not to have been made, and the amount so designated by him does not exceed 1 per cent. of the amount appropriated by the bill. .

Yesterday the pending bill was subjected to three criticisms—first, by my colleague [Mr. CRAIN], that it does not give enough; second, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], that it gave too much; and thirdly, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], that the whole system of appropriations for rivers and harbors was wrong and a perfect failure.

Certainly these objections go to the root of the whole matter, and I propose briefly to allude to them in their order. I sympathized with my colleague [Mr. CRAIN] when he complained that the bill was too small. I listened to his argument with great pleasure. His objection to the bill was characterized by the chairman of the committee as being unique.

It is usual for members to offer amendments for the purpose of increasing appropriations for improvements in which they have a special interest, but my colleague, with his characteristic unselfishness and patriotism, has offered a substitute for the pending bill which embraces the entire country. He criticised the action of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and charged that in the preparation of this bill they had acted with too much haste. Let me say to him in reply that this is the second and the short session of the Fiftieth Congress, and the formation of this appropriation bill is easier and can be done with more rapidity at this session because of the knowledge obtained by the committee in their investigations of the subject-matter during the first or long session of this Congress.

There existed no good reason why the committee should not have reported this bill as soon as it was practicable for them to do so, and in my judgment there is no just cause of complaint against the committee for their prompt action. In the argument made by my colleague I understood him to say that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should have been governed by the estimates furnished by the engineers having the different improvements in charge, and to fortify this portion of his argument he read a letter from the Chief of Engineers, which in substance stated that the amounts asked to be appropriated were actually necessary and could be properly expended during the next fiscal year. I thought the logic of his argument was this: that we should comply with the estimates made by the engineers.

Mr. CRAIN. I think so yet.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Then you failed to abide by the logic of your own argument. You failed to make your substitute correspond with your argument. On yesterday, when I asked why you did not, you responded, I know in sincerity and not irony, that it was because you were afraid of the influence of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with this House. I tender my colleague the thanks of the committee for the compliment paid to it, but I wish to say further, on the part of the committee, that it does not arrogate to itself the power of controlling this House in regard to this measure, and that it has a wholesome fear of the House that is not without its influence in the preparation of a bill for its consideration and action. What did he offer?

The old bill of last year, which gave about 50 per cent. of the estimates, and this bill gives about 33⅓ per cent. of the present estimates; and he denominates this as a "driblet system." He stated, if I remember correctly, that under the "driblet system," as he was pleased to term it, it would take forty years for Galveston to have her harbor improvement completed.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRAIN. You said——

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. I have but little time—only ten minutes—and I hope my colleague will not take up too much of it.

Mr. CRAIN. I will try to get the floor and yield my time to my colleague. You say my substitute simply increases the appropriations of your bill 16 per cent.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. About 60 per cent. You intended to make this bill in amount equal to that of the last session, as I understand it.

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, in my substitute I increased it 100 per cent., and not 16.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. We have given in this bill about one-third of the estimates as a rule—not an inflexible rule, it is true—and in the last bill we gave something like 47 per cent. of the estimates.

Mr. CRAIN. Last year you appropriated some $22,000,000, and this year you appropriate only $12,000,000.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. No matter what the increase is, you desire that we should make the same appropriations in this bill that we did in the last, and if we did so, according to your argument, it would take forty years to complete the improvements at Galveston and Aransas Pass. The point I am endeavoring to make is that your action is inconsistent with the theories you have advanced. Why delay the people of Western Texas in obtaining an outlet to the sea at Aransas Pass? Why delay the intelligent and enterprising people of Galveston in obtaining deep water for forty years? Why do you not follow the conclusions of your argument by bringing in a substitute for the pending bill which complies with the suggestions of the engineers made in their reports?

On yesterday my colleague said that he was opposed to the system; that he thought it wrong, but that it had become the fixed policy of the Government and could only be corrected by public opinion asserting itself in opposition.

Mr. CRAIN. That is not what I said. I said if I had my way it would be different. I said that this policy had been so long pursued by the Government that it would be futile now to attempt to change it.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. I understand the position my colleague occupies.

Mr. CRAIN. But I do not want to be put in a false position.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Nor do I desire to put you in a false position. I only wanted to show what you would do.

Mr. CRAIN. Ah! I would have to adopt the policy because, as I have said, it was fastened upon the Government.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Why not act in accordance with your theories? You confess that you can not, that the House will not pass a bill giving the entire estimates of the engineers, nor do I believe that a bill containing as large appropriations as are provided for in your substitute can pass this House.

I confess I would like to see a large river and harbor bill brought in if there was any probability of its passage. I believe there is no appropriation made that does so much for the people as the river and harbor bill, and I further believe, while I would say nothing depreciatory of the large harbors of the country and the appropriations for them, that the greatest benefit which accrues to the people of this country is in the improvement and development of the smaller streams. I believe they increase commerce more, and put more money in the pockets of the producers by what they save in the cost of transportation than do any other appropriations made by Congress. But not being able to obtain such a bill as I would like to have, I am not willing to incur the risk of losing all by endeavoring to obtain more than I know will be given.

The objection made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] is that the bill gives too much, and he says no appropriations should now be made because there are funds in the hands of engineers unexpended. I am not particularly well posted in regard to Philadelphia, but I do know that with few exceptions all the money appropriated in the last river and harbor bill is under contract, and will not be on hand during the next fiscal year, and that the appropriations made in the pending bill are for the year ending July 1, 1890. The proposition made by my friend from Pennsylvania if accepted and carried out, will delay river and harbor improvement for two years, and in that time the works will greatly deteriorate and much loss will result to the Government.

But my friend from Illinois says the whole system is wrong in that Congress constitutes itself a board of improvement, whereas he would have one general board of improvement or a board of improvement for the different sections of the Union. In the limited time allowed me I can not at length go into all my objections to this proposed plan, but I will only now say that it would result in providing for the larger ports, and leave much of the country unprovided for, and because of this injustice I shall be opposed to the proposed plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. I should like to have a few minutes longer.

Mr. SOWDEN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. STOCKDALE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be permitted to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has been limited by order of the House.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Then if I can not get an extension of the time, I ask consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COX. I ask the same privilege before beginning the two minutes yielded to me.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Texas, as I understood him, stated that New York has received more by way of public improvements from the public Treasury than any other locality.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. In this bill.

Mr. COX. Two remarks which have fallen from my honorable friend from Texas deserve reply.

The first was, if I understood him, that New York did not require so large an appropriation for her commerce in respect to her rivers and harbors as formerly, and, secondly, that she was finished.

New York finished? She is neither finished as to the increase of her population nor her importance as a commercial metropolis. She is the great center of life and industry of this country. I need not go back further than 1840 to make the comparison and to refute the remark of the gentleman.

Her increase from 1840 to 1850 was 88 per cent.; from 1850 to 1860, 68 per cent.; from 1860 to 1870, 29 per cent.; from 1870 to 1880, 34 per cent. Each decade numbers her increment by the hundred thousand. Her increase from 1840 to 1850 was 317,000, and in her last decade—from 1870 to 1880—583,000.

New York finished? Why, sir, if you consider New York and the suburbs in her immediate vicinity, I have the statement of an engineer on whom the gentleman relies before me to show that in fifty years more, in an area not less than 300 square miles, her population will probably be 8,000,000, and every available foot of water front within 10 or 15 miles of her present limits will be taken up by wharves and teem with steamers and ships.

New York finished? Why, sir, the energy and enterprise, which are every day expanding, have already outgrown the limits of her city by more than half a million since I entered within her gates—a quarter of a century ago.

Considering the adjacent cities of Brooklyn, Jersey City, and Williamsburgh, which are but branches of the parent trunk, she has a population now greater than that of any of the States in the Union excepting four.

Three millions of inhabitants within these precincts, progressive and active, do not indicate that New York is finished.

Why, sir, this magnificent port, with its entrances on East River into Long Island Sound and thus to the sea, and through New York Harbor, via Sandy Hook, to the ocean, imports two-thirds of the merchandise of our country, receives two-thirds of the import duties for our Government, sends out one-half of the domestic products of our land, and gives hospitality to one-half of the foreign tonnage trade with the United States. Three-fourths of the passengers who come from and go to foreign countries, including three-fifths of all our immigrants, find their grand depot at New York Harbor.

Notwithstanding the discouragements to her shipping and her commerce by reason of obstructive laws, it is not yet entirely easy to effect an entrance to her port by the larger steamers, and, certainly, in many of her channels this difficulty is altogether obstructive.

If her channels were properly improved by deepening according to the plan of the engineers commended by my friend from Texas, there would be increased facilities for commerce by rendering the wharves in certain localities more accessible to vessels.

Why, sir, vessels are now obliged to pay a high bonus—seventy-five to one hundred dollars a day—for using other wharves, and these other wharves, in consequence of the great demand, are in constant occupation.

I am not now criticising harshly the bill presented by the honorable gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] from his committee. He has made a careful study of his subject from his own standpoint.

I have in the past criticised bills somewhat in the vein of my colleague from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], and perhaps this kind of criticism has made our committees more cautious, and because of this caution the censorship of the American press and people has grown to be more lenient toward this class of legislation.

The bill reported to-day is not obnoxious to the objection which has been urged—that it follows another bill of nearly double the amount at the last Congress, for we well know that that bill comprehended two years.

The present bill appropriates $11,906,850, or, in round numbers, $12,000,000. One-third of this is for harbors and the rest for rivers.

We are informed, too, that the present bill provides for no new projects. I welcome this as in the line of reform, for certainly at this stage of our country we ought to know which of our water ways should be the object of Federal care and Federal money.

"Editorial provincialism" falls short of its mark when it would criticise this bill under the light of other bills in our past legislation.

But, sir, one thing strikes me, and with emphasis, in connection with this and all former bills as they affect New York Harbor and its adjacent channels, and that is this: that while it is admitted that New York has so large a preponderance of our commerce, with its exports and imports, the appropriation for the care of its harbor, which is based upon foreign and interstate commerce, is grotesquely inadequate.

If two-thirds of the imports and one-half of the exports pertain to New York Harbor, and inasmuch as the committee have taken the Supreme Court decision as the criterion for their action for the improvement of navigation from the Federal Treasury, why should not New York City have an amount commensurate with the admitted magnitude of her commerce?

Twelve millions in this bill! If you would test New York's quota by her share of the commerce of our country, she would be entitled to two-thirds, or at least one-half, of these appropriations. And certainly it would be startling to gentlemen to know that New York should receive six millions a year for her harbor.

No one would insist on it. I do not insist on it, for it is true that we have had advantages from the Federal Treasury which, however, should be continuing in order ultimately to answer the purpose for which they were originally intended.

This bill gives her $100,000 for New York Harbor, $20,000 for Gowanus Bay, $150,000 for the Harlem improvement, and $175,000 for the East River and Hell Gate. Hardly half a million.

But I am not here, as I said, to criticise harshly this measure, but to accept it in view of what has been done in the past for New York, and with the hope of so amending it as to make it better for New York Harbor. It is my pleasure to commend the results of the improvement made at Hell Gate, which is yet to be completed. I am not so conversant with the work at Harlem, which has a large surplus yet to be used for that locality.

Before the improvement of New York Harbor was undertaken by the United States, the lowest depth in its mid-channel on the bar was 23.7 feet at mean low water.

This was too low, for it was only at high water that vessels of great draught could cross these shoals.

Gedney's Channel, which leads into the harbor, should have 30 feet at mean low water. It should have periodical dredging, and should otherwise conform to the requisitions of the engineers, so as to preserve it from being scoured by the increasing current. The result of our expenditures in this channel, which is the great highway from Europe of all vessels of great draught, is not at all disheartening. This committee and this House are entitled to the credit of producing a channel across the bar of over 25 feet deep at mean low water.

More, however, is to be done so as to deepen the shoals inside the bar. No doubt that will be properly done and guarded by future engineering, legislation, and contracts.

We are informed that a channel has been obtained at this point not less than 500 feet wide, in which the least depth between the steamer wharves and the ocean is about 26 feet on the bar. The big steamers, as now loaded, are not delayed at the average low tide in coming in, nor are any of the large steamers which usually go to sea at high water obstructed.

Magnificent fruits have resulted, therefore, from our legislation, and for this I have no satirical or critical observations to make. More than that, which should gratify gentlemen of the committee and of the House, the investigations that were made in December, 1887, and in May, 1888, demonstrate that the shoaling has ceased on the bar for six months and that no dredging was required. Other investigations demonstrate the fact, as the engineers report, that the dredged channel across the bar may maintain its due dimensions by the action of the currents alone.

Although the committee report but $100,000 for Gedney's Channel, without which there is no New York Harbor, I will not complain, for in this they have made their rule flexible so as to go beyond the 33 per cent. appropriated of the estimates. The engineers have said that "the amount which could profitably be expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, was $160,000;" so that the committee as to Gedney's Channel have done for New York Harbor at this point better than the general average, but not as much as there is needed, and not so much by $60,000 as the engineers estimate.

Nor will I find fault with the result of the appropriation last year to Buttermilk Channel.

This channel lies between Brooklyn and Governor's Island in New York Harbor. Its shoaling was at its upper end, where it joins the East River. Formerly it had but a depth of 9½ feet at mean low water. The crest of this shoal was about 800 feet outside of the Brooklyn wharves. Various projects for improving this channel have originated with the engineers and the estimated cost of the improvement was $210,000. Nearly all of that has been wisely expended.

No one should underrate the importance of this channel as well for deep-draught vessels as for others, for in this channel there enters over 63 per cent. of the commerce of New York, and therefore it was wisely thought that the depth should be increased to 26 feet at mean low water. Thus far the shoal has been removed to a depth of 22 feet at mean low water, and the engineers have given their verdict that the result is a benefit to navigation. Still they demand the 26 feet, and there is available for that purpose for the year ending June 30, 1889, over $100,000.

Now I come, sir, to Gowanus Bay, New York. This gives me more concern. It is connected with Buttermilk Channel. In fact, it is a part of it. Its improvement is necessary for wharfage as well as for navigation.

The plan which was first adopted provided for giving 18 feet of depth and a width of 200 feet, with a channel leading up to the mouth of the creek on both the north and south sides for the distance of a mile. Part of this work has been done. The 18 feet of depth was obtained. It has since been reduced, owing to the softness of the material, to 15 feet. But, sir, there is no doubt in the minds of the engineers, and there was no doubt in the minds of the Senate when they amended our bill in the last session, that the channel for Gowanus Bay must be widened to 400 feet, and the depth if possible increased. The original depth of 7 to 12 feet was wholly insufficient for our shipping, and the Senate evidently intended that a better plan should be adopted, for they inserted in their amendment, which became the law, the following:

Improving channel at Gowanus Bay, New York: Continuing improvement, by deepening to 21 feet mean low water, and widening the channel to 400 feet on the northerly side from the foot of Percival street, along the wharves to the 23-foot curve, opposite the entrance to the Erie Basin, $60,000.

I hope to offer an amendment to the present bill increasing the sum to Gowanus Bay from the paltry $20,000 to $66,666, which is 33 per cent. of the estimate, the report of which is yet to be laid before the committee and the House. I am informed that a recent report (since that of October 1, 1888) has been made by the engineer in charge of Gowanus Bay channel. It is now in the hands of the Chief of the War Department. It has not yet been printed or reported here. It recommends that the amount that could be profitably expended to carry out the above plan of 400 feet width is $200,000. One-third of that sum, therefore, is on the basis of the committee's work. We all desire to conform as near as can be to the report of the engineers and to the amendment made by the Senate, which is now the law, and I hope it will receive the sanction of the committee as well as of the House. Or, in other words, because of the great increase of our tonnage in the channel and the draught of our sea-going vessels, we should increase the depth of this channel to at least 21 feet at low water, giving it a width of 400 feet. Those vessels could then be handled with facility in the narrow space near the mouth of Gowanus Creek, and there are other incidental improvements resulting from the increased appropriation.

The committee at the last session gave us $60,000. Sixty thousand dollars more was required, according to the then existing project, for its completion. But the committee have only given us $20,000 of this amount. Surely, since the $60,000 which they gave, when nearly $200,000 was required, was so inadequate that it could not be used, why should not the committee, at a place and for a channel whose exigency is so great, allow the full amount proposed by the engineers?

In all these appropriations, Mr. Chairman, for the city of New York

we have to meet no question as to their necessity or constitutionality. The water ways which we desire to have improved are not those of New York alone, and for every dollar expended there are benefits to the cotton-grower of the South and the grain-grower of the West. It increases the price of their product inasmuch as it facilitates its exportation. It facilitates locomotion of all kinds, and it does so because it aids a great commercial highway, both interstate and foreign. "It is not merely potential commerce," to use the words of the committee in their report. The need is actually existent.

If the harbors on our Pacific coast, Gulf, and Lakes call for such large taxation upon the people, to which New York, through her representatives, makes no resistance; if the new elements which are producing so many remarkable motors for transportation and travel have any significance for the American Congress, and if the advancement of our country in its material resources, reaching far inland, pleads for the aid of our natural advantages by generous and just appropriations, then this splendid harbor which nature has placed at the great gateway of our metropolis falls within the purview of the Constitution and the decision of our supreme tribunal. Adequate support for continuing its improvement can not but have a warm place in the good-will and judgment of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. SOWDEN. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to page 177 of the Book of Estimates, and I desire to say in connection therewith that the Secretary of War, in this estimate, has made no recommendation whatever in regard to a river and harbor appropriation for this session of Congress. It has been customary heretofore for the Secretary of War, in this report and estimate, to indicate how much, in his judgment, could be profitably and judiciously expended in the improvement of rivers and harbors during the coming year, and to recommend that this sum be appropriated. I notice that the last Republican Secretary of War was not governed by the report of the Chief of Engineers in his recommendations to Congress, but on the contrary made an estimate for himself very much less than the amount recommended by the engineers, and in his report to the Forty-eighth Congress he recommended that the sum of $8,000,000 be appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and stated that in his judgment no greater sum could be judiciously expended within one year for this purpose; and in the face of the reports of engineers recommending a much larger sum he refused to ask for any greater appropriation than this, and yet a Democratic House nearly doubled the sum recommended by the Secretary of War in its appropriation for that session of Congress. This report, on page 177, the report of the present Secretary of War, shows that $22,250,116.90 was appropriated and left over from last year, and the Secretary of War is not asking for another dollar for this purpose. And in addition to calling the attention of the House to the report of the Secretary of War, I wish to say that it is utterly impossible to carry on successfully at the same time three hundred and fifty different projects, and yet this river and harbor bill makes at least three hundred and fifty distinct and different appropriations, appropriations for three hundred and fifty different purposes.

A MEMBER. Three hundred and sixty-one.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, three hundred and sixty-one appropriations, as my friend from Iowa suggests; three hundred and sixty-one distinct and separate appropriations made in one bill.

More than $22,000,000 were appropriated last year, or on the 31st of July last, only a few months since, and the Secretary of War has made no request for any appropriation of this kind for this year, and the passage of this bill by this House is, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, wholly unnecessary.

There was but one river and harbor bill passed by the Forty-seventh Congress, and but one river and harbor bill passed by the Forty-eighth Congress, and but one river and harbor bill passed by the Forty-ninth Congress, and I do not see why two river and harbor bills should be passed by the Fiftieth Congress when the bill passed at the first session of this Congress appropriated a larger sum than was ever before appropriated by any prior Congress for this purpose. The American people will bear a great deal, but such appropriations will not always be borne. The effect of the $18,000,000 appropriation by the Forty-seventh Congress ought not to be so soon forgotten.

Then I wish to enter my protest against the way in which this bill comes before Congress. The river and harbor bill of this House is an anomaly. It has no precedent in the legislation of any country on the face of the earth. It is absolutely without a single parallel in any country in the world. No other country secures the passage of a law by any method which corresponds to our method of passing a river and harbor bill, and we have no other such legislation in our own country.

If this method is right, why is not the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds permitted to report all public buildings in one bill? We generally have forty or fifty separate bills on the Calendar for the erection of forty or fifty different public buildings, and yet nobody has ever suggested the propriety of giving to that committee the same powers and the same rights that are given to the River and Harbor Committee, that of putting three hundred and sixty-one appropriations in one bill, and passing them all at one time by one vote. Why do we not give the same authority to the Committee on War Claims? Page after page of the Calendar is covered with bills reported favorably from the Committee on War Claims, and yet nobody proposes that an omnibus bill of this kind shall come from that committee with the extraordinary rights and privileges of the River and Harbor Committee of this House. Why do we not have this kind of authority delegated to the Pensions Committee? There are thousands of soldiers who have bills pending before this House, and they, too, are separate bills and are denied consideration. Why can we not put the claims of three hundred and sixty-one soldiers in one bill and pass upon the merits of all in one bill as well as we can pass upon the merits of three hundred and sixty-one rivers and harbors? Are the claims of the soldier and the soldier's widow less meritorious than the claims of the rivers and harbors of the country? Why not group them together as we do these rivers and harbors and get rid of these Friday night sessions? In this way they would get a hearing some time; as it is, most of them never will during this Congress.

A MEMBER. The time will come when they will.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; it will come. It will come in the next Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to repeat what I said in the Forty-eighth Congress, and in doing so I mean no disrespect to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I have no complaint whatever to make against this committee. It has probably discharged its duty as well and as faithfully as it could do under the circumstances. What I said then, and what I desire to say now, is that in my judgment there ought to be no such committee. There ought not to be any Committee on Rivers and Harbors nor any Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. Congress ought to appropriate annually a gross sum of ten, fifteen, or twenty million dollars, and we ought to have a board of engineers or a board of competent men whose duty it would be to examine and survey the rivers and harbors of the United States, and determine what are or what are not needed improvements. In this way an experienced and competent board, free from party influence and local bias, could undertake the most worthy improvements and psuh them to a speedy completion. Lines of commerce would then be opened up, and the demands of travel and trade would meet an early response. The annual report of this board would be open to Congress and to the country, and its conduct would be subjected to the closest scrutiny and the severest criticism.

How is it possible under the present method for the country to realize very much benefit from this enormous expenditure of money? Many of these so-called improvements have had appropriations for ten, fifteen, and twenty years, and the expenditures in many cases have been wholly wasted on account of the reckless character of the undertaking; and sometimes where an improvement was actually necessary at the time the first appropriations were made the necessity ceased before the harbor was completed, and the appropriations proved a total loss. In other instances the cost was greatly augmented by the long delay in the completion of the work and the loss in interest on the large sums invested so long before the harbor was ready for use. I think, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that this whole plan should be changed. River and harbor appropriations should stand on the individual merit of each. I should like to inquire how many members of this House know about the appropriations for these three hundred and sixty-one distinct purposes sufficiently well to pass on their respective merits? What do we know about these appropriations in Texas or in Maine, in South Carolina or in North Carolina, in Florida or in Minnesota, along the Lakes in the North or along the Gulf in the South?

We know nothing about them. The committee knows nothing about them. It says nothing about them in its report; and no gentleman who is a member of this House or who is not a member of this House has had any opportunity of going before that committee for the purpose of presenting any request for any appropriation whatever. The River and Harbor Committee was only in session a few hours. It was only a few days from the time when Congress convened until this bill and the report came to this House; and no one from any part of the country had any hearing granted him by this committee or any opportunity to give it any information. I have a letter here from a gentleman of my own State, but the letter did not reach me until the committee had closed its sitting and made its report. This House had scarcely begun to do business when the distinguished chairman reported his bill for the appropriation of about $12,000,000. It was reported favorably and its passage recommended. This bill will not pass if it "does pass on its merits." How many of these three hundred and sixty-one appropriations would be made if they were in three hundred and sixty-one separate bills? The committee in the nature of things can know but very little about these rivers and harbors. They have had no opportunity of knowing. They never saw them. I venture the chairman of the committee never saw one-tenth of these rivers and harbors in his life. He can not know about them, and most of us know nothing about them. This House knows substantially nothing about them. We are groping in the dark. We may know the locality of some of them, but we do not know their needs nor the sum necessary to make needed improvements.

Mr. DUNHAM. They are going to have a committee of six to examine these improvements next summer, and they will spend plenty of money.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. My friend suggests that they are to have what has been styled a junketing committee to travel around in palace-cars and stop at elegant hotels, to visit the watering-places on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts; but these men are to go and find out, after the bill is passed, whether it is a wise thing or not.

They are going to lock the door after the horse has been stolen. They had better look out for the horse now. I think the appointment of that committee will come too late, and will amount to nothing but a pleasure trip to the appointees. We had better have a committee of inquiry made by the Government, composed of competent engineers, who shall be held responsible for the expenditure of this money. They should be given a sum in gross, and should be held responsible for its judicious expenditure. I should vote for a measure of this kind very cheerfully; but I protest against the passage of a measure that distributes money to nearly every State in the Union, and to three hundred and sixty-one different localities, thus offering a reward to the recipient of one appropriation to induce him to help every other beneficiary. This is bad legislation, and should not be permitted in one case and denied in every other. This is why this bill overrides all other legislation. This is why it takes precedence of the pension bills, of the Blair educational bill, of the honest claims reported by the Committee on Claims, and of a hundred other important bills which were reported to the House during the last session, but are denied now a single hour for consideration.

While I am in favor of the improvement of rivers and harbors, I am not in favor of a system of public plunder which groups all classes of improvement in one bundle and compels the success of all or none. Nor am I in favor of carrying on three hundred and sixty-one enterprises at one time when only a few are ever to be completed by the generation that begins them. Other nations select a few public improvements of national importance and complete them, and then take up others. We should do the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANCHARD was recognized, and yielded ten minutes of his time to Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am a good deal amused at some of the remarks made by gentlemen in reference to the river and harbor bill, and somewhat surprised at others, and especially surprised at the remarks just made by my friend from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR]. He says that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not know anything about these rivers and harbors for which they propose appropriations. If he had been studying the reports of the engineers who have seen these rivers, who have examined them, and who have reported to Congress upon the importance of their improvement, as long as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have been studying them, I think he would know a great deal more on the subject than he does now. But it seems to be quite fashionable for certain gentlemen at every session of Congress, when the river and harbor bill comes up for consideration, to rise and mention certain singular names (some of which appear in the bill, but many of which are not in it at all) and make remarks upon them which go to the country and deceive the people in regard to improvements which are really, as I believe and as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors believe, of national importance.

My friend from Ohio says that not one-tenth of the improvements which are included in the river and harbor bill will be claimed to be of any national importance. Now I say that there are but very few of the items contained in the river and harbor bill but what are improvements of national importance, not only in the opinion of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but also of the engineers who have examined them and made reports as to their commercial value.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not make the remark he attributes to me.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It was made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR]. If I said it was the gentleman from Ohio, I did it inadvertently.

Mr. KERR. I made the remark, and I will ask the gentleman a question if he will permit me.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I have not time to yield in the ten minutes to which I am limited. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: I have seen it stated, and I believe it to be a fact, that the Chief of Engineers, on a careful examination of the last river and harbor bill, declared that of the total amount of money appropriated in it there was only about $30,000 to which exception could be properly taken. I do not vouch for the actual truth of that statement, but I do believe that of the twenty-two millions appropriated at the last session of Congress, $100,000 would cover every dollar appropriated for works to which exception could with any propriety be taken as to their commercial importance by any member of the House friendly to internal improvement.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If my colleague will allow me I will state that the Chief of Engineers told me that not exceeding one-fifth of 1 per cent. of the last river and harbor bill was objectionable.

Mr. SOWDEN. Then why did the President refuse to approve the measure? [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. He refused to approve another good bill, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I only wish I had a little more time, Mr. Chairman, but I hope these interruptions will not be taken out of my time. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] said yesterday that there was $500,000 appropriated for Philadelphia in the last river and harbor bill and that it had not been expended, and he went on to criticise that and other appropriations upon that ground. Why, Mr. Chairman, these river and harbor bills make appropriations for fiscal years; they appropriate money to be expended during the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of July and ending on the 30th day of the succeeding June, and with very few exceptions, every appropriation made in the river and harbor bill at the last session of Congress was far below the engineers' estimate of the amounts which could be profitably expended on the works named during the year for which the appropriations were made.

A great cause of complaint is and has been that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has not felt that it could recommend appropriations really adequate to meet the wants of the country in the improvement of rivers and harbors, and I repeat and emphasize what has been said by my colleague on the committee from Texas [Mr. STEWART], that there is no money expended by the Government of the United States which is expended so largely in the interest of the people as that which is appropriated for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. You may erect a great Library building here; you may erect costly and elegant public buildings in this city and in other places throughout the country in which to transact the public business; but the benefits from such expenditures are insignificant compared with those which result from the improvement of our rivers and harbors in the interest of the commerce of the country.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] speaks of the appropriations for the harbor at New York; he says that those made in the last river and harbor bill were quite adequate, and that great good is resulting from them. That is true, and so, Mr. Chairman, is great good resulting from the improvement on some of these "creeks" that are so much talked about, and on the smaller rivers and smaller harbors which pour the riches of their commerce into the great harbor of New York and justify and necessitate its improvement. A few years ago the Chief of Engineers, General Wright, told me that when he was first appointed to that position he was strongly prejudiced against improving the smaller rivers, but that careful study and observation had convinced him that such improvements were more fruitful in proportion to their cost than the improvements on larger streams, because the main channels of commerce are already suitable for purposes of navigation and will continue to be used even though they may be obstructed here and there.

But the opening up of these smaller channels is sending down into the larger ones annually an increased commerce which shows the growing wealth, population, and progress of our great country. What would New York Harbor be, or Philadelphia Harbor, or any other of our larger harbors, but for these smaller channels of transportation which are annually pouring into them the wealth of the distant parts of the country? They would be of but little use.

Now, take St. Mary's Canal. At the last session we appropriated a million dollars for the new lock at St. Mary's Canal; we appropriated $500,000 for the Hay Lake improvement. We reported a sum sufficient to complete the improvement of the Detroit River. We also reported an appropriation for the improvement of the St. Clair Flats. And those large appropriations explain in some degree the very large sum appropriated in the last river and harbor bill. Every one concedes the importance of these appropriations. But if some of these gentlemen here would only take time to study the geography of the country they would know more about these channels of commerce; they would know more about these "unknown" rivers that they talk about; and I think that such study would not only enlighten their understanding but broaden their patriotism. If they had served upon the River and Harbor Committee, had studied these reports of the engineers—and it is made their duty to report upon the commercial importance of these improvements—they would know more of the importance of river and harbor improvements.

Mr. KERR. Is there any report of the engineers for this year?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. My dear sir, there are reports from the engineers for this year justifying every dollar, I think, appropriated in the bill under consideration; and if my friend had inquired he would have ascertained the fact.

Mr. KERR. I know there is none that I can get.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. We have had these reports——

A MEMBER. The committee may have them, but other members can not get them.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Perhaps that is so; but the committee needs them more than you do, and it is not the fault of the committee that you do not have them. But my friend here would dispense with the committee. I am not opposed to a board of public improvements. I think that would be a wise measure; but I do not think that would dispense with the necessity for a River and Harbor Committee, nor with the propriety of Congress keeping control over the appropriations to be made for particular improvements.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITCH].

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Chairman, when I heard yesterday the glowing sentences of my friend from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] advocating larger appropriations for river and harbor purposes, I felt certain that the large improvements in my district had also had his generous care. Hence I was disappointed when I found that in preparing a substitute which would suit Galveston and other ports of Texas, the gentleman, instead of increasing the appropriation for Harlem River, which unites the Hudson with Long Island Sound, had reduced that appropriation from $150,000, as contemplated in the bill, to $70,000. I desire therefore to call his attention to the fact that no man who looks only at his own district can prudently prepare or propose a bill for the whole of the United States. He did not know what he was doing. He did not intend to strike down an improvement like that of the Harlem River, but his eye was fixed on Galveston, and in increasing the appropriation for that port he was willing to sacrifice the city of New York.

To-day my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has given us a specimen of the descriptive fun of which he is past-master in this country. The arguments which he used were accompanied with such beautiful description, so sparkling with humor, that I have no doubt they commanded more attention than they would have received from any other member on the floor. But what arguments did he use? He said that the passage of a $19,000,000 river and harbor bill had sent into oblivion a number of Congressmen. We passed at the last session a $22,000,000 bill; we went home, and some of us are not at the bottom of the waters of oblivion to-day. He read as his main argument an extract from the veto message of President Arthur; but President Arthur was defeated for renomination, and his defeat for renomination is as good an argument against the veto of the bill as the defeat of the Congressmen is an argument for voting against it.

His second argument, I confess, has much more weight with me. I am sorry to see these small creeks, these inaccessible places, where only the lumberman or the trout-fisherman ever shows himself, coupled with the magnificent national improvements of which I am strongly in favor. But I must choose and he must choose—every one of us who has important national works going on in his district, improvements employing hundreds of men, and bringing incalculable good to the vicinity—we must choose between taking this bill as it is, or not taking it at all, and I say for myself that I believe the expenditure of this money in improving the Harlem River alone will bring in more wealth to the commerce of this country than all the money that may be wasted in all the rest of this bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FITCH. With pleasure.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman is disposed to be fair, and I would like to inquire whether he knows of a single appropriation in the present river and harbor bill which is not recommended first by a local engineer and subsequently by the Chief of Engineers, and the report on which does not show that commerce will be benefited by the appropriation? If the gentleman knows of any such case I hope he will point it out.

Mr. FITCH. I do not know of such a one; but as I desire to be fair I will say I do believe there is a great deal of money appropriated in this bill which the National Government ought not to spend; but I believe that the benefit which will accrue from the proper expenditures here proposed will make up for those unwise expenditures ten times over.

Mr. SOWDEN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SOWDEN. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SOWDEN. I yield four minutes of the time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making no captious criticisms upon this bill. I have steadily voted against river and harbor bills, and for the reason that I have been unable to support them, because in my opinion the system is a vicious one.

I entirely agree in what has been so ably and so well said by the gentleman from Iowa as to the general plan of the improvements of rivers and harbors. There is no money expended by Congress, if its purpose in that expenditure is honestly carried out, that does more for the people of the United States than the money legitimately expended in the improvement of our rivers and harbors.

But, while I am willing to admit that, I am compelled to adopt the conclusion that the system under which we are expending it is all wrong. I am in favor of appropriating a lump sum, and expending it either under a board of internal improvement or giving it to the control of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, to be expended on such improvements as in their judgment should be improved; and that is the only way, I think, in which you can do away with the present vicious practice of making appropriations for such improvements in driblets. We appropriate five, ten, fifteen, or twenty-five thousand dollars, as the case may be, and expend that on a certain improvement. Nature undoes, in the lapse of time, within the adjournment of one Congress and the meeting of the next, what has been done, and Congress must make a further appropriation to repair the damage to the work already done. Frequently all that has been done by the Government has been destroyed or damaged, and the engineer goes back and makes a resurvey and finds that a larger sum is needed than was demanded in the first instance.

We are simply in this manner pouring the money into the waters of the United States. We are pouring it out without getting any results; whereas, on the contrary, if we give a large lump sum to the War Department or the Chief of Engineers they will select an improvement upon which to expend it, and which can be completed with the appropriation. They will take from that aggregate sum a sufficient amount to carry on the work consecutively or until it is completed, and then we will rid ourselves, as members of Congress, of importunities from local interests and from appeals even of personality which are made to us as members of Congress for local improvements which may protect some schemes in the nature of private enterprises and not for the public good.

So long as the present practice continues, and this I say with the highest respect for the gentlemen constituting the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, with a full realization of the difficulties under which they labor, and with the highest tribute that I can make to the astuteness, perseverance, and industry of the distinguished chairman of the committee—so long as we have the present practice of allowing certain persons, members of the House, to undertake to parcel out the money along these various streams among themselves, their fellow-members, and the people of the United States, the criticisms on the bill will continue to grow until they will amount to a public clamor for a reform in this regard.

I hope before the debate on this bill closes an opportunity will be afforded to offer a substitute to the House and the country for the bill, such a measure as I have outlined, whereby the money which can be wisely expended in benefiting the commerce, manufactures, and agricultural industries of the United States will be so expended that the people can get the benefit of it, and that members of Congress, when they stand here to advocate an improvement, a righteous improvement, may not find themselves open to the imputation or criticism of their fellow-members that they are endeavoring to do that which is not for the public good, but for personal benefit.

The members of the committee themselves, I should think, would be glad to lay down the burden, and have the whole system changed, because they are subjected as it is now to a running fire of sometimes unjust criticism; and if items find their way into the bill which are perfectly natural and reasonable, from States represented by those members, it lies in the mouths of ungenerous critics to say, "He has got his share of the 'pork' before other members are considered."

Now as to these small streams that are found in the bill, I have myself frequently criticised them; and I hope when this bill is up for full consideration by this committee every member of this House will follow carefully the report of the local engineer or that of the Engineer-in-Chief, and where an appropriation appears to be uncalled for, and the committee finds that it is not of an interstate character, that it be exposed; but the mere fact that some of these streams are small I frankly admit is not a sufficient argument to operate against all the others.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. SOWDEN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. BLANCHARD. How much time has the gentleman left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. CRAIN. In view of the fact that I have not occupied, from the beginning of this Congress up to the present, more than two hours of the time of the House, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am constrained to object to that, as we desire to proceed with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITCH] has said that I know nothing about that State, and for that reason had reduced the appropriation made by the committee from $150,000 for the improvement of Harlem River to $75,000.

Mr. Chairman, I boated and bathed in the Harlem River before that gentleman ever saw New York. I left that State before he ever went to it; and if he be present I will call his attention to the fact that he came to me voluntarily and proposed to take the same position which I occupy, and afterwards returned and said as the committee had increased his appropriation from $75,000 of last year to $150,000 in the present he would be constrained to take the opposite position. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Nothing wrong about that.

Mr. CRAIN. My colleague [Mr. STEWART, of Texas] has stated that I occupy a very unique position because, forsooth, in the interest of the country at large I had, in the substitute which I offered to this bill, complained that the appropriations in the bill before the committee were too small. I am perfectly willing to occupy a unique position if that may be so called, because I am opposed, unalterably opposed, to a waste of the public money by dealing it out in dribblets for public improvements. I believe that if the matter is of sufficient commercial and national importance to justify an appropriation at all, it ought to be sufficient to enable the engineers in charge of the work to carry it out to successful completion as early as possible.

He has said that I have placed myself in antagonism to the people of Southwestern Texas and to the people of Galveston because I antagonized this measure. He says, why antagonize these suffering people? Antagonize them, because, forsooth, I want this House to give them more money than your committee propose to give them. You offer them half a loaf, and I propose that they shall have a whole loaf, and yet I am charged with starving the people whom I desire to benefit. Mr. Chairman, the substitute the gentleman says ought to have followed the estimates of the engineers in order that my position should be logical. I did not propose a substitute in accordance with the estimates of the engineers, because I have been informed that it would be impossible for it to run the gantlet, not only of the House, but of the very committee that has this matter in charge. But I did propose a substitute that had passed through the tortuous modes of legislation in both Houses successfully; that had encountered the inspection of the President, and that had received his implied sanction, because he declined to veto it. I ask the chairman of that committee, I ask the members of that committee, to tell me the reason why this House should not pass as large a bill at this session as it passed at the last. Is it because there is not money sufficient? The answer is that there is a plethora in the Treasury of the United States, and that there is a danger of financial congestion there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How much time is remaining to the advocates of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had thirty minutes, as the Chair remembers. He has occupied twenty-five minutes, and there are five remaining.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITCH].

Mr. FITCH. I was not within hearing of the last speaker's voice at the moment he spoke, but I am informed that he said I promised to vote for his substitute. He was mistaken entirely, Mr. Chairman. I said nothing of that character to him. I said that I agreed with him that the appropriations for important works ought to be larger, and that I thought selfishly he had increased the appropriation for his own district and decreased mine. I said, of course, that I could not vote for any such substitute.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In the four minutes remaining to me it is impossible to make a defense against all the arguments against this bill which have been presented here. I will confine myself more particularly to some of the objections to the bill urged by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] who sits closest to the Chair, who made merriment for a portion of this House by his reference to the small rivers and water ways of the United States, most of them of a difficult and somewhat singular nomenclature.

Among those that he mentioned I shall select two or three as illustrations to show him the error into which he has fallen with respect to all of them. Before I proceed to do that, however, I desire to say to the gentleman that this bill will be considered in the ordinary way under the five-minute rule, for amendments, and I challenge him, or any other gentleman upon this floor, when these various small rivers and creeks to which they object are reached, to rise and oppose them and move to strike them out, and if the Committee on Rivers and Harbors can not, in every instance, give a good reason why they should be appropriated for, then I trust that the House will vote to strike them out. But I promise the gentleman in advance to furnish him a good and sufficient reason for every appropriation that is proposed in this bill.

Among those which the gentleman mentioned as being objectionable was Contentnia Creek, in the State of North Carolina. I ask his attention and the attention of the committee to what is said by the engineers concerning the importance of that water way:

When work commenced in 1881 the steam-boat commerce was nothing, its rafting commerce was insignificant, and the products of the neighborhood had to be hauled overland long distances to market.

At present four steam-boats (with an aggregate tonnage of 219 tons and carrying capacity of 600 bales of cotton) enter this river; of these boats, two stop near the mouth and two run 31 miles up the river to Snow Hill during nearly nine months of the year, carrying over $800,000 of goods per year.

The present rates of transportation are estimated to be nearly 50 per cent. less than those of 1881.

The river-marine insurance is now only one-tenth of 1 per cent. in contrast to one-eighth of 1 per cent. in 1886, and no fixed rate prior to that time.

The commerce is rapidly increasing. Each dollar so far spent on this improvement has been accompanied by the development of $20 of annual commerce.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the amount appropriated for that creek in this bill, a creek which has a commerce of $800,000 a year carried upon its waters, is the insignificant sum of $3,000. Will the gentleman from New York say that that appropriation of $3,000 is not justified by the showing of commerce made with respect to this water way?

Take another instance, Jekyl Creek in Georgia, to which the gentleman objects. I read what the engineer says about that:

The value of the commerce passing through Jekyl Creek is estimated at from $200,000 to $400,000 per annum. The advantages to be derived from the proposed improvement are that the steamers now plying on the "inside route" could run on schedule time, and vessels that now have to go outside could be towed through the creek, thus avoiding any risk from stormy weather at sea.

The military importance of this route in the event of war with a foreign power has already received attention and need not be stated here.

I transmit a chart showing the location of the proposed works of improvement.

Jekyl Creek is in the collection district of Brunswick, which is also the nearest port of entry.

The amount appropriated for that creek in this bill is $3,000. Is not that appropriation justified by the facts?

Take Wappoo Cut, in South Carolina, another item criticised. Here is what the engineers say about it:

Wappoo Cut is of considerable commercial importance. It is the first link in the chain of inland navigation which extends from Charleston to Florida. * * * I am indebted to Mr. Edward Willis, of Charleston, S. C., for the information that the commerce passing through Wappoo Cut in the year ending December 3, 1887, is as follows:

55,000 tons phosphate rock, valued at	$165,000
5,800 bags sea-island cotton, valued at	315,000
160,000 bushels of rice, valued at	150,000
118,000 crates of vegetables, valued at	210,000
1,200 tons of fertilizers, valued at	15,000
7,500,000 feet lumber and timber, valued at	65,000
Miscellaneous articles, valued at	15,000
Total commerce	935,000

The amount appropriated in this bill for that improvement is $10,000, and is it not justified by the facts? And so it is, Mr. Chairman, with every single one of the water ways which that gentleman has mentioned and in a spirit of fun and merriment has criticised. Let the gentleman from New York, or any other gentleman in the House, move to strike out those items from this bill and see whether the appropriations can not be justified. We are, of course, aware that the argument made by the gentleman from New York has been made before. It gets into the newspapers from time to time and it has its effects, and I trust that my friend, who is a newspaper man, will send out with his own admirable speech the antidote which is furnished by the extracts I have read from the engineers' reports.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for general debate upon this bill has expired. The Clerk will report the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Rockland, Me.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to amend by striking out "twenty," in line 10, and inserting "ten." Mr. Chairman, at the last session of this Congress we appropriated for the improvement of the harbor at Rockland, Me., $30,000. How much of that appropriation remains unexpended? Is there not a sufficient balance on hand to carry on this improvement until the meeting of the next Congress, when another appropriation is likely to be made for the purpose?

How much of this money is now in the hands of the Secretary of War? I would like the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill to answer. Is it absolutely necessary to appropriate $20,000 at this particular time? Does the improvement demand it? Has any urgent request been made to this Congress for it? Is there not a sufficient amount of the $30,000 appropriated within the last five months for this improvement still on hand with which to conduct the work in progress on this harbor for the next year?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will answer the gentleman by saying merely that the appropriation to continue this work is needed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move, pro forma, to amend by striking out the last word. While I can not answer all the questions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], I can make this statement in regard to Rockland Harbor: It is one of the most important on the coast of Maine—perhaps the most important next to Portland. It is a good harbor except when there is a southeast wind. At such times the sea often drives in there so that vessels will not lie at anchor and will not lie at the wharves. On account of the openness of the harbor to the sea on the southeast there have been very great disasters there. This appropriation is to continue the building of a breakwater which will make that harbor landlocked and render it safe in all kinds of weather.

From the city of Rockland is shipped more lime than from any other place, I believe, in this country. The commerce of Rockland is very large. New York City is interested in it; Charleston is interested in it; Baltimore is interested in it; it extends to all the commercial cities on the coast. I certainly hope this amendment will not be adopted.

The question was taken on Mr. SOWDEN's amendment, and it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a breakwater from Mount Desert to Porcupine Island, Me.: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

Mr. KERR. I move to strike out the paragraph just read. In favor of this amendment, I will say that the report of the committee says nothing at all about this item; it gives no reason why this money should be appropriated. I think this House ought to know by something, either in the bill or in the report, that the money proposed to be appropriated for any improvement of this kind is needed, and that the work will be of some public advantage. In regard to all public measures coming before this House except the river and harbor bill—for instance, upon bills providing for the erection of public buildings—it is expected that we shall have given to us information at length, showing just why the appropriation should be made, and what public necessity demands that the money should be taken out of the public Treasury for the improvement proposed. I do not think it fair that we should be asked to vote upon the naked recommendation of a committee, without any knowledge on our part of the reasons which there may be in favor of the recommendation.

The question was taken on Mr. KERR'S amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$30,000" in the pending paragraph and inserting "$10,000." I see that the river and harbor bill of last August contains an appropriation of $50,000 for this improvement. This large sum has been appropriated within the last five months for the continuation of this work. We are now asked to make the further appropriation of $30,000. It seems to me needless to raise objection to this provision, because it is physically impossible for the engineers in charge of this improvement to expend within the next year the $50,000 already provided. The uselessness of this additional appropriation of $30,000 at this time is therefore very apparent. It seems to me that the able and distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BLANCHARD] can not be in real earnest in asking for this additional sum of $30,000. It is surely not needed. I hope, therefore, that my amendment will prevail.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to say just a word in answer to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], and that is that if he knew as much about this harbor and appropriation as I know about it he would be in dead earnest in favor of it. More than 40,000 passengers landed in that harbor from steamers last year. This appropriation is for a breakwater, and the engineer recommended $100,000 instead of what is here appropriated. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SOWDEN. I agree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat in reference to the importance of this improvement, but I take issue as to the necessity of presently making a further appropriation of $30,000.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The engineers recommend $100,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. They recommend all these sums of money in order that they may control their expenditures upon these contemplated improvements.

The question was taken on Mr. SOWDEN'S amendment, and the noes were declared to have it.

Mr. SOWDEN. Division.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman will withdraw his call for a division I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. SOWDEN. I will if my amendment is considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be.

Mr. SOWDEN. All right, then; I withdraw the call for a division.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11765) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask by unanimous consent the House shall remain in session for half an hour longer in order to continue the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object to any extension of the time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move the House proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported this morning as to the purchase of real estate in the District. It has gone on the Calendar and can be reached and disposed of, by unanimous consent, in a few minutes.

Mr. BLAND. We have only a minute remaining.

Mr. TAULBEE. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. The time for adjournment has arrived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution has gone to the Printing Office.

Mr. KILGORE. It is 5 o'clock.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask the time be extended for five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. We can do it in the morning. I insist on adjournment.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. having arrived), in pursuance of previous order, the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE (by request): A bill (H. R. 11880) granting a pension to Joanna W. Turner—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COGSWELL: A bill (H. R. 11881) granting a pension to James D. Neally—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COMPTON (by request): A bill (H. R. 11882) for the relief of Sarah C. Nicols—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GEST: A bill (H. R. 11883) to grant a pension to Samuel G. Dark—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11884) to grant a pension to William Hawkins—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GIFFORD: A bill (H. R. 11885) for the relief of certain settlers in Hettinger County, Dakota—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11886) to reimburse J. B. Bertrand, jr., for loss of property sustained by fire in the destruction of the post-office at Canton, Dak., September 25, 1888—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HATCH: A bill (H. R. 11887) granting an increase of pension to B. Hackett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE (by request): A bill (H. R. 11888) for the relief of Rachel Dyer—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request) a bill (H. R. 11889) for the relief of Alfred Carter—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LYMAN: A bill (H. R. 11890) for the relief of Patrick Smith—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: A bill (H. R. 11891) to confer the rank of lieutenant by law on Nathaniel Johnson Coffin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEEL (by request): A bill (H. R. 11892) for the relief of Elizabeth Fitzhugh—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11893) for the relief of Mahala Fields—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PIDCOCK: A bill (H. R. 11894) granting a pension to John C. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11895) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Abram Spargo—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11896) granting a pension to George H. Fenton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11897) granting a pension to William O. Woodruff—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SYMES: A bill (H. R. 11898) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain lands for cemetery purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WALKER: A bill (H. R. 11899) granting a pension to Levi M. Lincoln, of Glen Allen, Mo.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BANKHEAD: Petition of Daniel B. Drennon, administrator of Walter B. Drennon, of Walker County, Alabama, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BIGGS: Resolutions of the California State Grange, in favor of pure food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Petition of 103 commercial travelers, merchants, and manufacturers of Richmond, Ind., for an amendment to the interstate-commerce act authorizing reduced railroad rates to commercial travelers—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: Petition of William W. Graham and 60 others, of Clarkson County, Ohio, in favor of pure lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GAINES: Petition of John J. Crawford and 55 others, of Dinwiddie County, Virginia, in favor of pure lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GEST: Proof upon the bill No. 10353, to pension Eliza Richardson, and also upon the bill to pension William Hawkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GLASS: Petition of B. J. Pulliam, of Obion County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOWARD: Petition of citizens of New Albany, Ind., against a reduction of the tariff on window-glass—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, indorsing the per diem rated service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE (by request): Paper in the claim of Randolph Barnhouse—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of heirs of David Reel, of Hezekiah Routzahn, of William B. White, and of James Freeze, of Maryland, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition of C. M. Morelen and 65 members of Comet Grange, of Waldo County, Maine, in favor of pure food and pure lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Gustavus Cooley, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEWTON: Petition of J. W. De France, heir of Laura L. De France, of James H. Gilfoil, heir of Patrick Gilfoil, of L. C. M. McIntosh, guardian of minor children of Jenet McIntosh, of John Lowhead, and of heirs of Henrietta Bowers, of Louisiana, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Resolution of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, favoring the branch hydrographic offices—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. PETERS: Protest of citizens of Kingman County, of Hodgeman County, and of Gray County, Kansas, against the passage of the Oklahoma bill—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. REED: Petition of Humphrey G. Edwards, for a pension, with accompanying papers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICE: Petition of the governor and 227 other citizens of Minnesota, for the passage of House bill No. 5664, to increase and regulate the salaries of post-office clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ROBERTSON: Petition of Charles P. DeLee, of East Feliciana Parish, Louisiana, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SPINOLA: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

By Mr. SHIVELY: Of editors of the Daily Republican and Herald-Chronicle, and also president of the Laporte Printing Company.

By Mr. S. V. WHITE: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 21, 1888.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in response to a resolution of the 13th instant, information in regard to the condition of the inhabitants of Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents the petition of the Chicago and Atchison Bridge Company and sundry other corporations, praying for reimbursement for expenditures made for the protection of the Missouri River near Winthrop, in the State of Missouri; which will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VEST. Ought not the petition to go to the Committee on Commerce?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the appropriation prayed for would properly be made as an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill. It can, if the Senator desires, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST. I think the Chair is right.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think that the memorial should be referred to the Committee on the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there be objection, the petition will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so referred.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Cordelia R. Jones, of Metcalf, Ill., praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present the petition of C. B. Reed and 94 others, residents of the county of Orangeburgh and the voting precinct of Gleaton's, in the State of South Carolina, stating that they are legally qualified registered voters; that on the 6th day of November last they presented themselves at said voting precinct in order to vote for Presidential electors and members of Congress, and that they were denied the right to vote. The petitioners pray for an investigation, and that some means be devised to secure to them the free exercise of the rights guarantied to them by the constitution of South Carolina and the laws and Constitution of the United States.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I also present the petition of Adam Pelzer and 157 other residents of the county of Orangeburgh and voting precinct of Fort Motte, in the State of South Carolina, making the same prayer. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I also present the petition of Mack William and 153 other residents of Orangeburgh County, and the voting precinct of Fort Motte, in the State of South Carolina, making the same prayer. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask consent to introduce a paper I hold in my hand from Professor Samuel P. Sadtler, of the University of Pennsylvania, on the sources of the sugar supply in this country. It is a short paper. I have a memorial from sugar-planters of Louisiana that I intended to offer this morning, but I have misplaced it. I ask that this paper, from a gentleman of very high standing and scientific attainments, may be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator has the usual number printed, a majority of the copies will go where there is no special use for this document. I suggest that an order be made to print a thousand copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish just a small number printed for the use of the Senate and the Finance Committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a short paper. I think there ought to be a thousand copies printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. A thousand copies would be ample. Five hundred would be sufficient.

Mr. HARRIS. On what subject is the paper?

Mr. GIBSON. It is on the sources of the sugar supply in this country. It is a very important subject and a very interesting paper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the paper will be referred to the Committee on Finance, and 500 copies will be printed as a document.

Mr. HAWLEY. The difference between the cost of 500 and 1,000 copies will be inappreciable, as it is a small paper. A great many are interested in the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One thousand copies will be printed, if there be no objection. It is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them adversely; and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 742) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow without levees; and

A bill (S. 3324) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state that at an early day I will file a written report to accompany these bills.

PENSACOLA AND MEMPHIS RAILROAD.

Mr. HALE. I report from the Committee on Naval Affairs without amendment the bill (S. 3732) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee. and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida. I ask that the bill may be put upon its passage at this time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. HALE. I will say before the bill is read that this is the identical bill that was passed at the last session of Congress in both Houses, but did not reach the President. It has been submitted to the Navy Department and has the approval of that Department. The only point is as to the construction of the road over the navy-yard. It is important that the bill should be put through early, because the enterprise is hindered. That is why I ask the Senate to pass it now.

The bill was read, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back without amendment the bill (H. R. 11878) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am instructed by the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, to whom was referred a memorial of T. J. Power, of Montana, alleging an obstruction to the navigation in the Missouri River caused by the construction of piers for the Union Pacific Railway Company at Omaha, and also a resolution based upon such memorial, passed by the Senate, directing the committee to investigate in respect to these obstructions, to report the memorial and resolution back, and to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same. I submit a written report, accompanied by somewhat voluminous testimony, maps, etc. And I may be permitted to say that this testimony is entirely conclusive as to the absence of obstructions as alleged, and the committee have so unanimously determined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed, and the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial and resolution, if there be no objection.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is not necessary to print the evidence, which is quite voluminous, including elaborate maps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed without the evidence. It is so ordered.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON INDIAN TRADERS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back without amendment the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] providing for a messenger for the Committee on Indian Traders; and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Indian Traders be, and hereby is, authorized to appoint a messenger to serve during the remainder of the present session; such messenger to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the usual compensation allowed to messengers of the Senate on vouchers duly approved.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3755) for the relief of Lucy A. Adkison; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3756) punishing crime against the elective franchise; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 3757) for the establishment of a zoological park in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENT TO BILL.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit, by request, an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 8990) to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations. I have heretofore introduced an amendment to that bill myself. I introduce this amendment by request, that it may be printed and considered by the committee. I move its reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], coming over from a previous day under objection.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. TELLER was read, as follows:

Whereas there have recently appeared in the press of the country certain charges of irregularities and violations of law in the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury as to the selection of sites for public buildings, the letting of contracts for the erection thereof, the methods in which plans and specifications and contracts have been prepared and drawn, and otherwise: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and the same is hereby, authorized and instructed to make, either by the committee or a subcommittee thereof, an investigation into the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department during the administration of the present Supervising Architect, and for that purpose the committee, or said subcommittee, if appointed, is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths; said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. VEST. I move to amend the resolution in the third and fourth lines from the end by inserting after the word "Architect" the words "and of his immediate predecessor."

Mr. TELLER. I am willing to accept that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have some reason given for that modification.

Mr. VEST. I can give it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Supervising Architect who immediately preceded the present one is out of office, and has been for several years. He has gone to a distant city; and is it proposed to investigate him now?

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I will answer that question.

I take it for granted that this is not a personal attack upon anybody. I certainly do not intend my amendment for that purpose; but I feel considerable interest as a legislator in this entire subject for reasons that I shall state as briefly as possible.

I have served upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for ten years, and if I have learned anything in my experience as a member of that committee it has been the absolute and unquestionable vice or vices of the present system in regard to the construction of public buildings. I have endeavored session after session to secure legislation that I thought would do away with the defects, to use the mildest term, of the administration of that office, but my endeavor has been so far without success.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds four years ago, my recollection is, reported a bill to change the entire system, and instead of this jobbing and log-rolling for the sites of public buildings and the construction of public buildings, to put the whole thing under a uniform, systematic policy, the contract system, which on the ground both of avoiding fraud and of saving money is infinitely superior to the other.

In passing I wish to make one statement. I had a conversation with the Chief of the Bureau of Engineers, General Casey, a few days ago, in his own office, with regard to the difference between the contract system and the system of doing public work by day's labor, the question having come up in regard to an application I made to him to put an improvement on a river in the West, in my State and in the State of Arkansas, under the contract system, the other system having utterly failed and the money having been thrown away year after year. Responsible parties made a bid to do the work under the contract system and give bond for its faithful performance, and I went to see General Casey about it. In connection with that subject he commenced talking about the contract system. He said, "This building in which we sit is the best illustration of the difference in the two systems."

Mr. SPOONER. Who said that?

Mr. VEST. General Casey, of the Bureau of Engineers, who now has charge of the Public Library building, and he is the best administrative officer in the erection of public buildings in the United States, if not in the world. Experience has shown it. He said, "In this very building, which has two wings, the southern wing being where the Secretary of State has his Department, and the northern wing being that in which is the War Department, the southern wing was done under the day's work system, and the plastering and frescoing (and he took out the bills from his drawer) cost $108,000." He said, "Then I was put on duty in Washington and took charge of this wing, which is identical in dimensions and in every respect with the other, and here is the bill under which I did better frescoing and better plastering for $33,000, and did it in one-third the time."

Mr. President, just look at the work being done here now upon the parapets around the Capitol building, "dragging its slow length along," under an honest administration, for there is not a more honest man living than Mr. Clark, the Architect of this Capitol. Under that system, partly by contract, partly by day's work, it looks as if the job would be interminable; and the Library building would never have been erected during the service of any present member of the Senate in my opinion, not even of the youngest of us, if it had gone on under the day's work system as it was commenced.

The Public Buildings Committee introduced a bill, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and myself worked earnestly and laboriously to pass it through this body, which changes this system to the contract system, and puts the selection of sites and the doing of the work on a safe and economical basis; and yet we were cut off by some political measure and have never been able, after having three days' discussion on the bill, to pass it through the Senate, and it is on the Calendar to-day in an unfinished and inchoate condition.

I wish to say in regard to this resolution that I have known Colonel Fréret since 1861. I have always believed him to be an absolutely honest and incorruptible man. I made his acquaintance under circumstances when if he was a dishonest man he had the largest opportunity of showing it, and he did not show it. As to his administrative ability, I am not able to speak advisedly. But I want to say that, in my judgment, it will be found by this committee after investigation that the trouble in the whole matter is in the system. As long as you have the present system you will have these scandals. They are absolutely inseparable from the system.

Sir, in our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to-day is a good-sized room filled with the evidence taken by an investigation committee as to the administration of the Supervising Architect's office by the incumbent in 1878, 1879, and 1880, and this town was rotten with the scandal that grew out of the administration of that office then. It was stated in the public prints that the incumbent then went out with a large fortune, and he came here an absolutely poor man. But there was enough evidence developed to show that money had been corruptly obtained, and it was absolutely impossible to present it. There was a ring in this town that existed here for years, and that evidence developed it. I went through part of it, but life was too short to go through all of it, for it filled up a whole room. However, I saw enough to satisfy me that a ring was formed in this town and existed here for years, and not a contract could be had outside the members of it. There is a little paper here hardly bigger than this blotter [exhibiting] in which the advertisements for bids were published. Nobody saw them except a few favored people. No man who lived in the vicinity of a public building could get in a bid; the contracts all went to men around this Capitol, and what was the result? The whole thing became tainted, until finally this scandal broke loose in the newspapers, there was an investigation, and the man investigated went out of office and went to his home, and that was the last of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. During whose administration was that? I did not happen to hear.

Mr. VEST. It was the year I entered the Senate. I came into the Senate in March, 1879, and the investigation was going on then. It began in 1878. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] knows the year exactly. I can turn to the evidence.

Mr. HALE. The Senator must refer to the administration of this office under Mr. Hill, I think, who succeeded Mr. Mullett.

Mr. VEST. No, it was not Mr. Hill.

Mr. TELLER. It was the one under whose direction the Chicago post-office building was erected?

Mr. VEST. That is the one.

Mr. TELLER. That was under Hill.

Mr. HALE. That was under Hill.

Mr. VEST. I know the evidence is in our committee-room, unless it has been moved to that general receptacle of waste paper, the basement of the Capitol. It was there last session.

Without saying anything more of a personal nature—I did not want to mention anything personal at all if I could avoid it—just as long as we have the present system by which favoritism can be exercised, we shall have just such scandals as the one that has brought about this resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator will allow me to say that according to my recollection the examination in the case of Mr. Hill entirely exculpated him from any fraud whatever.

Mr. HALE. Entirely. I want to say a word about that.

Mr. VEST. Well, I do not undertake to say that there was any guilt proved, but I do undertake to say this, and I can show it—there is no doubt about it—that there were contracts put out not to the lowest and best bidder, and there was a ring in the capital, and it existed here for years, and it was impossible for any mechanic or contractor who lived in a town or city where a public building was to be erected to obtain a contract. I assert that positively and I can show it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri, I know, does not desire to cast any aspersions unjustly upon the character of any public servant. It is not like him to do that. The investigation that he refers to took place upon the administration and the work of the former Supervising Architect of the Treasury, Mr. Hill, who succeeded Mr. Mullett. Mr. Hill had been for years a faithful, painstaking, and laborious subordinate official in the department under Mr. Mullett. He was selected because it was believed that his experience and skill fitted him for the most important and great place, for it is a place of great importance. The investigation that took place was thorough and exhaustive and attended by a temporary suspension of the Supervising Architect from his duties in charge of that department. Examinations were made here and in Chicago resulting in a complete exoneration of the Supervising Architect, Mr. Hill; and I may say, Mr. President, from some familiarity with the subject at the time, and some familiarity with the duties and work of this branch of the Government since, that in my judgment, and I think in the judgment of all men who looked at that investigation, the Supervising Architect went out of it unharmed and exonerated.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Maine will permit me to say that if I know myself I would not make any charge in this Senate, or anything which could be considered a charge, that I would not make outside and be entirely responsible for. I do not say that these things were proven upon Mr. Hill. My recollection—I have not particularly thought about it for some time—is that he was permitted to resign. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HALE. He was restored to his place.

Mr. VEST. And then resigned.

Mr. HALE. He held his place. The Senator from Ohio can give the date; he held his place for a long time, and I heard after that no imputations made upon him in the Department. I do not think the Senator from Missouri means to do this man personal injustice.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to do him any injustice, but the point I make, and that is the salient point of my argument, is that there was proof, and I think I can produce it without any sort of trouble, that a ring existed as to these contracts. There is no question about that. Whether Mr. Hill was connected with it or not, whether they brought that home to his door or not, I shall not undertake to say.

Mr. HALE. I want to say right there that nothing was brought home to the door of this man. I have no interest in him; he is not a constituent of mine. I only wish to say a word further about him, in answer to the intimation made by the Senator from Missouri that it had been said that this architect retired with a fortune. So far from that being the case, he was a poor man before he went into the office; he was a poor man during his holding of the place; and when he went out of it he went patiently and laboriously to work in his profession. He has been earning an honest livelihood since. I do not believe that anybody who knows him and knows his connection with the Department feels that any imputation should rest upon him, and there I leave it.

I have not believed, Mr. President, either then or since or now, that the contracts which are made, covering thousands and tens of thousands and millions of dollars, in this department of the Government have been made under the control or dictation or for the purposes of any ring. I have never believed that. I do not think that is done now under the present Supervising Architect. All my impressions about him personally have been in his favor. If any of the things that are referred to and recited in the resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado are true, it is, I believe, because Colonel Fréret has been importuned and pushed and pressed into things that his own judgment and his own integrity would not assent to. The truth is that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury has one of the most important positions under the Government, and a position that peculiarly opens him to constant importunity by Senators and Members of Congress.

It is not possible for a scheme to be set afoot for a public building in any State of the Union that at once the Supervising Architect is not beset by influence from here and the other Chamber to recommend such and such a building and such and such a site. Everybody knows enough about human nature to know that that kind of pressure is most powerful upon any public servant in any Department. There is not a case of a public building commenced under a limitation fixed and defined by Congress, that the Supervising Architect is not liable to be pressed and pushed and hammered by Senators and Representatives to recommend an increase of limit; and it is not in human nature always to resist such pressure. There is not a case where a contract is to be made for a building or a part of a building that the Supervising Architect is not beset by contractors, in many cases backed up properly enough by the Representatives whose constituents they are; and it is a most laborious, difficult, and delicate place.

I do not believe that investigation will show deliberate fraud or malfeasance on the part of the old Architect, and from what I know of the present Architect in his acts, I have no doubt that bad practices and perhaps improper things will be brought out just now under the pressure that the Architect has been subjected to.

There is another truth about this whole subject, Mr. President, and that is that, considering the importance of this work, the delicate relations that the Supervising Architect is always under, the pressure upon him from Congress and elsewhere, the immense sums of money that must be expended under him, the great structures that are constantly being erected and the small buildings all over the country, it may be that the personnel of the office may be found not to be up to the magnitude of the work. There are many cases throughout the United States where the architect of a single great building erected by private enterprise or by municipalities or by States receives a larger compensation every year than the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who has charge of all our great Government works; and the wonder is to me that a good architect, prospering in his profession, making for himself a name and a reputation, can afford to go into this office.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds can not set themselves to a more meritorious work than to devise some plan that will bring more order, more thrift, more good management, more efficient work out of this Department of the Government. How that can be done I do not know myself. That committee has investigated the subject, and it ought to be able to furnish a plan to the Senate. But the magnitude of the work and the difficulties that beset whoever may be at the head of this work have not been appreciated generally heretofore.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think that when any Senator presents a resolution here for an investigation he has a right by virtue of his position to have that investigation made; but I think there is no vice attending our legislation so great as that of investigation in regard to public officers, implying at least some reflection upon them, made without some substantial reason for it. The mere fact that a statement is made in a newspaper by some correspondent or by an editor that something wrong has been done, does not, in my opinion, furnish a justification for a resolution of inquiry by the Senate; and although I shall vote for this resolution I desire to express my sorrow that such a habit should prevail in the Senate.

I have had no reason to believe in my service of nearly ten years here that any of the predecessors of Mr. Fréret in the office of Supervising Architect have been guilty of anything wrong. Nothing has come within my observation nor has any evidence been presented to this body which would warrant a reasonable conclusion of this character.

In regard to Mr. Fréret, I desire to say that there is no architect in the United States of greater ability or of higher standing professionally and personally than this gentleman. He is devoted to his profession. He is not a man engaged in any kind of work outside of his business as an architect, and he has accepted this place, retiring from a profitable business and one in which he had gained a reputation and won the respect and confidence of all who knew him in one of the most important business centers of the country. He has accepted it simply because of the public reputation which it gave him as the chief architect and the distinction which the office is supposed to confer.

Now, I will venture to say that the most rigid investigation will establish the fact that not only is there nothing that has been done wrong in the office with which Mr. Fréret is connected, but on the contrary will show that his administration has been as economical, as wise, and as promotive of the public interest as any that has ever existed in that office.

Mr. President, the imputation of this resolution will go forth in the public papers all over the country. It will be asserted that there was some ground for an inquiry into the conduct of this office. Some kind of sanction will be given to these newspaper reports. That can not now be avoided; but I desire to say that in the intercourse I have had with Mr. Fréret, he has always declared that he would not consider personal solicitations in reference to the selection of sites for public buildings, that the contracts which were let should be to the lowest responsible bidder; and I have no question that the most careful investigation will establish that fact in every instance that has occurred, and will show conclusively that the selection of sites has in all cases been made by the Secretary of the Treasury after a full report of all the statements of persons offering property and on the recommendation and statements of business men and citizens of character of the place, who had no other interest but that of the public service.

Now, in reference to the observations of the Senator from Missouri in regard to the contract system, I will say that every public officer has it in his discretion, if the contract system is the better one for any public work, to adopt it, and if it is as efficient and saves money it is an imputation upon the officer that he has not adopted it. But, in reference to the contract system being able always to secure the best work and the most honest performance of duty, let us examine into the Post-Office Department. Here is a vast sum of money, far exceeding that which the Supervising Architect expends—$50,000,000 annually, and more—let by contract, and yet these contracts are always taken here in the city of Washington, or by persons who have their agents here. None of the mail contracts in the State of Florida are let to persons resident there. The whole of that money is taken under the contract system by regular and professional bidders, and there is no protection to the people living away from the capital and unrepresented here. So we do not get, by the contract system alone, a certain security for the best work or the most efficient work. Nor do we prevent a system by which the people of the place where the mail service is to be performed are deprived of the contracts and have to do the service as subcontractors, generally paying a part of the money earned to the professional bidder.

Efficient service in constructing or supervising any public work must depend upon the integrity and administrative ability of the public officer, whoever he may be or wherever he may be, and I venture to say that this investigation will leave Mr. Fréret's character and his ability as an architect higher than they were before. No more meritorious officer can be found in the public service, and he has nothing to fear from any investigations, nor, in my opinion, will there be found anything wrong permitted by him in any subordinate or anything which has escaped his notice.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in his observation that the compensation paid to these officials is entirely inadequate, and that it is a matter of astonishment that men of ability and standing high in their profession and deriving liberal compensation should be willing to accept this position. It is only for the professional reputation which it is supposed to give, and I for one do not desire to see a man of that character, whether he be of one party or another, whether the predecessor or successor of Mr. Fréret, the present incumbent, subjected to imputations without evidence presented that there is some reason to suppose he has been guilty of something wrong.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not understand that this resolution is any reflection upon the Supervising Architect whatever, while it may be a reflection upon the methods in which business is done in that office, and I suppose it is done in his office just as it has been done for twenty-five years. As the Senator from Missouri has said, it is the vice of the system. I am quite willing, therefore, the Senator should amend this resolution, or I will accept his modifications, so as to put it in such shape that the committee can determine what have been the methods heretofore, what are the methods now, and what change ought to be made.

So far as I know personally the Supervising Architect is not amenable to any charge, and nobody proposes to make any against him. He seems to me to be a business man from what little intercourse I have had with him, and to be anxious to do his duty. He has under him a great number of officials. He went into the office with the system established, and I suppose he is doing what every man does; unless he be directed by the legislative authority to make changes he follows the usual course. He is not responsible for the fact that contracts ought to be let when they are not, and it is no reflection upon him in any shape or manner, and is not so intended. Therefore I accept the proposition for amendment made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I was called away from my seat and have not heard the debate, and have only this moment glanced over the resolution. I know it is not the purpose of the Senator from Colorado to do an injustice to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and I am very glad to hear him say he intends by this resolution no reflection upon the personal or the official character of that gentleman. Mr. Fréret is a citizen of the State I in part represent. No one stands higher in the city of New Orleans as an architect or as a gentleman of the highest probity; no one is more esteemed than Mr. Fréret. I have known him for many long years and I have never heard a breath against his perfect integrity.

I do not know upon what information the Senator proceeds nor by whom this resolution is invoked. The resolution recites that there have been charges and criticisms against the Supervising Architect in the newspapers. I have not seen them. For aught I know they may be vague and indefinite, nebulous, and if founded in error or malice and treated with silent disdain they will disappear. But if they have any groundwork to rest upon they should be distinctly formulated into specifications, giving facts and instances, something definite, something tangible.

For one, sir, I do not think it compatible with the dignity of the Senate to give its indorsement to an investigation upon vague, general, intangible newspaper statements against a public officer charged with weighty responsibilities such as rest upon the Supervising Architect. In my judgment this resolution should be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. This officer is well known to that committee, and they will be better able than the Senate to say whether the newspaper criticisms and charges should be entitled to any weight or attention.

The readiness with which charges are made against public men in the United States is one of the characteristics of our politics and times. We should remember that a character unassailed is not like a character once assailed, even when the assault has been triumphantly repelled. Wounds and pain are inflicted, and even after vindication the fact that accusation was made tends to impair, to disparage, to belittle. This is not only true of individuals but of communities. Senators who have visited Europe must have been amused and incensed at the pictures of life in the United States set forth in the newspapers of every nation on the Continent and in England. If we could believe them there is no security for life or property, no sense of honor or decency, no reverence for law or character, no self-restraint in our American life; that our Government is in the hands and control of demagogues, and that this Senate represents not intelligent and enlightened commonwealths, but disorderly communities, resembling plundering mobs more than well-organized States.

The European press gives mere caricatures of the United States; and even in our own country there is not an occurrence remote from the place where the newspaper is published but that it is distorted or magnified or maligned, and when political or party interest is added to the natural disposition of man to censure those who live far away, it is not astonishing that people in one section of the Union believe, like Europeans, all the hobgoblin stories, calumnies, and misrepresentations of the people living in some other distant part of the country.

If the people only knew one another there would be no sectional ill-will, and each portion of the country would find its own interests, sentiments, prejudices, hopes, and aspirations reflected in those of the other section.

These charges against Mr. Fréret are probably made by persons unacquainted with him or with the operations of his office, resting upon mere hearsay or idle rumors, and if not noticed by the Senate they will die in the hour that gave them birth. But if you instruct the committee to investigate them and his vindication be established (as it surely will be), no public object, no wise or good purpose, will have been accomplished. I suggest to my friend from Colorado, in the absence of specific charges, that this whole matter should be referred to the appropriate committee. What are our committees for if not to take jurisdiction of such matters as these? The Senate should give no attention to any charges affecting the character of public officers or of communities unless after due and careful consideration by one of the committees of this body.

The Senate owes it to itself to assert and maintain its quasi-judicial character in matters of this kind.

Mr. TELLER. This resolution is the ordinary resolution when it is proposed to make an investigation. If the Senator from Louisiana desires to depart from the ordinary rule and offer what he proposed himself in the resolution he submitted yesterday morning, where he did not assail an individual but assailed whole communities, let him make his suggestion. There is no assailing of anybody in this resolution; it is the ordinary resolution that has been presented in this body time after time for a hundred years nearly. If there is any charge at all made in or implied from the resolution, it is because the friends of the Supervising Architect choose to apply it in that way. The proposition made by the Senator from Louisiana is as severe a condemnation as the original resolution. There is no difference whatever between them in that respect. The Architect must go before the committee or evidence must be brought to show whether these charges are true. The charges are not made against the officer; they are made against the administration of the office, for which he may not be responsible at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Colorado to accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TELLER. I do, though it is a non sequitur, for no charges are made against this officer. I do not assume that we can afford to investigate only charges made under this Administration if there should be proof that the same things have occurred under former administrations, and therefore I accept it. I think it is fair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is modified by the mover by the introduction of the language proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say a word in regard to what was said by the Senator from Louisiana. My relations with Colonel Fréret are as friendly as his, and I have just as high an opinion of him as he can possibly have. I must say, however, that I disagree with him as to the proper way in which this thing should be conducted.

Now, as far as Colonel Fréret is concerned, the charges that were made in the Washington Post were distinct and emphatic and gave the names of the persons and the dates.

Mr. SPOONER. And repeated in other papers.

Mr. VEST. I saw them only in that paper, and never heard of them before. To refer this resolution to our committee is simply to put upon us the duty as a preliminary investigation of going through the entire proof. That is absolutely unnecessary. The resolution ought to be either passed or rejected. I never heard of it until the Senator from Colorado introduced it, but as a friend of Colonel Fréret I must be permitted to say to the Senator from Louisiana that I think it would be better to take up these charges made here in a paper published in the capital of the country, and investigate them, than to let the matter go off on any side track. If he were my constituent as he is my friend, I certainly should take that course. I believe he is an honest man; I have no doubt about it, but—and I will say that frankly, and it is my duty to say it—he has men in that department who have been there for years, through all these other scandals, whose names have been connected with them, and if there is any foundation for this resolution it comes from the action of those subordinates, in my judgment. That is my conviction about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Louisiana to submit a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. GIBSON. I was not aware that there were any specific charges upon which the resolution was based. I supposed they were mere newspaper charges. But as the Senator from Missouri informs the Senate that there were specific charges made, with names and dates and everything of that kind, I withdraw my request to the Senator from Colorado and hope to see the resolution pass.

Mr. VEST. I wish the Senator to understand that the charges to which I referred were made in the newspapers. I never heard of them in any other place.

Mr. STEWART. I think since the resolution has been introduced that it had better be passed, and I wish to remark that I have found Mr. Fréret to be a very vigilant and economical officer. There was an appropriation for a public building in my town that had been made for several years, and there were superintendents there, at a considerable expense. Immediately when Mr. Fréret came in he discharged all that were of no use, stopped the expenses, and put out advertisements, and went to work in a very vigorous way; and in my conversation with him in regard to that I found he was making many reforms, and I think he has been working very hard since he has been in for that purpose.

It there is anything in that department among his subordinates that is wrong I think he would like to have it investigated. He has investigated himself to the extent of his power, and I think, this resolution having been offered, he would desire its passage; for I believe he as much as anybody else would like to have anything developed in his department that is wrong, and he will correct it as far as he can.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I feel bound by a sense of honor and duty to say a word in regard to Mr. Hill. I do not desire to go into the merits of the pending resolution, about which I know nothing.

Mr. Hill was an officer of the bureau to which he belonged for many years before he became its chief. He went through all its various grades. He is educated and trained as an architect, and skillful and familiar in all the duties of that bureau.

A controversy grew up in regard to certain contracts made by Mr. Mullett, who had previously been Supervising Architect, as to what were called 15 per cent. contracts, or contracts that allowed the contractor to have 15 per cent. on the amount of the cost of the work done entirely by day's work for tools, implements, and raw materials furnished by the contractors. That system was found to be very expensive, and it was discontinued, and Mr. Hill was placed in charge.

The matter ran along for some time until such contracts under the control of the Treasury Department were entirely set aside. Colonel Casey, an engineer of the United States Army, was at that time superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department building, the work being under his control. He discontinued a similar contract for work to be done on that building, so that all the 15 per cent. contracts were discontinued while I was Secretary of the Treasury, and new contracts were made upon a different basis.

Mr. Hill was, as I believe, an honest, faithful employé, who discharged his duties well, and no allegations were made against him until an investigation was ordered by Congress, perhaps by the Senate, to examine into the work done under his bureau, and especially that on the Chicago custom-house building, and some charges were made in regard to Mr. Hill of a serious character, which would, if true, have greatly affected his reputation.

The result was that the Department suspended him from his duties, but did not dismiss him, pending the investigation. After it was over, upon information from the committee having it in charge that the charges against Mr. Hill had proved to be unfounded and that there was nothing proven in the course of the investigation to affect his character, he was restored. I myself never examined the testimony that was given, but I took the report of the committee or the action of the committee as conclusive, and Mr. Hill was restored to his place. Afterwards he was superseded under a subsequent administration by some other gentleman, I think from Iowa, and Mr. Hill then became a private citizen here in this District, where he is now following his profession as an architect.

The allegation that he has made a fortune or derived any profit from his office except his salary I think must surely be a mistake. Mr. Hill is now a private citizen here engaged in the ordinary work of an architect, employed by private parties in building houses, and so far as I know nothing has been proved that affects in the slightest degree his reputation. It has stood good and untarnished so far as I know anything about it, and now he is employed by some of the leading citizens of Washington and intrusted with buildings that are going on all around us.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, if I were called upon to draught this resolution I would strike out the entire preamble about charges of irregularities, violations of law, etc., and strike out the words "during the administration of the present Supervising Architect" and say:

That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and the same is hereby, authorized and instructed to make, either by the committee or a subcommittee thereof, an investigation into the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and to inquire into the laws, regulations, and customs relating to the erection of public buildings, and report by bill or otherwise.

That would give full authority to make an inquiry not only into the conduct of any particular officer, but the conduct of the department generally, and also the laws, regulations, customs, and practices, with a view to a better method of doing business. That is what I should have more in view than any personal investigation.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator from Colorado will accept that amendment, because it divests the inquiry of any personal character and goes into the whole subject. It is a very important one, and I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. As a member of the committee gives me his approval, I will submit the amendment to strike out the preamble and the words I have suggested in the resolution and make the change I have named.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the preamble and to amend the resolution so as to make it read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and the same is hereby, authorized and instructed to make, either by the committee or a subcommittee thereof, an investigation into the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and to inquire into the laws, regulations, and customs relating to the erection of public buildings; and for that purpose, the committee, or said subcommittee, if appointed, is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HAWLEY. I propose the amendment partly because I do not believe that there has been any Supervising Architect since we have had that office who has gone there with the intent of being corrupt, or who has intentionally violated the law. The salary is such that, while we have had competent men there, I am induced to believe, and everybody does believe, I think, that they went there for the sake of the reputation the office would give them. It can be said of them afterwards during their lives that they were Supervising Architects of the Treasury, and that will assist them in doing a lucrative and honorable business.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

I criticised somewhat the proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] for the reason that I did not think it quite fair to the immediate predecessor of the present occupant to have him subjected to an investigation such as is proposed by this resolution.

Mr. Bell, who was the immediate predecessor of the present Supervising Architect, is a young man from my State, an architect having skill in his profession, and I think the chief architect or substantially so of our State capitol. He came here on his merits as an architect, and I think his administration of the office was an honest administration. It may not have been always wise. I know the difficulties that the Supervising Architects have in respect to the selection of sites for public buildings, and with respect to contracts where competition arises about what stone shall be used or what particular material shall be used in the construction of a building. I have had a recent experience in my State with the present Architect in the selection of a small public building at Ottumwa.

I have received within three or four days letters from the city of Ottumwa in my State asking that the selection of a site be suspended until a further hearing, stating that the young man who had selected the site, an employé of the Architect's office, had only spent a portion of a day there, and that full opportunity had not been given, and so on, and so on. I called at the office of the Supervising Architect, and all the papers were laid before me. Being somewhat familiar with that city myself I found that the young man who had selected the site had selected it with wisdom, so far as I could judge, and therefore I telegraphed to our people that the site had been selected and approved, and I thought it was a good one. I have recently received letters that the people there are well satisfied with the selection of the site. But I can readily see that in the selection of these sites persons who have real estate to sell or who have real estate which may be affected by the selection may be dissatisfied and may feel like making charges against the Supervising Architect; but I trust we shall not enter upon an investigation here suggesting even irregularities or violations of law, unless we have reason to believe that there have been such irregularities or violations.

I find no allegation made even by the Senator from Missouri that the Architect preceding the present one was guilty of violating the law, or that irregularities existed during his administration of the office. Therefore I hope the Senator from Colorado will accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, and thus relieve both these officers from this implication.

Mr. TELLER. I do not understand that the resolution implies any misconduct on the part of the officer. I am quite willing, however, to accept the modification if it shall appear otherwise to members of the Senate.

I believe there has been no time since this bureau has been organized when there has not been a scandal about it. I do not believe that there has been a public building erected in the United States of any considerable value that there has not been more or less scandal about it, and perhaps there never will be; there certainly will not be if for the selection of sites irresponsible men are sent out. The bureau does not have the money to get proper persons, and can not afford to have anybody but some of its employés go out 500 or 1,000 miles away from the Supervising Architect to make the selection of a site. There may be people who are willing to pay for getting a certain selection, and undoubtedly in some instances the officers sent out succumb to that kind of influence. I do not say under this administration, for I am not speaking of it particularly, but during the years past. That, of course, reflects upon the Supervising Architect, whoever he may be.

Since I have been particularly familiar with public affairs we have had four Supervising Architects, every one of whom has been attacked from all over the country about the management of his office. I do not believe a single man of them went out of office with more money than properly belonged to him. The first officer, Mr. Mullett, who was a very capable man, as everybody knows, was bitterly assailed, and the administration of his office denounced in unmeasured terms all over the country. I do not suppose that anybody to-day would charge Mr. Mullett with having been a dishonest man.

When Mr. Hill came in great scandals grew up about the Chicago post-office building. There were undoubtedly errors of judgment in the construction of that building, but I believe the investigation, as stated by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], showed that the Supervising Architect was not guilty of anything improper. He has to have his agents to do these things; he can not attend to them all in detail. It is the system that is wrong. The site of a public building should never be selected by a person from Washington. It should be selected by some commission that should be provided for composed of citizens of the State where the building is to be erected, and that could be easily done by statute, or it could be done by a system that could be established in the Supervising Architect's office, by which the governor of the State, the secretary of state, or some officers of that kind could be an advisory committee at least. Something of that kind should be done to prevent these continued scandals.

There is nobody here who is not familiar with the complaints of the location of the post-office at Binghamton, N. Y. Whether they are well founded or not I do not know, but it is not a good thing that such scandals should always arise against a public officer or a public bureau, and a system that permits it, a system that encourages it, is not a right system. And it is no injustice to an officer when you say that newspaper reports, as there have been now in the papers of both political parties, have attacked the administration of this office. I do not refer to them as particularly attacking the honesty of the head of the bureau, but the system and the employés, the subordinates, the persons who have been sent out to select sites. The system ought to be changed that induces and furthers such attacks. That is all I want.

So far as my personal knowledge of this Supervising Architect is concerned, I repeat that he has struck me as a man of business, and I have never seen any reason to suppose that he was not honest. I have no personal complaint to make against him for anything that has come to my personal knowledge. I might have come here and lodged complaints against him that people are ready to make, but I did not think that was my business. If they have got complaints let them go to this committee. I have no right to investigate them, and I do not want to express an opinion on them. I am not on the committee. I will not have anything to do with this unless the matter comes before the Senate, and then when it comes here I think it will be found that it is a question what shall be the change in the methods of the office, the administration of the bureau. It is a question more of administration than it is of individuals, in my judgment, and it will be found probably that, if their complaints are properly made, they are made because of an improper system that enables people to go out who are not properly qualified to judge or who in some instances, in the past at least, I may say, were improper persons to be selected for that kind of a trust.

So I am willing to adopt the suggestion made by the Senator from Connecticut and accept that as the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is very much more willing to accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] than he would be if he were a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and was to be charged by the Senate, if this suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut should be adopted by the Senate, with the labor which would be involved.

Mr. TELLER. Very likely.

Mr. SPOONER. The proposition is, because of this resolution to investigate certain irregularities which are specifically charged in the press of the country, that out of consideration for the present incumbent the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds must be charged by the Senate with an investigation of the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect from the time that office was created down to date. I respectfully, for one—and I am a working member of that committee—shall ask to be excused from undertaking, without some better support for the proposition than I have heard, so great, and in my judgment so useless a labor.

I have intended, Mr. President, to vote for this resolution without in the slightest degree meaning to thereby put an affront upon the present Supervising Architect. I do not know him. I have never seen him. What I have seen as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of his work I have been for the most part pleased with, and before to-day, in debate upon a kindred subject, I have taken pleasure in bearing testimony on the floor of the Senate to what seemed to me to be a high order of qualification in that gentleman. But if there is any reflection upon him in the preamble of this resolution, it does not come from the Senator from Colorado; it does not originate in the Senate. These charges have been repeatedly published in the newspapers; they have been made specific, and while they have not imputed to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury any personal corruption or dereliction, they are an impeachment of the manner in which the affairs of his office have been conducted.

I should think the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who I believe to be an honest man, would heartily thank the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] for his friendship and his fidelity in inviting under the circumstances this investigation. The charges have been made, and repeatedly made, and I should suppose the Supervising Architect would be not only glad but eager to have them exploded if they are false. That can only be done by investigation.

It is useless to refer the matter to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds preliminarily, as suggested by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], for the reason that we would have no power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, or to ascertain the facts to any greater extent than they are now known.

I know, Mr. President, nothing about any of these charges and no support for any of them except as to one matter. As a member of the committee headed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], on the condition of the civil service, I was called upon to investigate collaterally the selection of the site for a public building at Binghamton, N. Y. The question came within the jurisdiction of that committee because of the action of one of the Federal officers in New York in connection with it, and I say now that the testimony taken before that committee developed the fact that the gentleman who had been sent from Washington to select a site for the public building at Binghamton was guilty of at least the gravest and the grossest impropriety.

I say that upon my responsibility, having investigated the matter in this collateral way. I never should think of imputing that, and I suppose no other Senator would, to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

If there are other cases of the same sort as charged in the newspapers, they ought to be investigated and they ought to be exposed; but that would not necessarily involve, as I have said, personal fault, or even official delinquency in the Supervising Architect. I think one of the gentlemen who have been mentioned unfavorably in connection with the selection of sites, was inherited, so to speak, by the Treasury Department from another administration.

I have been unable to discover any impeachment here of the Supervising Architect which ought to lead to the defeat of this resolution, and I protest as one member of that committee against the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds being charged, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, with an investigation of the conduct of that office from the time it was created. It seems to me utterly needless and that there is nothing in the situation which calls for it.

I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Missouri as to the vice of the present system. It would be very easy for the Senator from Connecticut, if he desires to put upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the duty of investigating that subject and of reporting by bill or otherwise to the Senate, to limit the inquiry in that way and to secure an early report from the committee; but to propose that we shall investigate the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect from the outset seems to me to be altogether too much.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have no pride of opinion or personal preferences in this matter. I do not know that I ever saw the present Supervising Architect, and I had the slightest possible acquaintance with his predecessor. My object in suggesting the amendment was to avoid the appearance of a sort of criminal trial of this man or any other man. I am rather tired of that sort of thing in the absence of any specific and sustained charges. The resolution as it stands does not require that the conduct of Mr. Mullett and Mr. Hill and Mr. Bell shall be inquired into; it authorizes and instructs the committee to make an inquiry into the management of that office. They need not go back over a fortnight, unless they choose to do so. They are to inquire into the way in which things are done, the laws and regulations and customs which govern that office.

I agree with much that has been said by the Senator from Colorado, that it is not a matter of the personal integrity of the Architect for the time being so much as it is a matter of defect in the system, for which the legislative power of the Government is very largely responsible, and the executive to some extent to be sure, for I think there is much discretion in the office; but the hardship is that we have not made the system better than it has been. The resolution simply directs an inquiry into the system, without saying anything about five or ten or fifteen years back. The discretion is left to the committee. If it should seem worth while to inquire into that old and antiquated system under which there were great abuses, paying 15 per cent. for supervision, they are not prevented from doing it; but nobody supposes that is of any consequence now. The abuse was discovered and cured years ago. I do not think the resolution, even if amended as I propose, is open to the criticisms of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. The resolution would then stand in this wise: the committee would be instructed, not authorized, but instructed, to investigate the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, with power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths and to employ a stenographer. I, as a member of that committee, certainly could not put upon this resolution, if passed, the construction suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, and say that the committee would have done its duty and obeyed the order of the Senate by simply making a farcical investigation into the conduct of that office for a couple of weeks or a couple of months. I prefer——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. His objection might be removed by simply inserting the words "as far as the committee may deem necessary," or "such administrations as they may deem necessary."

Mr. HAWLEY. I will make that amendment, that correction, or change suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

So far as may be deemed necessary.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that is needed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think it is.

Mr. HALE. Because resolutions in precisely this form are frequently passed; and it is a question for the committee to settle in the course of the investigation how far it will go back in order to illustrate the present conditions. It clearly would not oblige the committee to investigate the department from the time of its first being created; it is all left with the committee. I presume that was the intention of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado modifies his resolution to read as will now be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and the same is hereby, authorized and instructed to make, either by the committee or a subcommittee thereof, an investigation into the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department as far as it may deem necessary, and to inquire into the laws, regulations, and customs relating to the erection of public buildings; and for that purpose the committee, or said subcommittee, if appointed, is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to the resolution as modified on the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator want a provision for the expenses of the committee?

Mr. TELLER. That can be done afterwards.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, before we pass away from this subject it perhaps may contribute something to relieve the office of the Supervising Architect in this matter of selecting sites by a statement that the site is not selected by the Supervising Architect, but it is approved and virtually selected by the Secretary of the Treasury. In the instance which occurred in the State of Florida I know that the agent of the Supervising Architect sent to that State, took the statement of the leading citizens of the city of Jacksonville and of a large number of people, and the propositions of the different persons proposing to sell. The evidence was reported, the statements of persons not interested, of business men in the city, to the Supervising Architect, and by him submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

I know my own opinion was asked as to the persons who had made these statements, their character, their reputation, and I was called on to give my opinion as to the site to be selected; but I refused to do so, and I was requested to make a statement as to the character of persons giving evidence in the matter and the fact of their being business men and acquainted with the value of property there. Some were for one locality and some for another, and a selection was made, not by the Supervising Architect nor by the person sent by the Department to take this testimony and to report upon all the sites proposed, but the entire evidence was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, examined, and approved or disapproved by him. It will therefore be seen that these charges or statements in regard to Mr. Fréret and his subordinates in the selection of sites are entirely groundless, inasmuch as the selection of sites for public buildings is not made by the Supervising Architect or his subordinates, but is made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

TREASURY BOND PURCHASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate, at the earliest possible moment, a full statement of all purchases of bonds made by the Treasury Department during the period from March 4, 1885, to date, specifying in detail the classes of bonds, amount and date of purchase, the party from whom purchased, the price paid, the market quotations in New York at the date of respective purchases, and in addition thereto a statement of bids rejected, showing date of bid, premium asked, and market quotations; also showing the available surplus in the Treasury on the 1st of each month during the period above named.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN H. PARKER.

Mr. HOAR. At the request of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], I ask leave to report from the Committee on the Judiciary and put on its passage the bill (H. R. 10621) for the removal of the political disabilities of John H. Parker, of Virginia, with an amendment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in line 4, to strike out the words "legal and;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States by reason of participation in the late rebellion, be, and they are hereby, removed from John H. Parker, of Chesterfield County, in the State of Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed—two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

LOUISIANA ELECTION INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that on the first day of the assembling of the Senate after the holiday recess I shall move to take up for action the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election.

Mr. VOORHEES. We could not quite hear the Senator from New Hampshire. I understood him to give notice that he would call up the resolution touching matters in Louisiana after the recess.

Mr. CHANDLER. On the first day of the assembling of the Senate after the holiday recess.

Mr. VOORHEES. I simply desired to understand it.

STATE OF THE SUFFRAGE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I also desire to offer some amendments to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] on the 20th instant in relation to the investigation of elections, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received, ordered to lie on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The amendments are as follows:

1. Strike out the first two lines and insert the following:
"Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to."
2. In the fifth line, strike out the words "month of April last in the States of Rhode Island and Louisiana" and insert the words "year 1888."
3. Strike out the words "in the States of New York and Indiana."

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I only design to remark, Mr. President, that the Senator from New Hampshire of course expects to take up his resolution subject to the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do, but I also expect that there will be so little delay in disposing of it that the chairman of the subcommittee on the tariff bill, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will make no objection to its consideration at that time.

Mr. ALLISON. If it takes no time.

SUGAR AND STANDARD OIL TRUST REPORT.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2511) to withdraw the public lands of the United States in Mississippi from sale at ordinary private entry, and to restrict disposals thereof under general statutes to homestead settlers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first call for further morning business. Is there further morning business?

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed to report favorably from the Committee on Printing a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, for the use of the House and Senate, 5,000 copies of the report, with evidence, lately made by the Committee on Manufactures of the House in relation to the sugar trust and Standard Oil trust, 3,000 copies for the use of the House and 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "5,000" and inserting "4,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was concurred in.

CANCELED LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate, prior to the expiration of the present session of Congress, a list of all homestead, timber-culture, and pre-emption entries to public lands which have been canceled after issuance of final receipt and certificate therefor, during the present administration, for any cause other than voluntary relinquishment. Such list shall be similar in the data supplied to the list of canceled desert-land entries furnished in response to a prior resolution of this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule, and will be printed.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2511, Calendar No. 919.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2511) to withdraw the public lands of the United States in Mississippi from sale at ordinary private entry, and to restrict disposals thereof under general statutes to homestead settlers.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 4, after "United States," to strike out "in the State of Mississippi shall cease to be subject to disposal by sale at ordinary private entry and" and insert "now subject to private entry;" in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "under general statutes in no other manner than" and insert "under and;" and at the end of line 8, after the word "laws," to insert "only;" so as to make the bill read:

That from and after the passage of this act the public lands of the United States now subject to private entry shall be disposed of under and according to the provisions of the homestead laws only.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WALTHALL. I offer the following amendment, which I think will be accepted by the Senator from Kansas:

But this act shall not be so construed as to deny to any State the right to select lands in place or indemnity lands in accordance with existing laws making land grants to States.

This amendment is intended to meet what the Committee on Public Lands consider an erroneous construction put upon the terms of the bill by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the same language appearing in a joint resolution passed at the last session, which has been construed by the Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

But this act shall not be so construed as to deny to any State the right to select lands in place or indemnity lands in accordance with existing laws making land grants to States.

Mr. CALL. I suggest that the amendment should be amended so as to confine it to the State of Mississippi, as the act relates entirely to that State. Otherwise it might imply a construction of the law in regard to which we have no definite information or knowledge.

Mr. WALTHALL. The Senator has overlooked the fact that the act which was originally applicable to Mississippi alone has been made general by the amendment just adopted.

Mr. CALL. I did not understand that. That is precisely what I shall object to. This is a bill, as I understand, confining the disposition of public lands in the State of Mississippi to the homestead law and the provisions of that law.

Mr. PLUMB. It has been so amended by the action of the committee and the action of the Senate as to apply to all the lands of the United States now subject to private entry. In other words, it accomplishes just what the temporary resolution which the Senator was instrumental in having passed at the last session did for this same class of lands in certain States.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad to have that read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. CALL. I will ask the Senator from Kansas to allow that to stand over in order that I may make some suggestions in reference to some amendments that I desire shall be made if we are to pass such a bill as this.

Mr. PLUMB. Of course I shall comply with the request of the Senator from Florida, but I want to call his attention to the fact that we have already passed a joint resolution carrying out this same idea during the existence of this Congress, and which the Senator was anxious about as regards the State of Florida, and was there done at his request. This simply makes permanent this policy, which has heretofore been adopted temporarily by the joint resolution of which I have spoken.

Mr. CALL. I understand that, Mr. President, but there are some limitations that I think should be made—some exceptions.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will understand that the period is very short, and that anything which may involve this question in any serious way would undoubtedly prevent the final passage of the bill.

Mr. CALL. I do not think the amendment I shall propose will be objected to.

Mr. PLUMB. I will not press the matter further at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill resumes its place on the Calendar.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 11878) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 337) granting a pension to Mary E. Johnston.

JAMES TRABUE AND OTHERS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5349, Calendar number 2415.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5349) for the relief of James Trabue, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callahan, and the widow of John Waters. It provides for the payment in full settlement of claims for use and occupation of property by the United States to James Trabue, of $600; to Thornton Thatcher, of $93.33; to Michael Callahan, $113.66; and to Annie M. Williams, late widow of John Waters, deceased, $1,825.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to amend in line 9 by inserting the words "Richard Trabue, executor of," and the word "deceased" after the name "James Trabue."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, after the word "to," it is proposed to insert "Richard Trabue, executor of," and after the name "James Trabue" to insert "deceased;" so as to make the clause read:

To Richard Trabue, executor of James Trabue, deceased, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Richard Trabue, executor of James Trabue, deceased, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callahan, and the widow of John Waters."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the revenue bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I would ask the indulgence of the Senator from Iowa to say to him that last May I introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting establishments of religion and free public schools, and asked the courtesy of the Senate that it might be laid upon the table with a view of addressing the Senate at some time at considerable length upon the subject; but the increasing pressure of public affairs induces me to ask him to allow me to have this resolution, if the Senate will consent, taken from the table, that I may occupy five, or at most, not over ten minutes, and move its reference to the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire to postpone that until later in the day. I think later in the day there will be no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. It will not take more than five minutes now.

Mr. ALLISON. It will not take more than that later in the day.

Mr. BLAIR. It will be a convenience to have the matter off my hands.

Mr. ALLISON. I am pressed on all sides, and after we have spent two or three hours on this bill I shall consent to give way to the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. I will not press the request now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]?

Mr. ALLISON. I can not at this moment. Later in the day I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 9051.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers; and

A bill (H. R. 10323) to incorporate the American Historical Association.

PACIFIC COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. DOLPH. On Wednesday last there was a communication received from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of June 11, 1888, such correspondence as has been found of record from April 15, 1861, to August 20, 1866, of the War Department with the division commanders of the Pacific and the department commanders of the Columbia and California, in relation to the subject of raising and organizing volunteer troops for the purpose of guarding the overland and inland mail and emigrant routes. The communication was laid on the table for future action. I move now that the communication be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the substitute, beginning with paragraph 313.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE I.—COTTON MANUFACTURES.

313. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn (not wound upon spools), whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 10 cents per pound; valued at over 25 cents per pound and not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 18 cents per pound; valued at over 40 cents per pound and not exceeding 50 cents per pound, 23 cents per pound; valued at over 50 cents per pound and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, 28 cents per pound; valued at over 60 cents per pound and not exceeding 70 cents per pound, 33 cents per pound; valued at over 70 cents per pound and not exceeding 80 cents per pound, 38 cents per pound; valued at over 80 cents per pound and not exceeding $1 per pound, 48 cents per pound; valued at over $1 per pound, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. In line 1211 I move to strike out "10 cents per pound" and insert "35 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to make the item read:

313. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn (not wound upon spools), whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is necessary in order to discuss any of the items in regard to these cotton yarns, to discuss the entire schedule upon that subject and to notice the remarkable fact which I had occasion to mention in the Senate some time since, that the Committee on Finance have seen proper to increase the duty upon the cheaper qualities of cotton yarn, whilst they allow the duty to remain the same upon the higher-priced articles. I have not the slightest question but that it is in accordance with the demands of the manufacturers. The testimony taken before the Finance Committee and before what was known as the Morrison tariff committee all goes to show that the manufacturers of New England, recognizing the fact that they can no longer compete as to the cheaper cotton yarns and cottons with the Southern manufacturers at Augusta and other places in the South, now demand this additional protection in order to secure them in their specialty of manufacturing the finer cotton goods. Even a superficial examination of this schedule will show that my statement is correct.

Analyzed, this schedule is as follows: Upon cotton yarns valued at 25 cents and not exceeding 40 cents a pound the existing law imposes a duty of 44.10 per cent. ad valorem, the House bill 35 per cent. ad valorem, and the Senate bill 44.10 per cent. Over 25 but not exceeding 40 cents a pound, the existing law imposes a duty of 42.30 per cent., the House bill imposes a duty of 35 per cent., and the Senate bill imposes a duty of 50.75. The existing law, as I have stated, is 42.30 per cent., and the committee have increased it over the existing law 8.45, that is, upon yarns that are 25 cents and not exceeding 40 cents to the pound.

Over 40 cents but not exceeding 50 cents, the existing law imposes an ad valorem duty of 45.38 per cent., the House bill 40 per cent., and the Senate bill 52.18 per cent., an increase over the existing law of the difference between 45.38 and 52.18.

On the yarns costing 50 cents a pound, but not exceeding 60 cents, the existing law imposes a duty of 45.21 per cent. ad valorem, the House bill 40 per cent. ad valorem, and the Senate bill 50.64 per cent. ad valorem, which is an increase of the difference between 45.21 in the existing law and 50.64 in the Senate substitute.

Over 60 cents a pound, but not exceeding 70 cents, the existing law imposes a duty of 50.89 per cent. ad valorem, the House bill 40 per cent. ad valorem, and the Senate bill 50.90 per cent. ad valorem, or an increase of one one-hundredth per cent. over the existing tariff.

Now we come to the finer articles. These cotton yarns are the raw material out of which the cotton manufacturer makes the goods. According to the doctrine so often enunciated in this Chamber, the increase upon the raw material must be followed through all the schedule by an increase upon the manufactured article.

In the classification of over 70 cents and not exceeding 80 cents, the duty is kept the same as under the existing law. Over 80, but not exceeding $1, the duty is kept the same. Over $1, under the existing law, the duty is 50 per cent., under the House bill 40 per cent., and under the Senate bill 50 per cent. So on the higher-priced qualities of cotton yarn, which is the raw material of the manufacturer, that duty is kept the same, but it is increased systematically upon all the lower grades.

The reason of this is plain when we read the testimony taken before the committee. It is a notorious fact in manufacturing circles throughout the country that the machinery of the New England manufacturers has been changed to the manufacture of the higher-priced cotton. But upon the cheap goods that go into the ordinary lives of the people of this country, that are used by the poor, by the workingmen, by the laborers, by the farmers who are dependent upon their daily toil, the duty has been increased, because they are willing in New England to surrender this manufacture to the people of the South and to retain the manufacture of the higher-priced and more expensive articles.

What is the necessity for this increased duty? Is the cotton-manufacturing industry of the United States in a languishing condition? Is there anything to-day that calls for the iron hand of protection in order to make these manufactures self-sustaining?

I find that we exported in 1887 over $14,000,000 of manufactured products of cotton, including wearing apparel. In 1888 we exported over $13,000,000. Speaking accurately, we exported in 1887 $14,929,342 worth of manufactured cotton goods, including wearing apparel. In 1888 we exported $13,013,189 worth.

We are able to-day to compete with the foreign manufacturer. It is true that we imported in 1888 some $47,000,000 worth of these manufactured goods, but what does that prove? it proves that the American manufacturers are taking their full pound of flesh in the way of profit, and therefore the foreigners are able still, even with this high protective duty, to come into the American market and sell this amount of goods to the American consumer.

We know that the American manufacturer can supply the domestic market, that he has the capacity to do it, and if it is not done it is because the American manufacturer is taking advantage of the tariff duty and selling up to the full limit with the tariff tax imposed upon the imported article—that is to say, as I believe to be the case with all importations, the cotton manufacturer comes up to almost the margin of the foreign cost, with the tariff added, and undersells it but a few cents, but if circumstances do not require this, he sells for the full amount of the cost of the imported article with the tariff duty added.

To show that we are able to compete with the foreign importer, I ask the Secretary to read the testimony of one of the Senators who formed this bill, a Senator who has taken a prominent part in this debate, and who two years ago went over this entire question and stated emphatically that the manufacturer of cotton goods was able to compete with the foreign manufacturer, and that the only reason we were not supplying all the South American markets was because we had lost the carrying trade for some reason which that Senator did not choose to mention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

He who has watched the progress of our manufacturing industries for the last twenty years knows this to be a fact, that in nearly all that they consume in South America, in the Central American states, and in Mexico, and which is produced in this country and in Europe, we, to-day, need no protective tariff to protect our home markets against the foreign producers. In all the cheaper fabrics, and they are the only ones for which they afford a market, we can and do compete with the world. As to all fabrics, iron, steel, wood, and leather goods, largely made by machinery, and in which manual labor is comparatively a small element, we need no protection whatever. We can make and sell them on equal terms with the rest of the world. This is so true in the iron and steel industries that I believe the exportation of iron and steel goods to those and other foreign markets within the last year amounted to over $16,000,000, and yet we can not compete with England in all the steel goods; but in machinery, in agricultural implements, the hoe, the ax, the shovel, the auger, the bit, nails, wire, and mowers, reapers, plows—in all an agricultural people consume, we can and do.

These are goods that Mexico and Central and South America demand, and will buy from us, and are buying from us to a certain extent to-day, and will continue to buy if we can ship them there. This is true also as to cotton fabrics. All the cheaper grades of cotton goods we can produce in this country, and compete successfully with the manufacturers of the world, to-day. I will not limit, however, quite so closely—I have been told, within the year, our producers of the cheaper, coarser cotton fabrics have been able to produce and export, and sell, in the English colonies their goods in competition with the English manufactured goods, because they were enabled to produce them cheaper by the aid of labor-saving machinery; and this is proved by the fact that our yearly exports of them amount to $12,000,000; of many products of leather all this is equally true.

Of leather goods we export to a foreign market about $10,000,000 in value; and you may go through with lines of goods those people buy and consume, and you will establish the fact that by the development of our manufacturing industries by the use of machinery we are able to make and sell to them as cheap as any one else those goods of which they consume considerable quantities and which make up their foreign commerce, but which they now the more largely buy in Europe, and we are unable to compete with Germany, with England, and with France only when they monopolize, control the transportation, the carrying trade. I am asked to explain why we can do this and yet pay more for our labor. I answer, because our manufacture of the goods I have mentioned is largely done by machinery; in the use of machinery but little manual labor is required to make them.—Congressional Record, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, part 5, page 4686, May 19, 1886.

Mr. VEST. That is a valuable contribution to this debate, for several reasons. The honorable Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] who made that statement was certainly cognizant of all the facts. He has made a specialty of this tariff question; and he states very emphatically that we are able to export to the English colonies these coarser cotton fabrics and compete successfully with the English manufacturers.

He asks, it is true, why it is that we can not command this South American trade; and gives no reason why we have lost the carrying trade between the United States and the countries of South America. Sir, there can be no sort of question but that we have lost that carrying trade on account of this high protective tariff.

I have before me a statement furnished by the Bureau of Statistics that is the most shameful exhibit as against the United States that can be conceived. We, a people of more than sixty million in number, in whose veins flows the mingled tide of conquest and aggression, with all the elements to command both the land and the ocean, with 10,000 miles of seaboard, with all the materials to build ships either of iron or of wood, to-day permit Great Britain to pass by our shores and take at our very doors the South American trade. Yet my honorable friend from New York alludes to that fact, but does not give the reason.

Without reading this table, I want to give the aggregate. There are the South American states, commencing with Mexico and ending with Peru. The total amount exported from the United Kingdom of Great Britain to those countries is $46,456,727 annually, and the United States exports to the same countries $6,335,701. I submit the table, which is as follows:

Total values of the exports of domestic manufactures of cotton from the United Kingdom and the United States to Mexico, Central and South America, and to the West Indies in 1886.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, April 17, 1888.

A brother Senator furnished me some weeks ago one of the most interesting books I have ever read. It is the account of the South American Commission by Mr. Curtis, a newspaper correspondent, now in this city, who was secretary of that commission. It developed to me a new world in South America of which I had never dreamed. His description of the Argentine Republic sounds like romance, but he gives facts and figures beyond any question. Buenos Ayres, a city of half a million people, has one bank with $40,000,000 capital, another with eight million, another with five million; it has magnificent public buildings, with universities, libraries, and all the comforts and improvements of modern life. The Argentine Republic imports $100,000,000 of manufactured goods yearly, one-third from England, and one-fifth each from France and Germany, whilst this country ranks with Sweden, Denmark, and Chili. The United States flag, Mr. Curtis says, is seldom seen in a South American port. There are twenty-three lines of steam-ships running to Buenos Ayres from Europe, but the Stars and Stripes are rarely seen upon the oceans that surround the South American countries.

Why is this? It is because we have cut off the reciprocity of commerce. Some years ago when serving upon a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, in the city of New York, a gentleman appeared before us from Boston, who said he had built a ship to go into the South American trade. As a matter of patriotism, if not of profit, he declared that he wanted to participate as a citizen of the United States in that immense commerce. He had proposals to build an iron vessel from Mr. John Roach and from Harlan & Hollingsworth, but found that on the Clyde he could build this iron vessel, called a commercial tramp, for $20 less on the ton than he could in the United States.

He had it built abroad, came back to the United States, applied for American registry, and was told he could not put the vessel he had built himself under the American flag because it was foreign-built. He loaded it with Yankee notions, went under the British flag to South America, sold his Yankee notions at a large profit, and then undertook to put into his vessel an incoming cargo, because when a ship, like a railroad train, goes loaded only one way it goes into bankruptcy. When he undertook to load for the return voyage he found he must load with copper and wool, because at Callao, upon the western coast, where he had gone, the exportations of that country were wool and copper. He loaded with copper and wool, for he could get nothing else; fruits were perishable, and he could not load with them. He came back to the United States and undertook to enter our ports in order to sell this wool and this copper to American manufacturers. According to his own statement he was met with this prohibitory tariff duty, and the result was he was compelled to take his cargo to England and sell to the English manufacturers, who made out of that wool and copper the manufactured article for export to other countries.

Mr. ALLISON. Why could he not sell the wool here?

Mr. VEST. Because there was a high duty upon wool.

Mr. ALLISON. If the consumer pays the duty, I do not see any difference to him.

Mr. VEST. Ah, that is the very question. I am glad to hear the Senator admit that the consumer pays it.

Mr. ALLISON. I say if the consumer pays it, as the Senator says.

Mr. VEST. Yes; but this importer under that tariff duty could not find the profitable market that he could find abroad. He found that if he paid that duty he would run the risk of not being able to sell at a price that would pay him the cost in South America together with the tariff duty imposed upon the article. Does the Senator admit that that is the operation of the tariff? Does he admit that the duty is paid by the consumer?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not admit anything at all. I was merely asking the Senator to explain on his theory of the tariff how it was that this man could not sell in our market.

Mr. VEST. With due respect to the Senator, I shall fail to reach his intellectual apprehension if he can not see the difference between an importer taking no risk at all by going into a free-trade market and his paying an enormous tariff duty and taking the risk of selling at a profit inside of that market. This importer could go to England and know exactly what he would get and take no risk, but if he paid this tariff he was out so much more, which he had to get back in order to make him whole upon his voyage. If the Senator can not see that, argument is utterly inadequate.

We have lost the carrying trade through the operations of this tariff. What we on this side seek to do is to take the tax off from raw materials as far as we can. We want to extend the markets of the people of the United States. We want to break down this almost commercial Chinese wall that is being steadily built around this country.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator tell me just the advantage——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. What would be the advantage in going 3,000 miles after an article that you can get here?

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes, the people can get it here with enormous profits in the pockets of New England manufacturers. That is what the Senator means by getting it here.

Mr. DAWES. The profit of the New England manufacturer is not what he pays for his raw material. If this importer finds such trouble in selling here in our market, is it not because somebody else sells here in our market, and that is the American producer?

Mr. VEST. He finds this trouble, that he must get back the tariff duty on the imported article. Senators on the other side declare that the tariff duty comes off the manufacturer and there stops.

Mr. DAWES. That is what I said the other day. He can not get it off from the consumer here. If there is somebody here to produce it he can not get it off from the consumer here. Our policy is that he shall not get it off from the consumer here. That is the end and purpose of a protective tariff, to keep him off from the consumer and let the consumer here and the dealer here deal with each other.

Mr. VEST. I have heard that over and over again, and yet the manufacturers come in the name of the consumer and besiege the Committee on Finance to put up the tariff duty. For what? Is it their philanthropic zeal for the people who consume the manufactured article? Why are they so much interested? Why do they want to keep out these imported goods? I have read here, day after day, the evidence of those manufacturers, one of them a gentleman who carried his plows over into Canada and sold them for 15 per cent. less there than he did in the United States, and yet made a profit; another, the largest lead-mine owner in Missouri, who testified that the instrumentalities, the picks and shovels, the powder, and rails upon the tracks under the ground that were used by the miners were all under a heavy import duty which was paid by the miners themselves. Who are to know how this thing operates if it is not the men who are engaged in the business?

Why are the manufacturers here besieging this Capitol and thronging these halls and corridors and demanding additional duty? The Senator from Massachusetts says to protect the consumer. Disinterested philanthropy! Christian zeal! Who believes it? It is to increase their own profits, because when they can exclude the foreign competition and have a market to themselves they then by combinations and trusts put it up to the price that will give them a large profit, and if necessary they shut down their factories when they have an overproduction without regard to the workman.

I know that that is the salient point in this whole question. If Senators on the other side of this Chamber can convince the people of the United States that this tariff tax does not come out of the consumer that is the end of this question. All you have to do is to put up your tariff and construct a commercial Elysium such as the world never dreamed of, not even Plato in his model and imaginary republic.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. CHACE. That is what we have done. The world has never seen such a commercial Elysium as has existed in this country for the last twenty-five years.

Mr. VEST. Of course we have got an Elysium for New England.

Mr. CHACE No such prosperity has ever existed on earth as has existed in this country.

Mr. VEST. What you would do beggars all description. The way to put this country on a pinnacle such as can be reached by no imagination whatever is to go on increasing your tariff duty and keeping it up.

Mr. DAWES. I want a little instruction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. I do.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator says this opposition to duty upon raw material arises from the manufacturer, so as to increase his profit. Then he gets his raw material cheaper by this duty, or else he does not increase his profit. The idea that the manufacturer wants a duty on raw material for the purpose of increasing his profits is incomprehensible to me upon any other principle than the conviction on the part of the manufacturer that by keeping out the foreign producer he will ultimately have cheaper raw material furnished him here at his own door. There is no other principle upon which he can be said to be actuated by a selfish desire to make more out of his product.

Mr. VEST. I was unfortunate if I said any such thing as the Senator from Massachusetts ascribes to me. I did not say that the manufacturers, all of them, oppose free raw material. I said the Senators on the other side of the Chamber opposed it in this bill, and the Democratic party has attempted to take the tax off of raw material in the bill that came from the other House.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri kindly point to one article that can be fairly called raw material, except wool, that is placed upon the free-list by the House bill that is not placed upon the free-list by the Senate bill? I do not admit that wool is a raw material, but we will make that exception for the purpose of the argument for the time being.

Mr. VEST. I suppose the Senator from Rhode Island holds with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that there is no such thing as raw material.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator name an article that he considers raw material?

Mr. VEST. Does not the Senator consider tin-plate raw material?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means.

Mr. VEST. The protected article is raw material to the man who buys it and undertakes to change its form into something else. Everything is raw material to the man who commences another process. Pig-iron is raw material to the man who makes structural iron and steel beams. The fallacy of the Senators upon the other side is that they commence with the raw material only in the ground or upon the trees.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator from Missouri explain upon what article under his theory a duty could be placed. If pig-iron is raw material for the structural-iron manufacturer, and structural iron is raw material for the bridge builder, and steel watch-springs are raw material for the watch manufacturer, where in this long process is a duty to be fixed? Upon what article is it to be fixed?

Mr. VEST. We come back to the fundamental difference between the two parties in all these arguments, and it is going in a circle. We come back to the fundamental difference. We say that no duty should be put upon anything for the sake of protection alone. It is useless to talk about what is raw material. We say you have no right and it is unjust to tax the consumers in the United States for the purpose of building up any special industry without regard to the necessities of the Government. I am willing to impose duties in order to raise the amount that is necessary to sustain this Government and to pay its expenses economically administered, but when you enter into the broad domain of limitless protection, as the Chicago platform did and as the Senators now propose to do, simply for protection, without regard to the necessities of the Government, then I say you strike down the very theory of free institutions, which is equal rights to all and exclusive privileges to none.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator now to be in favor of that method of taxation which will raise the necessary money to support the Government from duties on imports. If it be true that the consumer pays these duties and that the price of the domestic article is enhanced to a sum equivalent to the duties, is not that the most expensive method of taxation that can possibly be devised, because for every dollar that goes to the Government $10 go into the pockets of the men who make the same article in this country, no matter what the rate is?

Mr. VEST. We are not discussing now the question of the expense; we are discussing the question of the justice of the tax.

Mr. ALLISON. But I want the Senator to explain why it is that by his method he would impose taxes upon articles imported.

Mr. VEST. I would impose taxes in order to raise the revenue necessary to support the Government; and the adjustment of the details of those taxes should be honestly and equitably distributed with regard to the demands and rights of all sections of the country and of every individual in it.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say that if I understand the Senator now, he is willing to levy duties upon cotton goods, for example, to maintain the Government. Suppose a duty of 1 cent a pound is levied upon cotton yarns instead of 10 cents, and then nine-tenths of the entire consumption of the yarns in this country are manufactured here. According to the theory of the Senator that 1 cent is added to the entire consumption of yarns and only one-tenth goes into the Treasury and the other nine-tenths are paid by consumers of yarns.

Mr. VEST. It is no theory; it is a question of actual fact.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now that being the fact, I submit to the Senator that his method of taxation is the most unjust and oppressive that could possibly be devised.

Mr. VEST. How does the Senator remedy it by his bill? Instead of 1 cent he puts 70 cents.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not believe in the theory of the Senator.

Mr. VEST. What other theory can obtain, unless the Senator holds the manifest absurdity, to my mind, that the manufacturer pays the duty, and that is the end of it. That he brings the goods in here and loses the whole gate-money, throws it away, and this right in the teeth of the testimony of the American manufacturers themselves.

Mr. BLAIR. Is it not, then, the theory that it is not paid at all, because the foreign article is not sold here?

Mr. VEST. If nobody pays it, if it does not exist at all, as a matter of course we are engaged in something like a Midsummer Night's Dream of moonshine and fairies.

Mr. BLAIR. I submit to the Senator that the Republican position is that the foreign article is not consumed here, it is not paid for, it is not traded for, it does not come to America at all, and our theory keeps it away, and then nobody pays it because the foreign article is not sold.

Mr. VEST. From the export and import duties of the United States we see how much is brought into this country.

Mr. BLAIR. That is because our theory is not carried out.

Mr. VEST. Forty-odd million dollars of manufactured cotton goods are brought here. Who pays that? The Senator from New Hampshire says nobody. That is a very large donation.

Mr. BLAIR. No, I said nothing of the kind. The theory is not carried out. Those foreign goods have no business here. The Republican theory is debauched by Democratic free-trade doctrines, and the foreign goods find their market here in the United States and are consumed in the United States, when, if our theory was carried out, they would remain at home, our own people would manufacture those goods, and they would sell to their own people, and we should consume what was created here. It is altogether in carrying out the theory.

Mr. VANCE. Take the $12,081,000 that went into the Treasury of the United States to support the Government last year. If these miserable foreigners' goods were kept out, where would we have got that money?

Mr. VEST. Nobody paid it!

Mr. VANCE. It seems that the importer pays it, and nobody pays it, and yet it supports the Government!

Mr. DAWES. I will tell the Senator where we get that money. We get it by a tariff for revenue only.

Mr. VEST. Have you got one now?

Mr. VANCE. If the foreign products were kept out, how would you get that $12,081,000?

Mr. DAWES. By tariff for revenue only.

Mr. BLAIR. I will answer the Senator's question, if he directed it to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has the floor. Does he still yield?

Mr. BLAIR. We will pay that $12,081,000 out of the increased taxable property we have here in the United States. Our own people will be that much wealthier. We can by virtue of the employment of our own people and the creation of wealth among our own people amply pay the expenses of our own people.

Mr. VANCE. How shall we lay the tax?

Mr. BLAIR. We can lay it on North Carolina whisky, if you please, for one thing.

Mr. VANCE. Except that portion used in the arts for the manufacture of hair dyes or restorers for your people up North. That comes in free by this bill. [Laughter.] One of the blessings of protection is the encouragement of the hair in the place where it ought to grow.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senator that, if it is necessary, we can protect the Senator's peanuts also, in order that statesmanship may not fail in the State of North Carolina. Now, Mr. President, I will give the Senator my theory as to whether it is Republican or not——

Mr. VEST. Would it suit the Senator just as well to give us his theory in his own time?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly, if the Senator prefers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. But the Senator was promulgating his theory with such audacious brilliancy that I thought it called for a little explanation.

Mr. VEST. I take it for granted I am not to be subjected to a cross-fire ad libitum.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the Senator go on and illuminate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be in order.

Mr. VEST. The assertion has been made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], in his celebrated speech at Springfield, Ill., just before the commencement of the last canvass, that the expenses of the Government were paid out of internal-revenue taxes and imports mainly collected on luxuries. That was his statement. Now, let us see how this tariff duty does operate, which is paid by nobody. We collected in 1887, on articles of necessity, $102,199,129 under the tariff of 1883.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to suggest to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. ALDRICH. About $60,000,000 of that is collected on sugar.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will just content his soul in patience for a minute I will come to sugar. On sugar we collected $51,778,948 besides the $102,199,129 on absolute necessaries. On luxuries we collected $34,401,320. The total revenue from customs was $188,379,397. That is the absolute mathematical division, but still we are told——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator please give his authority for the statement which he is making?

Mr. VEST. I give the statement made by myself, and prepared by an expert under my supervision.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator mean to say that he made the computation himself?

Mr. VEST. I do not mean to say that I went through every item, but I believe it is absolutely correct.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator be kind enough to give the name of the expert?

Mr. VEST. I will give the whole table. It is as follows:

On works of art	$629,191
On carriages and parts thereof	89,728
On clocks and watches	356,504
On all fancy articles	2,456,398
On gold and silver manufactures	167,575
On jewelry and precious stones	900,474
On liquors, spirits, and wines	7,194,147
On musical instruments	358,093
On manufactured silks of all kinds	13,938,096
On tobacco and cigars	8,311,114
Total	34,401,320

The revenue from customs in 1886 would therefore be divided thus:

On articles of necessity	$102,199,129
On sugar	51,778,948
On luxuries	34,401,320
Total revenue from customs	188,379,397

Now, we have a tax on sugar of 80 per cent. That is a necessary:

	Per cent.
Tax on sugar	80
Tax on rice	112
Tax on salt	83
Tax on corn starch	93
Tax on potatoes	46
Tax on woolen dress goods costing 22 cents a yard	71
Tax on common cloth	91
Tax on woolen hosiery	70

	Per cent.
Tax on flannels	72
Tax on common woolen shawls	87
Tax on cotton hosiery	45
Tax on cotton-bagging	54
Tax on plain earthenware	55
Tax on window-glass	86
Tax on plate-glass	147
Tax on steel rails	80

Yet we are told that the import duties of the United States are upon luxuries and not upon the necessaries of life! But, as a matter of course, if nobody pays this, or if it is not paid by the consumer, then it amounts to nothing, and we are engaged here in the most absolutely frivolous amusement that outside of children was ever known in the civilized world, and we are from day to day and from year to year fighting for a reduction of taxation upon the foreign importer with no interest upon the part of the people of this country in regard to the matter.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who I am sorry to see has just left the Chamber, in two articles (I said the other day one, but I have ascertained since that he has written another; the one I saw was in the Forum; the last one is in Harper's Magazine) undertakes to show that the consumer does not pay the import duty by taking up the article of coffee. As I told him the other day, that is the only single article in the commerce of the world that he could have selected which would approximate to anything like proof of his proposition. The idea that a man pays 70 per cent. to get his goods into this market and throws away the 70 per cent. and sells below what he could sell abroad for seems to me worthy only of a place in a lunatic asylum. I cross a bridge and it costs me 5 cents a pound upon my product in order to get to a market upon the other side. Does anybody mean to tell me that I do not put that toll upon the price of that article when I get across? Is it not as much a part of the cost of that article to me in that market as if it were my labor, my toil, my sweat? Yet we are told that nothing becomes of this tax; it melts away; it is put upon the importer, and that is the last of it.

In regard to the import duty upon coffee, I stated to the Senator from Vermont that his position, in my judgment, was incorrect, and we might as well settle it now. Coffee is the most speculative of all the articles known to the commerce of the world. It has been in the hands of a Portuguese syndicate, assisted by a few agents in the city of New York, and it furnishes no sort of legitimate argument or conclusion in regard to the subject in controversy between the two sides of this Chamber.

I read from the best work upon that subject, "Coffee from Plantation to Cup," by Mr. F. B. Thurber—not a political essay by any means, but a most exhaustive and elaborate description of the whole coffee culture and coffee trade in all parts of the world. He says:

In view of these conflicting opinions, it is well to keep in mind some peculiarities of coffee culture and of the staple itself, which may sometimes mislead calculations or temporarily suspend logical results. It takes, as we have seen, from three to four years for new coffee plantations to come into bearing; hence the necessity for a considerable outlay of capital to open a plantation; hence, also, ample working room for speculative operations to move in before the field can possibly respond to the market. And speculation finds still further assistance in the nature of the article, which, not deteriorating, but improving with age, constitutes an excellent security on which to borrow money. There is, therefore, no doubt that a "ring," backed by sufficient capital, could for a long time keep up an artificial situation.

That is the reason why coffee fluctuates in the market from year to year, and is, as I have said, the best subject known to commerce for speculations and combinations and trusts. In answer to the statement of the Senator from Vermont, that coffee has been higher since 1872, when we took the import duty off, than ever before, I shall put on record the prices of coffee from 1858 to 1880, showing that after 1872 it fluctuated as I have stated:

Year.	Lowest.	Highest.	Average.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
1858	13½	20	16.13
1859	13½	16	14.79
1860	14½	18½	16.51
1861	15½	25	18.38
1862	24½	35	27.50
1863	33	41	37.04
1864	40	60	49.10
1865	24	51	25.82
1866	24	28½	26.08
1867	24	27	24.75
1868	21	27	23.41
1869	21	25	23.02
1870	19	23	21.19
1871	17½	26½	21.29
1872	18½	25	21.30
1873	19	34	23.63
1874	22	35	26.68
1875	24	30	26.71
1876	18	26	21.57
1877	22	25½	23.82
1878	20½	25	22.48
1879	23½	24¾	24.14
1880	18	24	22.62

Says this author:

The decline in the receipts from 322,700,479 pounds in 1871 to 277,636,258 pounds in 1872 was due to a short crop in the Brazils, from whence the bulk of supplies came, and to the failure of the Java crop. On July 1 the remaining duty of 3 cents was removed, and yet the average gold price of fair to prime Rio was 2½ cents above that of 1871; Maracaibo and Laguayra averaged nearly 2 cents higher, while Java was 21.3 cents, as against 21.29 cents the year preceding, the lowest price being made in November, when it sold at 18½ to 19½ cents; the highest in January, when it was held at 23 to 25 cents.

All through these reports, without regard to duty, it will be seen that the supply regulated the price, together with the manipulations of the syndicate under the control of the Portuguese importers and their agents in the city of New York.

Now, Mr. President, take tea, to which the Senator from Vermont alluded the other day, and which is not under the control of any syndicate.

The price of tea has corresponded almost exactly with the removal of the import duty. I have here a communication in regard to coffee, made by an expert, a coffee merchant, and furnished to me at my request. It is as follows:

An examination of the course of prices of coffee in New York during the years 1870-1874 shows that the advance in prices, when the duty was reduced and removed, was due to other causes than the alteration of the tariff.

Prices of coffee rose in 1870 from 10¾ cents in January to 17½ cents in December, following the natural law of supply and demand, consumption having increased while importations had diminished from 243,000,000 pounds in 1869 to 235,000,000 in 1870. In January, 1871, the duty was reduced from 5 to 3 cents, and the immediate effect of the reduction was to lower the price of coffee from 17½ cents to 15¾ cents. It remained at about this figure for the next six months, varying but slightly, and touching 15½ cents in July, 1871. From this latter date there was a rapid and constantly increasing advance in consequence of a probable short supply from Brazil, from whence nearly all the coffee used in the United States is imported.

In December, 1871, the price was 20½ cents; in January, 1872, it was 21¾ cents. The existing duty of 3 cents was removed in July, 1872, and the immediate effect of this change in the tariff was to lower the price to 19½ cents; short supply again counteracted the effect of the reduction of the duty and caused a further advance. During the years 1870 to 1874 the fluctuations in the average prices followed the supply, rising with a short production, or an anticipated short supply, falling with increased importations, or anticipated increased supply, speculation always exaggerating the fluctuations in one sense and the other.

In 1870, duty 5 cents, the average price was 16.33 cents, the importation 235,000,000 pounds.

In 1871, duty 5 cents, the average price was 15.91 cents, the importation 317,000,000 pounds; the price was lower because the supply was larger.

In 1872, January to June, duty 3 cents, the average price was 19.48 cents; July to December, free, the average price was 17.27 cents; importations for the year were 273,000,000 pounds. Notwithstanding the reduction of 2 cents in the duty, prices for the first six months were higher by reason of a smaller supply; when the duty was totally removed the average price shows a decline of 2.21 cents, as against 3 cents duty removed.

In 1873, free, average price was 19.99 cents; the importation 266,000,000 pounds, showing an advance in price in consequence of reduced supply.

In 1874, free, average price was 21.08 cents; the importation was 268,000,000 pounds, showing an advance in price because the supply was still short and had not kept pace with a consumption which, like the population, was steadily increasing.

In 1875, free, average price was 18.87 cents; the importation 350,000,000 pounds; a decline had taken place, as the supply had largely increased.

During these years fluctuations in prices were very great—much too great to be accounted for by the changes in the tariff—yet careful examination reveals the effect of these changes, temporarily lowering prices, although overcome by the speculative activity induced by actual and anticipated short supplies. In this connection I would call your attention to an article in the Nation for April 5, 1888. I would also remark that coffee has always been a very speculative commodity in New York; often local and temporary causes affect the course of prices, and by disturbing the regularity of averages render it difficult to discern the real influences at work.

There are other articles of a staple nature which may be more profitably studied as being less liable to capricious and irregular disturbing causes. Tea is very largely consumed, and its prices are rarely affected by speculation or similar influences; they follow very steadily the ordinary and regular laws of trade.

The duty on tea, 15 cents per pound, was removed on July 1, 1872. The inclosed table shows the prices of various kinds and grades in New York from June to December, 1872, and it will be seen that the removal of the duty was followed immediately by a corresponding decline in prices—which decline was steadily maintained through the succeeding months in the absence of any other important disturbing influence.

My examination of this question with the authority of persons entirely disconnected from any political party, has been to the effect that coffee is an exception to the rule, and it is the only single article that the Senator from Vermont could have selected in all commerce that would seem for a single instant to bear out his conclusion that the consumer does not pay the import duty, or the largest portion of it, upon every article brought into this country.

For the present, sir, until we reach the article of cotton goods, when I shall have something else to say upon the subject, I will close my remarks.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, it would afford me great gratification if the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] would indorse the whole of the speech from which he has read a portion, although I confess to a degree of gratification that he indorses, as I assume he does, that part which he has had read from the Secretary's desk.

I said then that as to the cheaper fabrics which are manufactured in this country, in the cost of which manual labor plays an unimportant part, with the raw material produced here, we can compete with the world; and I repeat with emphasis that declaration.

I wish to remark further that as to the South American states and Mexico, and the Central American states, those were the goods which they import for consumption, and I then regarded it as the duty of Congress to build up a foreign trade with those states in those products, and I do now.

It is not unlikely that it would be well if in the preparation of a tariff bill we could so adjust the rates that as to such cheaper fabrics there should be a nominal duty, or none at all. I suppose our manufacturers would be indifferent on that subject and I should be indifferent, but the difficulty with reference to the construction of a tariff bill is that that is practically impossible, as the line is so shadowy between the lower-priced and the higher-priced goods.

I said that I would be gratified if the Senator would indorse the whole argument from which he has read a part. Then I was in favor, as I am now, of fairly, adequately paying to our own steam-ship lines a just compensation for carrying American mails. For the purpose of striking down our trade, England and Germany would underbid our steam-ship lines with reference to the carrying of mails and practically carry them for nothing to destroy this commerce that I wanted to build up then and want to build up now; and the Senator from Missouri, in the interest—I do not mean to charge that he was interested, but the effect of his action was in the interest—of English and German manufacturers, resisted a proposition of that kind as he resists it now.

We have been cited to free-trade England as an example for us to follow. Does not the Senator know that England to-day affords the highest protection of any nation upon the face of the earth to her manufacturers? Perhaps I made that statement a little strong; I should say a very high protection to them.

I have before me the amount which England appropriates for the support of her army. The pay is simply nominal; the support is in the armament of her army, iron, steel, and clothing. England each year disburses for her own domestic army $90,000,000, and in British India $87,000,000 more to support her industries.

I will call attention to the navy of England. She pays to her navy $54,000,000 a year to sustain her iron and steel industries and for the clothing that is consumed by the men in the service.

But I will go to that particular branch of the service that I was discussing at the time when I made the speech from which the Senator has quoted.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to interrupt my friend from New York, but he says, as I understand him, that he still adheres to what he stated in that speech.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have repeated it with emphasis here.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator if he now deliberately affirms that—

As to all fabrics, iron, steel, wood, and leather goods, largely made by machinery, and in which manual labor is comparatively a small element, we need no protection whatever.

Mr. HISCOCK. I said that, and I repeat it now, not as to all productions, but as to those in which machinery plays the most important part and manual labor an insignificant part. It is possible that could have been made a little clearer, and I think if the Senator will consult the speech as it is reported in the RECORD, he will find that there was a semicolon instead of a period at that point. But if he will read the whole speech there will be no question about what I meant—none whatever. I had emphasized that the cheaper fabrics which we are exporting—boots and shoes, which are made entirely by machinery, or practically so, and cheap cotton fabrics and cheap woolen fabrics need no protection. As to them what I said then was true, and the Senator can not read that speech without clearly comprehending what I meant, and I believe that I said what I meant. There is no chance for any mistake in reference to my meaning and the line of my argument.

But again, we will take the protection which is given by England, to which I referred in that same speech:

Take the Peninsular and Oriental Company, engaged in the trade with Japan and China. That line includes 664,874 miles of travel per year; and the gross amount paid by England is $2,250,000, being at the rate of $3.38 per mile. The same rate, if paid to the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, would yield $517,140. Under this amendment of the Senate, which they tell us subsidizes the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, that company will receive $76,800 as against $2,250,000 paid for similar service to rival lines.

And yet that provision was resisted in the interest of free trade as against this protection afforded by our great competitor in the markets of the world.

Take the Peninsular and Oriental Company's line to Australia and the Straits colonies, running annually 145,600 miles. That company receives the gross sum of $650,000, being at the rate of $4.18 a mile. The Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, if paid at the same rate, would receive $642,048, but under the Senate amendment will receive $112,500.

And yet on the line of the resistance to this bill the other side of the Chamber almost solidly voted to sustain England in this subsidizing of her lines as against our steam-ship lines.

Take the Royal Mail, running to Central America and the east coast of South America. For 480,960 miles annually traveled that line receives $495,000, being at the rate of $1.03 a mile. The same rate paid to the American line which would compete with this foreign line would yield $135,960.

The measure which was resisted, and which I was arguing in favor of, would have given to our American steam-ships the sum of $66,000.

Mr. President, it is not clear even as to these cheap goods we can export that it would be the part of wisdom to strike down the protection that is afforded them. It may well be argued that retaining for them the control of the American market—and there is ample competition in their production here—would enable them more successfully as to their surplus to compete with the foreign manufacturers.

Germany has a high protective tariff, and what is the result? Her market is held for her home production, and her surplus is sent to the markets of the world; and it is patent to-day that England with her free-trade tariff is suffering under the competition that she has to meet with the surplus production of Germany.

I find this in a paper which has been laid on my desk:

LONDON, December 19.

The Manchester Chamber of Commerce, by an overwhelming majority, has passed a resolution holding that all foreign goods similar to those produced in England should pay the same proportion of the imperial and local taxation which they would have paid had they been manufactured in Great Britain.

But the policy of the other side of the Chamber is to make our domestic manufacturers pay all these taxes. Their argument is upon that line, that they should pay all the taxes, local, State, and national, and that goods produced abroad should be let in here to free competition with them. I understand of course that in the amendments which are moved they do not go to that extent, but the logic of the argument that is made on the other side does go to the full extent of imposing all these burdens of taxation upon the domestic manufacturer and giving free competition to the products of Germany and of England.

As I said a little while ago, it may well be argued that the policy of Germany is the wisest. I think it has done as much to reduce the price of her products in the markets of the world as anything that has occurred. Take sugar to illustrate it. With her high protective tariff and with her bounty, her sugar manufacturers holding the German market and selling the surplus abroad, she has forced that necessity down to a point heretofore unknown in the history of the markets of that empire; and it may well be argued that it is the true policy for any nation and for every nation to hold her markets for her own people. They may depend upon them thoroughly for their support to employ their own labor in and about them and their own capital in and about them and send their surplus into the commerce of the world.

I believe that in this country we should not need or require the protective duties which are imposed if that same governmental aid was extended by this country to her industries that is extended by France, Germany, and Great Britain to theirs. I called the attention of the Senate a moment ago to the vast sum which is expended by England every year upon her army and navy, coupled with the bounties which she pays to her steam-ship lines, that they may find all the markets in all the islands and in all the ports on all the coasts of the seas. If the same national policy characterized the American Government, it would do very much to reduce the necessity for what are styled protective duties upon the other side of the Chamber; and I hope when we shall have finished the consideration of this bill, and it shall have become the law of the land, that the Senator from Missouri will co-operate with me in a policy that will enable us to build up a merchant marine between this nation and those nations where there is a demand for the products of our factories and the products of our shops and the products of our farms.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, we have before us now "the cotton and manufactures of cotton schedule," and I desire to speak very briefly upon that subject.

I hold in my hand a table compiled from the United States Census Report for 1880 by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, which places the per cent. of wages paid to employés in the cotton manufacture at 21.62 per cent. The meaning of the statement is that in every $100 worth of manufactured cotton goods there are $21.62 paid out for wages in the manufacture thereof.

Assuming what is incontestably true, that the duty imposed on the foreign article of the same character imported into this country is added to the price of the domestic article here, the duty of 40.17 per cent. added to the domestic article, which is the average duty on cotton manufactures, will pay back every dollar of the wages paid out for the manufacture of the cotton and leave to the manufacturer the difference between 21.62 and 40.17 per cent. of duty for his profit.

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. CHACE. Do I understand the Senator to say that this percentage of the amount of labor is from the Census report?

Mr. COKE. I have the certificate of William F. Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, that this table is compiled from the census reports of 1880.

Mr. CHACE. Does Mr. Switzler say that that table comprises, as the Senator says in his emphatic way, all the wages paid in the manufacture of cotton goods?

Mr. COKE. He does. I will read the statement in full.

He gives the capital employed in the manufacture of cotton as $219,504,794; value of materials, $113,765,537; total amount paid in wages during the year, $45,614,419; value of products, $210,950,383; per cent. of materials, 53.93; per cent. of wages, 21.62.

Mr. CHACE. The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics does not say that that is all the money paid for labor and services in the business.

Mr. COKE. When he is called on for a statement covering the whole question he gives that as the entire amount of money paid out in wages. His statement is full, clear, and explicit.

Mr. CHACE. I ask the Senator from Texas if he has examined the report on cotton manufactures in the Tenth Census?

Mr. COKE. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I have been content with the official statement and certificate of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, whose business it is to know about this.

Mr. CHACE. Does not the Senator know that in the preliminary article (which, by the way, was written and prepared by one of the most prominent free-traders in this country, Edward Atkinson), he says distinctly that they have purposely left all the administrative labor out of the labor reports, so that parties can not figure from figures in the census the profits of the business or the proportion of capital and labor? If the Senator does not know that fact, I can tell him that it is the fact, and if he will turn to the preliminary essay in that volume of the Census he will find it to be as I tell him. So these figures are not a statement of all the money paid for services in the manufacture of cotton.

Mr. COKE. The statement I read from is certainly a statement of the wages paid in the manufacture of cotton cloths, all the wages, and the wage question is the one I am dealing with.

Mr. CHACE. I beg the Senator's pardon. Does that say "all of the wages?"

Mr. COKE. That is exactly what it does say. It is a statement——

Mr. CHACE. I think the Senator is mistaken. I think it does not state that it is "all the wages." I think it simply quotes what the Census report says.

Mr. COKE. I have read the statement and am not mistaken.

I referred the other day to a statement made by the Hon. H. C. Burchard, of Illinois, in a speech made in the House of Representatives in 1878, in which he makes a statement on the same subject, and he places the per cent. of the wages paid out in the manufacture of textiles, which includes the cloths about which we are now speaking, at 19.8 per cent. Mr. Switzler places it at 21.62 per cent. Mr. Switzler's estimate is a more liberal one than Mr. Burchard's. Mr. Burchard was a distinguished Republican. His speech is very able and exhaustive. He was catechised and questioned during its delivery from all sides of the House, but maintained himself handsomely in the propositions which he made.

Here are two statements—one an official statement by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, and the other by Mr. Burchard, who, I will remark, was afterwards appointed Director of the Mint by a Republican President—both of them certifying to the fact that these amounts represented all the wages paid out in all cotton manufactures. Now, I desire to call attention to a statement made by Mr. Blaine, when Secretary of State, on this subject. We have heard it stated here in every possible form that the tariff is for the protection of American labor; that it is for the benefit of the American workingman. It has been stated on this floor, and Mr. Blaine and other Republican orators stated it in the canvass, that capital could take care of itself and needs no protection; that were it not for the interest of the workingman we could have free trade.

The amount of wages certified to by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics as paid out to the laborer in cotton manufacture, is 21.62 per cent., while the duty under the existing law is 40.17 per cent., and under the Senate bill we are now discussing it is raised very considerably. A duty of 21.62 per cent. would pay back to the manufacturer every dollar he pays out for wages in the manufacture of cotton, will pay back not only the difference between American and foreign wages, but pay back to the manufacturer every dollar and every penny that he pays out for wages. And yet Senators on the other side are not content to allow the law to remain where it is, at 40.17 per cent., but in this bill they have raised the duty and increased the already exorbitant profits of the manufacturer, while the laboring man has no assurance that he will receive anything more than the 21.62 per cent. certified to officially as the percentage of wages paid out in cotton manufactures.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. COKE. I desire to call attention to an extract from the letter of Mr. Blaine, when Secretary of State, introductory to the report of consuls in Europe on the cotton-goods trade of the world, dated June 25, 1881. He said, on page 95 of that report:

In commenting on the strikes then imminent in Manchester, Consul Shaw, in the report transmitting the foregoing table, says:

Now I call especial attention to this:

"The plea that the factory operatives are now receiving higher wages in proportion to the time they work than American operatives is urgently made by manufacturers here, and this, together with increasing financial distress among mill-owners, is gradually allaying the discontent among operatives."

Consul Shaw, at Manchester, says that the mill-owners are allaying the discontent among the operatives by showing that they are receiving better wages than American operatives receive in American mills.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to know whether the Senator believes that or makes that assertion broadly. Was that in England generally, or is it true now that they receive better wages than our people do?

Mr. COKE. I am stating what Mr. Secretary Blaine said in his report.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood the Senator to be reading from Consul Shaw.

Mr. COKE. Mr. Blaine recites the statement of Consul Shaw at Manchester. Now I will proceed. That is what Mr. Blaine said:

The hours of labor in the Lancashire mills are fifty-six, in the Massachusetts mills sixty per week. The hours of labor in the mills in the other New England States, where the wages are generally less than in Massachusetts, are usually sixty-six to sixty-nine per week.

The hours of labor are longer in the Massachusetts mills than in the Lancashire mills.

He proceeds:

Undoubtedly the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor. If this should prove to be a fact in practice, as it seems to be proven from official statistics, it would be a very important element in the establishment of our ability to compete with England for our share of the cotton-goods trade of the the world.

That is Mr. Blaine. He said further:

In the two prime factors which may be said to form the basis of the cotton-manufacturing industry, namely, raw material and labor, we hold the advantage over England in the first, and stand upon an equality with her in the second. Having the raw material at our doors, it follows that we should be able to convert it into manufactures, all things else being equal, with more economy and facility than can be done by England, which imports our cotton and then manufactures it in her mills. The expense of handling, transportation, and commission must be an important item in this regard as compared with our turning in the fiber from our cotton-fields to our mills and shipping it in the advanced form of manufactured goods. Add to this the secondary fact that it costs us no more to handle and manufacture the same than it costs in England, and we stand on an undoubted equality thus far in the race of competition.

That is the language of Mr. Blaine, and with 40 per cent. and more of duty under existing law the bill now before the Senate, in the face of this admission, increases the duty upon cotton goods.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask a question for information. I was not quite sure whether what the Senator was reading was what Mr. Blaine said or what a consul said in his report to the Secretary of State.

Mr. COKE. I have read what Mr. Blaine said.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not the consul?

Mr. COKE. Not the consul, because the quotation from the consular report is in quotation marks here. Here is what was said by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] when he was Secretary of State. In a letter, transmitting the consular reports on the state of labor in Europe, Mr. Secretary Evarts, in an enumeration of his conclusions drawn from these reports, on page 36, says:

9. That the average American workman performs from one and a half to twice as much work as the average European workman. This is so important a point in connection with our ability to compete with the cheap manufactures of Europe, and it seems on first thought so strange that I will trouble you with somewhat lengthy quotations from the reports in support thereof.

He proceeds to make the quotations, and establishes conclusively the truth of his proposition.

Mr. President, here is the statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics officially certified; here is distinguished Republican authority, to wit, the statement of Mr. Burchard as to the per cent. of wages paid out in cotton manufactures; here is the testimony of the distinguished senior Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] that the American laborer performs from one and a half to twice as much work as the average European workman; here is the testimony of Mr. Blaine's report that the hours of work in the Massachusetts mills are greater in number than in the English mills; and here is the statement of Mr. Blaine that the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency and the longer hours of labor here. And yet in the face of facts like these, Republican Senators, in a bill professing to reduce taxation and revenue and to be framed solely in the interest of the American workingman, have largely increased the duty on cotton manufactures. When we are told that the workingman is the sole beneficiary of the protective tariff and we point to the fact that he receives only 21 per cent. of the 50 per cent. of the tariff tax levied in his name, we are met with all sorts of evasion and every form of sophistry that ingenuity can invent.

Mr. President, we have heard a great deal here about the American workingman. We had a fancy picture painted here of his condition by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] a day or two ago. I have a picture of the condition of some of the workingmen engaged in the cotton-manufacturing industry which I find in a report made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], chairman of the committee which took a large mass of testimony on this and other subjects, and I desire to lay it before the Senate, and for that purpose to read the testimony of Thomas O'Donnell, found in the first volume of the testimony, commencing on page 451:

Thomas O'Donnell examined.

LIFE OF A MULE-SPINNER.

Q. What is your business?

A. I am a mule-spinner by trade. I have worked at it since I have been in this country—eleven years.

Q. Are you a married man?

A. Yes, sir; I am a married man; have a wife and two children. I am not very well educated. I went to work when I was young, and have been working ever since in the cotton business; went to work when I was about eight or nine years old. I was going to state how I live. My children get along very well in summer time, on account of not having to buy fuel or shoes or one thing and another. I earn $1.50 a day and can't afford to pay very big house rent. I pay $1.50 a week rent, which comes to about $6 a month.

Q. That is, you pay this where you are at Fall River?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have work right along?

A. No, sir; since that strike we had down in Fall River about three years ago I have not worked much more than half the time, and that has brought my circumstances down very much.

Q. Why have you not worked more than half the time since then?

A. Well, at Fall River if a man has not got a boy to act as "back-boy" it is very hard for him to get along. In a great many cases they discharge men in that work and put in men who have boys.

Q. Men who have boys of their own?

A. Men who have boys of their own capable enough to work in a mill, to earn 20 or 40 cents a day.

* * * * * * *

ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF A DAY FOR NINE MONTHS TO SUPPORT SIX PEOPLE TWELVE MONTHS.

I have a brother who has four children, besides his wife and himself. All he earns is $1.50 a day. He works in the iron works at Fall River. He only works about nine months out of twelve. There is generally about three months of stoppage, taking the year right through, and his wife and his family all have to be supported for a year out of the wages of nine months—$1.50 a day for nine months out of the twelve to support six of them.

I will state that the report of Mr. Carroll D. Wright upon the industries of Massachusetts, made several months ago, shows that there was an average of four months in the year for which he was reporting when one-third of the labor of Massachusetts was unemployed; and this statement of O'Donnell is corroborated by the statement of Mr. Carroll D. Wright.

It does not stand to reason that those children and he himself can have natural food or be naturally dressed. His children are often sick and he has to call in doctors. That is always hanging over him and is a great expense to him. And then if he does not pay the bill the trustee law comes on him. That is a thing that is not properly looked after. A man told me the other day that he was trusteed for $1.75, and I understood that there was a law in this State that a man could not be trusteed for less than $10. It seems to me there is something wrong in the Government somewhere; where it is I can't tell.

Q. How much money have you got?
A. I have not got a cent in the house; didn't have when I came out this morning.
Q. How much money have you had within three months?
A. I have had about $16 inside of three months.
Q. Is that all you have had within the last three months to live on?
A. Yes; $16.

SUPPORTING A FAMILY ON $133 A YEAR.

Q. How much have you had within a year?
A. Since Thanksgiving I happened to get work in the Crescent Mill and worked there exactly thirteen weeks. I got just $1.50 a day, with the exception of a few days that I lost—because in following up mule-spinning you are obliged to lose a day once in a while; you can't follow it up regularly.
Q. Thirteen weeks would be seventy-eight days, and, at $1.50 a day, that would make $117, less whatever time you lost.
A. Yes. I worked thirteen weeks there and ten days in another place, and then there was a dollar I got this week, Wednesday.
Q. Taking a full year back can you tell how much you have had?
A. That would be about fifteen weeks' work. Last winter, as I told you, I got in, and I worked up to about somewhere around Fast day, or maybe New Year's day; anyway, Mr. Howard has it down on his record, if you wish to have an exact answer to that question; he can answer it better than I can, because we have a sort of union there to keep ourselves together.
Q. Do you think you have had $150 within a year?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you had $125?
A. Well, I could figure it up if I had time. The thirteen weeks is all I have had.
Q. The thirteen weeks and the $16 you have mentioned?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That would be somewhere about $133, if you have not lost any time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is all you have had?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. To support yourself and wife and two children?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you had any help from outside?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you mean that yourself and wife and two children have had nothing but that for all this time?
A. That is all. I got a couple dollars' worth of coal last winter, and the wood I picked up myself. I goes around with a shovel and picks up clams and wood.

DIGGING CLAMS TO EKE OUT AN EXISTENCE.

Q. What do you do with the clams?
A. We eat them. I don't get them to sell, but just to eat, for the family. That is the way my brother lives, too, mostly. He lives close by us.
Q. How many live in that way down there?
A. I could not count them, they are so numerous. I suppose there are one thousand down there.
Q. A thousand that live on $150 a year?
A. They live on less.
Q. Less than that?
A. Yes; they live on less than I do.
Q. How long has that been so?
A. Mostly so since I have been married.
Q. How long is that?
A. Six years this month.
Q. Why do you not go West on a farm?
A. How could I go, walk it?

TOO POOR TO GO WEST.

Q. Well, I want to know why you do not go out West on a $2,000 farm, or take up a homestead and break it and work it up, and then have it for yourself and family?
A. I can't see how I could get out West. I have got nothing to go with.
Q. It would not cost you over $1,500.
A. Well, I never saw over a $20 bill, and that is when I have been getting a month's pay at once. If some one would give me $1,500 I will go.
Q. Is there any prospect that anybody will do that?
A. I don't know of anybody that would.
Q. You say you think there are a thousand men or so with their families that live in that way in Fall River?
A. Yes, sir; and I know many of them. They are around there by the score. You can see them every day; and I am sure of it because men tell me.
Q. Are you a good workman?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you ever turned off because of misconduct or incapacity or unfitness for work?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or because you did bad work?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or because you made trouble among the help?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you ever have any personal trouble with an employer?
A. No, sir.
Q. You have not anything now, you say?
A. No, sir.
Q. How old are you?
A. About thirty.
Q. Is your health good?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What would you work for if you could get work right along; if you could be sure to have it for five years, staying right where you are?
A. Well, if I was where my family could be with me, and I could have work every day, I would take $1.50 and be glad to.
Q. One dollar and fifty cents a day, with three hundred days to the year, would make more than you make now in three or four years, would it not?

ONLY A DOLLAR'S WORTH OF COAL IN TEN MONTHS.

A. Well, I would have no opportunity then to pick up clams. I have had no coal except one dollar's worth since last Christmas.
Q. When do the clams give out?
A. They give out in winter.
Q. You spoke of fuel—what do you have for fuel?
A. Wood and coal.
Q. Where does the wood come from?
A. I pick it up around the shore, any old pieces I see around that are not good for anything. There are many more that do the same thing.
Q. Do you get meat to live on much?
A. Very seldom.
Q. What kinds of meat do you get for your family?
A. Well, once in awhile we get a piece of pork and some clams and make a clam-chowder. That makes a very good meal. We sometimes get a piece of corn beef or something like that.
Q. Have you had any fresh beef within a month?
A. Yes; we had a piece of porksteak for four of us yesterday.
Q. Have you had any beef within a month?
A. No, sir; I was invited to a man's house on Sunday. He wanted me to go up to his house, and we had a dinner of roast pork.
Q. That was an invitation out; but I mean have you had any beefsteak in your own family, of your own purchase, within a month?
A. Yes; there was half a pound or a pound, one Sunday, I think it was.
Q. Have you had only a pound or half a pound on Sunday?
A. That is all.

The Senator from Vermont certainly differs very widely from this witness in his statement of the condition of the American workingman.

Q. Have you had only a pound or half a pound on Sunday?
A. That is all.
Q. A half pound of pork?
A. Yes. About 2 pounds of pork I guess we have had in the month, to make clam-chowder with, and sometimes to fry a bit.
Q. And there are four of you in the family?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many pounds of beefsteak have you had in your family, that you bought for your own home consumption, within this year that we have been speaking of?
A. I don't think there has been 5 pounds of beefsteak.

And he had just stated that he had about 4 pounds of pork.

Q. You have had a little porksteak?
A. We had half a pound of porksteak yesterday; I don't know when we had any before.
Q. What other kinds of meat have you had within a year?
A. Well, we have had corn-beef twice, I think, that I can remember this year—on Sunday, for dinner.
Q. Twice is all that you can remember within a year?
A. Yes—and some cabbage.
Q. What have you eaten?
A. Well, bread mostly, when we could get it; we sometimes couldn't make out to get that, and have had to go without a meal.
Q. Has there been any day in the year that you have had to go without anything to eat?
A. Yes, sir; several days.
Q. More than one day at a time?
A. No.
Q. How about the children and your wife—did they go without anything to eat, too?

THE CHILDREN CRYING FOR FOOD.

A. My wife went out this morning and went to a neighbor's and got a loaf of bread and fetched it home, and when she got home the children were crying for something to eat.
Q. Have the children had anything to eat to-day except that, do you think?
A. They had that loaf of bread; I don't know what they have had since then, if they have had anything.
Q. Did you leave any money at home?
A. No, sir.
Q. If that loaf is gone, is there anything in the house?
A. No, sir; unless my wife goes out and gets something; I don't know who would mind the children while she goes out.
Q. Has she any money to get anything with?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have the children gone without a meal at any time during the year?
A. They have gone without bread some days, but we have sometimes got meal and made porridge of it.
Q. What kind of meal?
A. Sometimes Indian meal, and sometimes oatmeal.
Q. Meal stirred up in hot water?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is it cold weather down there now?
A. It is very cold now.

SCANT CLOTHING IN COLD WEATHER.

Q. What have the children got on in the way of clothing?
A. They have got along very nicely all summer, but now they are beginning to feel quite sickly. One has one shoe on, a very poor one, and a slipper, that was picked up somewhere. The other has two odd shoes on, with the heel out. He has got cold and is sickly now.
Q. Have they any stockings?
A. He had got stockings, but his feet comes through them, for there is a hole in the bottom of the shoe.
Q. What have they got on the rest of their person?
A. Well, they have a little calico shirt—what should be a shirt; it is sewed up in some shape—and one little petticoat, and a kind of little dress.
Q. How many dresses has your wife got?
A. She has got one since she was married, and she hasn't worn that more than half a dozen times; she has worn it just going to church and coming back. She is very good in going to church, but when she comes back she takes it off, and it is pretty near as good now as when she bought it.

The man has two children and his wife has had one dress since he married her—six years!

Q. She keeps that dress to go to church in?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many dresses aside from that has she?
A. Well, she got one here three months ago.
Q. What did it cost?
A. It cost $1 to make it, and I guess about a dollar for the stuff, as near as I can tell.
Q. The dress cost $2?
A. Yes.

Q. What else has she?
A. Well, she has an undershirt that she got given to her, and she has an old wrapper, which is about a mile too big for her; somebody gave it to her.
Q. She did not buy it?
A. No; that is all that I know that she has.
Q. You have had $1 or $2 worth of coal last winter?
A. I think it was a quarter of a ton, and I believe it was $2.25 worth.
Q. Is that all you have had?
A. That is all I had last winter. All the rest I picked up—wood.
Q. Did you try to get work?
A. I was working last winter.
Q. You say that a good many others are situated just like you are?
A. Yes, sir; I should say as many as a thousand down in Fall River are just in the same shape, if not worse; though they can't be much worse. I have heard many women say they would sooner be dead than living. I don't know what is wrong, but something is wrong. There is an overflow of labor in Fall River.

That is the protected American workingman, to pay whom and to support whose family the American people are taxed an average of 47 per cent. upon everything they eat, drink, or wear, and even upon the grave-clothes of the dead.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. COKE. I should prefer not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. BLAIR. I took that testimony, I drew out those facts, and I asked those questions——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. COKE. I suppose I must yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. I examined that witness. I have no doubt he told the truth. It was a case of most pitiable distress. It was an illustration of many other cases. The witness was brought before the committee in the autumn of 1883 at Boston, by Mr. Howard, a State senator of Massachusetts, who resided in Fall River and produced this witness before the committee. He truly described his situation as one of great hardship, as was proved by his appearance, and I have no doubt of the truth of what he said.

It was also the fact that the agitation on the tariff that year and immediately previous and about that time had produced considerable dearth of labor and a feeling of uncertainty among the manufacturers of the North, and employment was unusually scarce and labor of course was unusually abundant. The agitation for the reduction of the tariff was what largely had thrown these people out of employment. The evidence before the committee indicated that that condition of unrest and uncertainty had much to do, as I think, with the condition of that man at that time.

But, sir, that is not all. That does not wholly account for all the facts there stated. There was at the North at that time, and there is now, a class of men who find great difficulty in getting a living, who suffer much, and as the industries of the North are disturbed by the proposition to give the work of America to foreigners their distress increases. The Senator ought to understand that the destruction of the commercial or the industrial system of the East by the reduction of the tariff on which it is now based only adds to the misery and destitution of the class of men whose testimony has been read on this occasion.

In the progress of the examination it was designed to force from the witness the exact description of his condition; and where he is questioned with reference to the purchase of a farm out West, and all that, the questions must not be understood, as some dull-witted people seem to have understood them, as being asked with any other than the purpose of developing the utter absurdity of the recommendation of many well-to-do people in this country that these poor folks go West, or go elsewhere, and establish themselves on farms, and thus lay the foundations of fortunes, and of happiness and protection to their families, and the families of the future, when they can not get a single meal of victuals or a single suit of clothing, and can not get a mile from their homes without the assistance of society.

I wished to make that explanation with reference to the form of the questions.

Mr. COKE. The witness states that he was in this condition some six years. It was no new thing, it was no unusual thing, and his testimony accords exactly in one particular with that of Mr. Carroll D. Wright.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator tell me where this man resided?

Mr. COKE. At Fall River.

Mr. DAWES. In my State?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir; in Massachusetts. His statement accords with that of Mr. Carroll D. Wright in his report on the statistics of labor in the State of Massachusetts published in December, 1887. He says, on page 294 of that report:

As to the essential result of this investigation, it may be stated, then, that out of a total of 816,470 persons employed in gainful occupations in this State 251,589, or 29.59 per cent., were unemployed at their principal occupation, on an average, 4.11 months during the census year, the average unemployment for persons engaged in manufactures, pure and simple, being 3.90 months; in short, that about one-third of the total persons engaged in remunerative labor were unemployed at their principal occupation for about one-third of the working time.

Mr. President, there is nothing transitory about this; there is nothing unusual about this. This man O'Donnell says that for six years his wife had had but one dress; for six years he had lived on about $133 a year with his wife and two children.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Upon what does the Senator base his statement that it is not an unusual occurrence?

Mr. COKE. Because the witness says so in his testimony. He said there were at least one thousand people in Fall River in as bad or worse fix than himself.

Mr. HOAR. Because he says so. I thought it was the Senator saying it.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention——

Mr. COKE. I should prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. DAWES. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to another table of statistics of Carroll D. Wright in reference to the Massachusetts employés in connection with that.

Mr. COKE. That is a different matter entirely.

Mr. DAWES. My idea is that it bears directly upon the Senator's speech; but I will not interrupt him if he would rather not.

Mr. COKE. I will yield if the Senator wishes.

Mr. DAWES. There is no doubt that there are instances of suffering and hardship owing to the difficulty of obtaining employment in Massachusetts as well as in all the other States. The question is not whether there are such cases as that, but what is the best remedy, whether it is to furnish employment or to take employment away from those who need it.

The general condition of the wage-earners of Massachusetts has been stated by Mr. Carroll D. Wright in this way: The savings-banks of Massachusetts have deposited in them $315,000,000—more money than there is in the Treasury of the United States—and Mr. Carroll D. Wright says that 75 per cent. thereof is the deposit of wage-earners.

Mr. COKE. What per cent.?

Mr. DAWES. Seventy-five per cent. of it is the deposit of wage-earners from week to week and month to month, the result of their earnings in and about our manufacturing establishments. I want that to go along with these instances of hardship and suffering which the Senator has produced.

Mr. COKE. I am entirely willing that the Senator should put in any statement here that will ameliorate and modify this testimony, as this is a very bad statement.

This man subsisted with his wife and two children on $133 a year. He eked out a subsistence by digging clams out of the river bed at Fall River and by picking up drift-wood, and when asked how many persons were situated as he was and living as he lived in Fall River, he said there could not be less than a thousand. It was a general condition.

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, the Senator is quite wrong about that.

Mr. COKE. That is what the witness said.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not a general condition. Fall River has 50,000 inhabitants, very largely operatives.

Mr. COKE. A thousand of the operatives living in that condition would make it pretty general, I submit.

Mr. BLAIR. A thousand people living in that condition! He speaks of his brother, who, he says, was not an operative. The Senator would introduce a theory or a practice which would deprive them of the little work they now have.

Mr. COKE. Here is what he said:

Q. You say that a good many others are situated just like you are?
A. Yes, sir; I should say as many as a thousand down in Fall River are just in the same shape, if not worse; though they can't be much worse.

That is the statement.

Mr. BLAIR. He does not say they are all operatives.

Mr. COKE. It is not alone at Fall River. This is in the cotton-manufacturing business. But here, from the same report, is testimony taken by the Senator from New Hampshire as to the condition of the coal-miners in Pennsylvania. They are protected just as the cotton operatives are protected.

Mr. BLAIR. They are not protected enough, either of them.

Mr. COKE. As to the condition of the Pennsylvania coal-miners I have here the testimony of Mr. John Jarrett, a citizen of Sharon, Pa., and at that time president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers of the United States, in which he says:

CONDITION OF THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL-MINERS.

Q. Do you know anything about the condition of the workingmen in other trades than your own?
A. I have not given that subject one-tenth of the attention that I have given to the condition of the workers in my own trade.
Q. Do you know anything about the condition of the men who mine the iron?
A. I do, sir; did you say the coal-miners?
Q. The men who mine the iron and coal?
A. Well, coal-mining in Pennsylvania, in my opinion, is a more important interest than ore-mining, and the condition of the coal-miners in the State of Pennsylvania is pitiable, miserable.
Q. How many of them do you think there are?
A. There must be at least ninety thousand coal-miners in Pennsylvania.
Q. Do you mean heads of families or workers altogether?
A. I would assume that there would be among them about sixty thousand heads of families.
Q. You say their condition is pitiable and miserable; how so, and how much so is it?

A. It is because the wages of coal-miners are too low. They are ill-paid. Then, too, they suffer from the truck system. Under that system they pay 100 per cent. more for what they buy than our people do. Then the houses they live in are extremely miserable. If I feel particularly for any branch of labor in this country it is the poor coal-miner. He risks his life day after day for a mere pittance. Every time he departs from the light of day he does not know whether he will ever see it again. And while in some branches it does not require much skill to be a miner, in others it does, and I think the coal-miner ought to be better paid, better clothed, better housed, and better fed than he is.

THE ENGLISH MINERS BETTER OFF.

Q. Have you been among those miners?

A. Yes, sir; and from my experience among the coal-miners in England I may say that they are really better cared for there than are the coal-miners in the United States. I do not say that the English miner gets as much money for his labor, but he is better cared for.

Q. Do you mean that he has more comfort during the year?

A. Yes, sir; the government there has taken care to make very stringent laws for the protection of the miners. The colliery laws control all the mines there, and I think it is the duty of our Government here to make equally strict laws to apply to that subject.

By Mr. CALL:

Q. Of what nature are those laws?

A. Well, they constitute a general shield of protection thrown around the workingman, by which many of the evils to which he is subject in his calling are obviated.

Q. Give us some idea of the provisions of those laws.

A. Well, they have regular men that go to examine into the condition of the mines before the men can go to work; these examiners have to go in every morning immediately before the men go into the mines, to see that they are in fit condition. Then the truck system has been entirely wiped out there; the men get their money every week.

By "the truck system" is meant the system through which the employers get all the wages of the employés for goods furnished at what this man says are 100 per cent. higher prices than other people have to pay for them.

Mr. President, I do not like to take up so much of the time of the Senate——

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator leaves that branch of the subject, will he allow me to ask him how the coal-miners of Pennsylvania are protected? He said they were protected. How are they protected?

Mr. COKE. This man says that the English miners are protected——

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand, but at the beginning of the statement in regard to the coal-miners of Pennsylvania the Senator said they were protected. I should like to know how they are protected. By a protective tariff?

Mr. COKE. Have you not protection for coal in this tariff?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means, and have not had for a generation.

Mr. COKE. It is protected under the existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. No, not under the existing law. Anthracite coal, such as is mined in Pennsylvania, has been upon the free-list for a generation. There is no duty on it and no attempt to impose a duty upon it.

Mr. COKE. I think the Senator is mistaken in saying that there is no protection to coal under the existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Bituminous coal, that is mined in West Virginia and Maryland, is on the dutiable-list, but the great mass of coal-miners in Pennsylvania mine anthracite coal, upon which there is no duty under the existing law and there has been none for many years, and there is no proposition to put one on by this bill.

Mr. COKE. The mining of coal is simply a part of the iron industry. It is an adjunct, an auxiliary, a necessary part of the iron industry, and it is the protection accorded to iron and steel as well as to coal that entitles these people to more consideration and better wages than they seem to be getting in Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALDRICH. Coal enters into the cost of every product and is used by every family. It is not confined by any means to the manufacturers of iron or steel.

Mr. COKE. Coal is, of course, used in all the industries, and all the industries are protected, and in fixing the amount of protection the cost of mining the needed coal is an important element, one never overlooked or underestimated, and the people who mine it are as much within the purview and limits of the protective policy as any others. Now I will read an extract on this subject from the Cleveland Herald, but will remark in passing that we have heard during this debate that the American workingman is the object of the care, the kindness, and the affection of those who favor a high protective tariff.

I wish, Mr. President, that the workingman could get his share of the protective taxation levied and collected in his name. That the taxes are paid by the people is certain. That the workingman does not receive them is equally certain. It is also certain that the bulk and mass of them go into the pockets of the capitalists who own the manufacturing establishments. Mr. Carnegie with his income of $5,000 per day from his protected iron works, with his Scotch castle and his magnificent coaches, his liveried servants, and his other conditions and appliances of luxury, and not his employés and workingmen, is the beneficiary for the most part of our tariff taxation.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. Will it help the condition of these people to deprive them of what little work they have?

Mr. COKE. Well, I do not suppose it would.

Mr. BLAIR. If you break down this industry and allow the product to come in from abroad and break down the American iron industry, you destroy the chance for employment.

Mr. COKE. I do not propose to break down any industry, and what I would do would not deprive them of their work. I think it would give them more work. It would give them better wages. It would take the tax off the cost of their living. It would take the tax off their woolen clothing, off their cotton clothing, off the lumber that goes into their houses, off their fuel and off everything they eat, drink, and wear, and it would make the wages that they earn buy more and be more potent in the market.

Mr. BLAIR. If they have no work, whence will they get wages, and if they have no wages where will they get any of these things at all?

Mr. COKE. It is said by the campaign orators of the Republican party that capital needs no protection; that it is able to take care of itself; that it is the workingman who needs protection. Ask Thomas O'Donnell, whose wife has had but one dress in six years and who is laboring in an industry protected on an average 50 per cent.—ask him if this tariff gives protection to the American laborer!

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will permit me, I will ask him a question. I have asked him several which he said he would answer, but he immediately went off to Carnegie, Scotland, and Thomas O'Donnell.

Mr. COKE. I would prefer not to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. COKE. Now, I will read from the Cleveland Herald, an Ohio paper. On February 6, 1884, the Cleveland Herald contained the following:

For some time past all sorts of stories have been circulated in reference to the suffering of the miners and their families scattered along the Pennsylvania Railroad between this city and Allentown. These people have had their wages reduced from time to time, until they are now only getting from 60 to 70 cents per day, or an average of about 65 cents. These reports have excited considerable comment, and in order to verify them a Herald correspondent visited the mines.

"After arriving in Alburtus, Pa.," writes the correspondent, "I procured a sleigh and drove through the entire district, covering some 30 miles, and visited many homes of the miners, beside some forty-five mines in full operation. Alburtus has a population of nearly 600 people and their true condition is probably expressed in the words of Isaac Bickel, proprietor of the American House, who said:

"'Never in the history of the town has there been so much suffering among the poor. The panic of 1873 is no comparison.'

Mind you, the war tariff was in operation then, as it is now, put on for the protection of the American workingman.

"The storekeepers have shut down on the men, and are now doing a strictly cash business throughout the ore district."

George Schrack, residing in a small log hut near Farmington, was called on in the evening.

* * * * * * *

"Will you kindly give me an insight into your daily life, Mr. Schrack?

"Well, to tell you the truth, it is a tough one. I get up at 4 o'clock every morning and leave here half an hour later in order to reach the works at 6 o'clock.

"What are your duties?

"I am a loader, and with the help of another man we load from sixty to seventy cars per day.

"What are you getting per day?

"Sixty-two cents.

"How do you manage to live with that amount?

"Oh, we manage to just hang together. We can't afford meat but once a week. Bread and molasses constitute our chief diet, with a few potatoes and corn-meal thrown in.

"How about your clothing, shoes, etc.?

"The children have no shoes, and really I can not afford to buy any for them.

"How much did you earn in January?

"Eleven dollars and thirty-eight cents. I made a little over eighteen days.

"How much does it cost you to live?

"My earnings did not quite cover the bills, and the grocer told me that hereafter none of the men would be allowed to exceed their earnings. I have not handled a cent since December the 1st.

"How's that?

"Why, you see, after the grocer is paid nothing is left."

This is the story of a dozen or more, and with the exception of one or two cases, all tell the same story.

* * * * * * * *

The Chicago Herald of July last contributes the following: "Newspaper correspondents have lately achieved the difficult task of exploring this beautiful region"—meaning the collieries of Hazleton, Pa.—"hitherto so severely ignored by the protectionist hair-raisers. With what commiseration for poor Ireland and benighted free-trade-ridden England, with what pride in the institutions of the land of his birth, must every American read of the recent evictions at Hazleton collieries, near Wilkes Barre!

"For brutality and consequent misery they surpass the most exaggerated horror yet reported from Ireland.

"Hazleton is a delightful village nestling in the carboniferous hills near the Hazel Brook mines. Village and hills and collieries are the property of a firm named J. S. Wentz & Co. The firm will not sell or lease a foot of land to anybody, nor allow a man to build a house for himself. It compels every employé in the mines to rent from it at from $5 to $6 a month. The men are forced to sign a lease which places them absolutely at the company's mercy. They expressly waive every benefit or protection which they might have under the laws of the State. They agree that the moment they cease work for the company they must leave their homes, and can be ejected on ten days' notice; and they further have to sign what is termed an 'amicable suit of ejectment,' by which the company can at any moment issue a writ and evict them.

"This, mind you, is a strictly American and highly protected lease. Mark how it operates. Notices to quit were sent round to the strikers some weeks ago. On Saturday Deputy Sheriff Brockway, armed with the writs issued in 'amicable suit of ejectment,' and backed by a body of coal and iron police in the pay of the company, appeared in the village and began to evict. Six families, with all their goods and chattels, were thrown on the hillside; they were the families of Neal Gallagher, Daniel Nigan, Patrick Bowen, Barney Gallagher, Joseph McGonegal, and Patrick Dunlavy. Everything the house contained was thrown pell-mell out of doors and windows, the women and children driven out, and the doors locked behind them. From their names it is apparent that these tenants came from the land of iron leases and heartless evictions, in the full hope, presumably, of finding relief in the land of the free.

"Their oppression did not stop here. Not only were they thus deprived of home and shelter, but not a soul in the village dared shelter them or their goods."

That is in the grand old State of Pennsylvania. These men, whose goods were thrown in the streets, were evicted by men protected more highly than all others under the tariff now before the Senate as well as under the existing law, a tariff said to have been enacted in the interest and for the benefit of the American workingman. Ah, Mr. President, the livery of heaven has been stolen to serve the devil in.

"The company had given notice that any tenant affording shelter to those evicted would be himself dispossessed. Mrs. Dunlavy was sick in bed when the officers entered the house, but she had to go, and her bed was put outside after her. It was with difficulty that she obtained permission to stop over night at a neighbor's, nor were the evicted tenants able to remove their goods, for the company had prohibited any wagon from entering its lands for that purpose, and refused to grant the use of its own teams. Women and children were compelled to hunt miles in search of a place to spend the night, and some, unable to obtain shelter, were forced to sleep on the bare ground, without roof to cover them. Their goods are lying to-day just as they were thrown out, the people being unable to move them.

"It is not to be supposed that such things could happen without comment. On the contrary, the whole region was boiling over with indignation, though choking its impotent wrath through fear of incurring the horror themselves, for everybody thereabouts belongs to Wentz & Co. Even the press dared not make mention of what took place. 'What can we do?' a local editor demanded of the correspondent. 'The coal kings have the making of the postmasters, no matter which party is in power. If any paper dares to open its mouth about these outrages the postmasters get the wink and our paper is kicked upon the floor—its subscribers look in vain for it. One paper near here, at Freeland, has defied the autocrats and told the truth about them, and for years the editor has labored upon the verge of bankruptcy. Oh, I tell you these men are above the law. We have submitted to them, and not until the metropolitan press take hold of the matter will justice ever be done here.'

"The company store system is, of course, prevalent in this region, and not the least of the links in the chain of slavery. The Stone bill, passed in the Pennsylvania Legislature in 1884, makes this system illegal. But what of that? What is law to a protected coal baron? The miners are not now compelled to trade at the company's stores, but if they don't do so—well, their services are no longer required. Then there is a doctor furnished by each company, and each miner with a family must pay 75 cents a month, whether sick or well, while each single man of twenty-one or more is docked 50 cents a month for the benefit of this pampered physician. Other doctors are not allowed. Hundreds of company doctors have made fortunes out of the business. Then each man pays 50 cents a month toward the support of a priest, but this is not insisted on. Four dollars is stopped for rent, and $1.90 for coal, with 65 cents added for delivery, and sometimes taxes are added upon the dwelling. Thus it results that the men very rarely draw more than $2 or $3 in money at the end of the month. Their slavery is complete. It is remarked that, under these conditions, the mining population grows sullen and dispirited, that the young men flee away to the cities as they grow up, leaving their places to be filled by cheap Slav labor imported for the purpose; that the young women take to a life of shame rather than live in the cursed atmosphere of their youth; that the children are joyless and ignorant. The houses are horrible; the saloons are better, and the company sells the liquor. Men take to dissipation from sheer despair. A strained, unnatural feeling of dread pervades the place, for every one knows that spies are about and he dare not speak."

This is from a newspaper printed in the State of Ohio. These are the peculiar wards of the protective policy—a policy which taxes the American people and makes the manufacturers the trustees to receive the money and pay it over to the American workingman! They have promised faithfully to pay it out to the American workingman, and what I have read shows how these promises are kept.

This is protection! This is what is called the American policy! This is high tariff! This is the policy which it is claimed received the indorsement and sanction of the American people in the late election. I tell you, Mr. President, this policy has never been indorsed by the American people, and it never will be. No, Mr. President, the American people will never indorse this policy when they understand it. When facts such as these I have read are brought home to the American people, and it is seen that the taxation that they have been submitting to for the supposed benefit of the American workman is being appropriated by capital, while the labor of the country is being enslaved, they will repudiate it, condemn it, and put it away never to be restored.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, there is a whole encyclopedia of facts and arguments which might be used to refute the statements made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] and others on this interesting subject, but, without entering into them, I just wish to mention two little facts that have some bearing upon what the Senator has said.

I do not know any such people as those the Senator has referred to in my State out of the almshouses or more than 50 feet away from them. There are some shiftless, idle men who do not earn $150 a year, but I say that any industrious, sober, decently intelligent man can do a great deal better than O'Donnell has been doing. I do not know of such people, unless it be an exceptional case in a thousand, as the Senator from Texas will find in Texas.

The two facts I rose to mention are just these: In Connecticut a majority of the people have money in the savings-banks. The total for a population of about 670,000 is $102,000,000. If the Senator will go and look over the books of the banks, which they will gladly show him, he will see that the deposits are by the servant-girls, the boys and girls in the factories, and the people of the working class generally, poor people, running from one dollar to two, three, four, five, or six hundred. In Massachusetts there is about the same proportion, and in its savings-banks the total deposits amount to $315,000,000.

These two sums in themselves are a most emphatic answer to what the Senator from Texas has been saying about the condition of the working people in the North. If they were the oppressed and degraded slaves that the Senator and others frequently describe them to be, they surely would know it. If they were such, not a month would pass by without something like a revolution. Does the Senator think that these people are year after year and generation after generation deceived as to the political argument?

Why, sir, if he should go there he would make the mistake that the Grand Duke of Russia made when he went through our State. He went to various parts of the State, and arriving in a town when the factories were just pouring out their thousands of comfortable-looking, well-dressed operatives, the Grand Duke said, "Where are your peasants?" If the Senator will follow his example and see our people he will ask, "Where in the world is O'Donnell?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 313, line 1211, after the word "pound" where it first occurs, it is proposed to strike out "10 cents per pound" and insert "35 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

313. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn (not wound upon spools), whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not know that there is much to be said in reply to what the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] has read and what he has observed upon it which is not contained in the pithy and pregnant statement of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. Of course under any system of government, under any condition of things, you can find some discontented crank, some man in whom, to use the Yankee phrase, there is a "screw loose," who has passed his life or passed six years of it under the condition described by the Senator or by the testimony which the Senator read.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will permit me I will observe that I am not responsible for that testimony. It was taken by the committee of which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] was chairman.

Mr. HOAR. Of course the Senator is not responsible for it. I suppose nobody is responsible for it but the man who gave it. But the statement that a man had allowed his wife to go for six years without decent clothing, that he had allowed his children to live in the manner described by that witness in the city of Fall River, Mass., would be enough anywhere among that people to mark him a man either incompetent or undeserving in himself, a man of bad habits either as to laziness or as to drink, or with some other defect in his character.

There is no such condition of things as the Senator from Texas has described in Massachusetts. It is not a picture of the working people there. The working people are thriving, happy, educating their children, a majority of them with money in the savings-banks—$315,000,000 in the savings-banks of Massachusetts, of which, as my colleague quoted from Mr. Carroll D. Wright's statement, at least 75 per cent. is the property of the working people. The operatives of Lowell can buy Lowell, the working people of Worcester can buy Worcester and every factory and the capital invested in it.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator for one moment to get at a matter of information really? He refers to $315,000,000 in the savings-banks of Massachusetts. Is that money deposited by the working people?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator had listened to what I said, he would have got the answer to his question. I said as the Senator was rising that Mr. Wright, the statistician, calculated that 75 per cent. of the amount was the deposits of the working people, of the wage-earners of Massachusetts. I have gone over that matter carefully, and a few years ago we required the statistics to be given of the amounts deposited and the ages and sexes of the persons making the deposits, and it is shown very conclusively that that is a fair and just and proper estimate.

Mr. President, I live in a city just about the size of Fall River. Sometimes Fall River is a little ahead of Worcester, and sometimes Worcester is a little ahead of Fall River. I suppose we shall have by the next census about 85,000 people, and the city of Fall River will have about 75,000 people. The two cities are not very dissimilar. Worcester is a little more fortunate, because Fall River has the single cotton industry, while Worcester has a great variety of industries requiring skilled workmen.

When I was a young man and when I first went to that city to live, it contained about 15,000 people, and we had a winter of unusual distress and hardship, and the different churches appointed committees and apportioned out districts of the town which each church was to take care of in regard to the matter of poverty and distress. I was a member of that committee for the religious society to which I belonged, and I knew at that time all about the condition of the people, and I undertake to say—that was before 1860—that the amount of suffering and poverty and squalidness and wretchedness in that town of 80,000 or 85,000 inhabitants is not only not so great proportionally, but not so great in the aggregate to-day as it was then, when it had a population of 15,000.

Those working people are living in comfortable homes. Go through the streets where they live and you see from the outside of the house that it is a place of comfort and content and taste inside. You go into that dwelling and you find the picture and the book. An English workingman, who came to this country within the last three months, expressed in my hearing his surprise at the condition in which he found the working people of Massachusetts, the condition in which he found old friends and acquaintances of his, by whose side he had worked in the old country, and he related one very curious anecdote. He said that there was a man who had been a shop-mate of his when a boy in Leeds, I think it was, or in some English manufacturing city, who had joined the Democratic party pretty soon after he came over here, and was a free-trader. This man undertook to talk with him. He said, "Why, how can you be a free-trader when you get so much better wages over here under the tariff than you used to do at home?" "Well," said the shop-mate, "I know I get better wages, but I tell you I have to pay duties; I have to pay taxes on everything I buy, and it eats up the wages." "Well," said the other, "what is there in your house the price of which is increased by the tariff?" The man hesitated a moment and looked around, and said, "Why, there is the piano, and the carpet, and the sewing-machine," and the workman's wife spoke up and said, "We did not have them in England;" and the fellow said he thought "it was a pity a man could not make an argument without a woman putting in her oar all the time." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, this stuff which the Senator from Texas talks and reads is pure, arrant nonsense, as every man who knows the condition of the people of New England knows perfectly well. If he should go into a Fall River or Worcester audience of Democrats and undertake to make the speech he has made here he would be received with a universal guffaw. He can go there. This question can be debated there and has been, and the result was that of twenty-five manufacturing cities in Massachusetts with a very large foreign population, nineteen gave substantial Republican majorities at the last election. With a large foreign population knowing the condition of the workmen abroad and knowing the condition of the workmen in this country, as they do, our State gave some 37,000 majority over the free-trade party in the last election, and it was a majority given on a discussion of this very question, the condition of the workmen under the protective tariff and their desire to continue it. Nobody raided the ballot-boxes. Nobody from that State drew up tariff bills and undertook to impose them on the rest of the country that he would not allow to be discussed in his own district without having his brains blown out if a man undertook to do it.

That is the answer to the statements and pictures drawn by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I simply rise to say that I am sorry to see Senators on the other side take so much pains to prove what we have been charging all the time on this side, and what we are perfectly ready and willing to admit, to wit, that they have grown rich by the taxation of their neighbors. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has told us how rich those two towns in his State are, and how much money they have in the savings-banks, and how many of the working people have pianos in their rooms and carpets on their floors, etc. There is nobody on this side of the Chamber who denies that. That is just what we have been saying. People who have not sense enough to get rich when a tax is levied on their neighbors to put the money in their pockets ought not to be permitted to live anywhere. If you would take the people of my State who are engaged in labor, mostly in the field, and if you would give them a high protective duty on everything they had to sell and let them buy everything they had to buy in free-trade markets, I assure you the savings-banks would be in my country instead of in Massachusetts in a very short time. It would naturally follow. The unprotected classes in this country are as much entitled to claim those savings in the banks of Massachusetts as the men in whose names they are deposited. It is money taken from them by taxation and deposited in those banks, not to their credit, but to the credit of the recipients of this taxation.

But surely, Mr. President, they have to take the good with the evil. An old land speculator in the mountains of North Carolina once said he made the bottoms sell the uplands. The tail has to go with the hide; and surely they are willing to admit, if tariff taxation, if protection has produced all this wealth, and it is not due to the industry and to the zeal and the intelligence of the workmen, but all comes from taxation, surely they ought to admit that the destitution and the poverty which appear side by side with the prosperity are also due to the tariff.

It seems to me, sir, that there is no escape from that proposition unless the tariff has some peculiar quality about it that it works only good and can not possibly be responsible for evil. Old Job said he received good at the hands of the Almighty, and should he not receive evil also. He was willing to admit that the Great Controller of events controlled all events, whether for good or for evil, but this system of protection is above and beyond all that.

Some comment has been made upon the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] for daring to read this sworn testimony of a workman who lives right in the midst of this protection paradise, enjoying the zephyrs that play among the trees and sport among the flowers of that delightful region. It seems that he ought not to have read that, in their opinion, but when Senators on that side of the Chamber constantly regale us with pictures of the delightful and prosperous condition of the workingmen in their section, is it not competent and proper on this side to read the contrary picture? It would seem not, according to the view they take of it. But the truth is, as Senators upon this side contend, that good and evil befall men under all laws and under all circumstances and conditions, and after all that has been said and done, with equal terms in the law, men's prosperity depends on themselves.

If the laws are fair and just, then the industrious and the thrifty and the intelligent man goes ahead of the other. If the laws are fair and just, the intemperate, the unindustrious, the lazy, the thriftless man falls behind. Those are the moral conditions that govern the prosperity of men in the world, and any attempt, especially the one which undertakes to show that taxation is the cause of universal prosperity or the cause of any prosperity of anybody except the recipients of the tax, is contrary to the order of the moral world and contrary to reason and philosophy.

Mr. President, I believe I will not pursue my remarks any further, but will move that we go into executive session.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator makes that motion, I should like to read some testimony following on this statement.

Mr. VANCE. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. I commend to the Senators on the Democratic side of the Chamber and upon the free-trade side of this question the fourth volume of the testimony taken by the committee of which I was chairman, which relates exclusively to the condition of labor industries in the Southern States, and in all that I have ever heard read upon the floor of the Senate of this investigation by Senators upon my left—nearly every one of them from the South—they never have read, so far as I now recollect, from the fourth volume, bearing upon the condition of the farming population and the working people of the South. There is a great deal of very interesting matter in that fourth volume, and it may be that a portion of the interest they feel in the report is the concealment of the contents of that volume. I call attention to it, and I hope that hereafter in discussing the industrial conditions of this country and the effect of different industrial and economic theories where they are being reduced to practice and have been for generations, they will consult the fourth volume of this same investigation. I wish first, however, to read from the third volume, which is the testimony taken at Boston, relating particularly to New England. I wish to read the statement of Mr. Thomas Webb, on page 628 of the third volume:

Thomas Webb examined.

BOSTON, MASS., October 22, 1883.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Where do you reside?
A. In Fall River, Mass.
Q. How old are you?
A. I am nearly seventy years of age.
Q. How long have you lived at Fall River?
A. About thirty-five years.
Q. Where were you born?
A. In Ireland.
Q. How long have you lived in this country?
A. Thirty-five years and some months, more or less.

The CHAIRMAN. I received a letter from somebody at Fall River whom I don't know, referring to a Mr. Thomas Webb who would testify before the committee. I suppose you must be the person referred to. Won't you go on and state why you appear before the committee?

The WITNESS. My object in appearing before the committee is to do what little I can for the purpose of helping the workingmen to a proper view of their own position. The reason why I appear is because I have been requested by a few men, seeing that I had other business up here, to call upon the committee.

Q. At whose request do you call?
A. I have been requested by some men who work in the mills and some few laboring men.

Then he goes on to give his testimony in regard to the condition of things in Fall River, which is very interesting, but I shall not detain the Senate by reading it. Here is one of the subtopics:

TEMPERANCE.

I have watched the progress of this investigation largely, and I have noticed that sometimes it has turned on the question of temperance. Now, the working people, that is the factory operatives, have really not a great deal to spend at the best of times, and to say that is a fault of the system here in America is a misrepresentation of facts. It is not so. It is an old custom, introduced by old-country people like myself. In England, where I was reared, the habit was for a man, when he drew his pay every Saturday night, to go in and enjoy himself. He was not considered a drunkard; neither do I consider the people of Fall River drunkards. They are nothing of the kind. They go in and get their glass of beer as they do in the old country. In this country there has perhaps been some spirits introduced, but the people are not anything like drunkards. Neither is their poverty to be attributed to it.

Then he goes on to other questions, and comes to this:

There is one thing I wish to draw your attention to in relation to the condition of things at Fall River. There was a statement made here the other day by some person of the condition of the people in Fall River. Now, sometimes a man gets out of work who has a large family, and occasionally he does get into terrible difficulties—he is in hunger and want; that I know; but in a long life-time in Fall River I have never known such a condition of affairs as that which has been represented here by one of the men—that is, that there was a thousand persons in that very destitute condition.

Q. Do you mean the statement by O'Donnell?
A. I don't know; I think his name was O'Donnell.
Q. Do you know the man?
A. No; and I don't mean to say that he has not suffered, but I say that in my long experience in Fall River I never knew of such an instance before, and for the credit of this country I hope I shall never see it; and there are a great many people who doubt it; but there are people, as I said before, particularly people who draw their pay monthly, who, if they are turned out of work, sometimes can't get work for some time.

The CHAIRMAN. No doubt a great deal of suffering comes that way.

The WITNESS. For a man to be six or eight months without tasting meat of any kind is something I have never known. If it has been so, he has been more unfortunate than others.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senator to state what witness that is and what is his occupation.

Mr. BLAIR. This is witness Thomas Webb.

Mr. COKE. Is he a workingman?

Mr. BLAIR. He had been thirty-five years a resident of Fall River.

Mr. COKE. Is he a laborer?

Mr. BLAIR. He does not say whether he is a laborer. He gives an account of his coming from the old country. He was an Irishman who came over from the old country, and was requested to appear before the committee, as he says, by some men who worked in the mills and some few laborers. Undoubtedly he is a good man. He appears to be a responsible man, and is a very intelligent witness, who discusses economic questions and states facts in a way that would interest the Senate if there was time to read what he has to say of temperance, lands, free trade, etc. I think probably he might give us all some instruction upon those points. The Senator will find the testimony at page 628 of the same volume from which the testimony of O'Donnell is taken.

Mr. President, I have never dwelt upon this testimony very much, nor upon the fourth volume of the testimony. I have thought, as our debates are apt to take somewhat of a sectional turn, that it was not worth while. I have been engaged for several years in an anxious effort to accomplish what I think is the only end that legislation can accomplish, to relieve the difficulties of the South which are developed in that fourth volume. If the Senator from Texas would take hold with me with that vigor and power of intellect and that strength of demonstration which he possesses, and address himself to the facts in Texas, he would be exhibiting, I think, fully as high an order of patriotism as he does in quoting the contradictory testimony of Mr. O'Donnell here on the floor, and certainly he would relieve me of a strong inclination that I have from time to time as I have listened to the reading of these detached portions of testimony touching the exceptional conditions which prevail here and there in the North. I say it would relieve me from a very strong temptation that I have to retort by exposing the contents of that fourth volume. I pray the Senator to take hold and help pass the educational bill, and there will never be much more occasion to quote from the fourth volume than from the third.

Mr. COKE. I did not hear what the Senator had to say about the fourth volume. I have never read it.

Mr. BLAIR. I take it not, but I hope the Senator will read it.

Mr. ALLISON. I promised at a later stage to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] for some purpose. It is now after 4 o'clock. He desires to call up a matter of which he spoke to me. I will yield to him if the Senator from North Carolina will for a moment withdraw his motion.

Mr. VANCE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11624) to increase the pension of Jacob Rogers; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3732) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

RELIGION AND SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I ought perhaps to apologize to the Senate for availing myself of the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa, but it is a matter which I wish to do at some time, and perhaps it may be done now. As it will relieve the Senate from a long speech later on, I think there will be an inclination perhaps to indulge me at this time.

On the 25th of May last I introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting establishments of religion and free public schools, which was allowed to lie on the table with a view to my addressing remarks to the Senate on the subject at length later on. Petitions have begun to come in, some of them signed in large numbers, bearing upon the subject, and I have thought that in the pressure of affairs it would be better that I should ask the indulgence of the Senate to call up the joint resolution now, and occupy perhaps five minutes instead of an hour, and then I shall ask the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, if there be no objection. It will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, as provided in the Constitution:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. No State shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

SEC. 2. Each State in this Union shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools adequate for the education of all the children living therein, between the ages of six and sixteen years, inclusive, in the common branches of knowledge, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion. But no money raised by taxation imposed by law or any money or other property or credit belonging to any municipal organization, or to any State, or to the United States, shall ever be appropriated, applied, or given to the use or purposes of any school, institution, corporation, or person, whereby instruction or training shall be given in the doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances peculiar to any sect, denomination, organization, or society, being, or claiming to be, religious in its character, or such peculiar doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances be taught or inculcated in the free public schools.

SEC. 3. To the end that each State, the United States, and all the people thereof, may have and preserve governments republican in form and in substance, the United States shall guaranty to every State, and to the people of every State, and of the United States, the support and maintenance of such a system of free public schools as is herein provided.

SEC. 4. That Congress shall enforce this article by legislation when necessary.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] presented yesterday morning, as the Senate may have observed, a petition signed by 3,228 citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the adoption of a constitutional amendment which will prohibit the interference of any religious sect with the system of common public schools. The subject has been agitated in other parts of the country. I ask that the petition be printed as a portion of my remarks.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will allow me a suggestion, will not the prayer of the petition answer without the list of names?

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the prayer simply be printed. It is signed, I may say, by a large mass of the most intelligent and influential citizens of the Commonwealth, and there is no occasion of course for the printing of the names. I should like to have the petition itself, which is comparatively brief, to appear as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be printed as desired.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and members of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned citizens of Massachusetts, sensibly impressed with the importance of education among the people of our land, in the conservation of our Government and the liberties which we so richly enjoy; believing also, as expressed in a late public gathering of patriotic citizens of Boston, in old Faneuil Hall, that "it has now become necessary to guard well the public school as the palladium of our liberty;" and being persuaded also that this desired protection will be more fully effected by a provision in the fundamental laws of the land (as urged upon Congress by that eminent and patriotic citizen, General Grant, while in the Presidential office), would respectfully petition your honorable bodies to speedily frame such article for submission to the Legislatures of the several States for their approval or rejection as will prevent the interference of any religious sect with the "common-school system" or the appropriating of any of the "public funds" for sectarian uses; such a measure as this being, in our judgment, the only safeguard against religious encroachments, such as now threaten our time-honored and truly endeared methods of teaching and training our youth for the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship; to the end also that there may be preserved to us and transmitted to our children's children "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

Mr. BLAIR. The joint resolution proposes in the first article, section 1, that "no State shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." I need not remind the Senate that the Constitution now simply provides, in article first of the amendments, that—

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

There is no restriction whatever placed upon the power or the action of the States in this regard, and yet it is easy to perceive by a little reflection that any State is quite as likely to infringe upon the general and universal principles of liberty by enacting laws respecting establishments of religion or creating establishments of religion, as is the nation itself; and perhaps even more so, because it is so much easier for the influences which would be necessarily exerted in accomplishing that end to prove victorious when brought to bear upon a single State than when brought to bear upon the entire Government at large.

We have in our existing condition, as in the Territory of Utah, an illustration. I need not go further and seek other illustrations. We have there a sufficient illustration of the danger. There is a Territory otherwise entitled unquestionably to admission into the Union, which, if so admitted, would come in with an establishment of religion already an accomplished fact; and it would only require the slightest and most indifferent formality by which she would when once in the Union with a constitution free in its terms proceed to revise that constitution and establish the Mormon religion as the religion of the State. It is designed to guard against this danger by placing upon the States the limitation now imposed in the first article of the amendments by the States upon the nation, the States consenting to place that same limitation upon themselves by the ratification of the proposed amendment.

The second section of the article provides that—

Each State in this Union shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools adequate for the education of all the children living therein, between the ages of six and sixteen years, inclusive, in the common branches of knowledge, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion.

It may be objected, and it is a matter of discussion, that there should be no interference by the General Government in the way of requiring the States to maintain free public schools; but this provision can not be imposed without the consent of the States, hence there is no objection to its submission to them; and there is no otherway by which liberty can be preserved in the States except by the maintenance of a free public-school system. So it seems to me. The object of this provision is to make that duty compulsory upon the States by virtue of the consent of the States previously obtained in the form of the ratification of the amendment.

The clause to require instruction to be given to those between the ages of six and sixteen years inclusive in the common branches of knowledge only, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion, brings up a question much discussed and upon which the public mind is not settled; but it has seemed to me that the fathers' and our own experience, the general assent, I think, of intelligent people throughout the country, require instruction in virtue and morality as much as in the common branches of knowledge and a training of the intellect in the common processes of the mind, virtue and morality being as indispensable to the existence of the State as intelligence itself. We should give instruction in these great ideas and the general duties of the citizen to society and to individuals in the common schools of the country.

It is said that this sort of instruction should be turned over to the clergy, to the churches, to other influences, to the family especially; but we all know, not perhaps mathematically, for we can not settle it exactly, that there are not far from one-third of the children of this country who never see the inside of a church, and who in their family relations are so unfortunate as to have little, if any, training in the ordinary principles of virtue and morality. If it be indispensable that they have training in these ideas, that these ideas be implanted in the young mind with a view to a safe and proper citizenship in the future, the instruction must be given by the public schools dependent upon the power of the State. The preservation of the State demands it, and self-preservation is the first law of nature to the State as of individuals.

In regard to the general principles of the Christian religion, no one but a bigot would think of having introduced into the public schools instruction in favor of any form of sectarianism; but a knowledge of the Christian religion, even if there be no enforcement of those truths upon the conviction and belief of the child, instruction in those principles, a statement or explanation of what they are, exactly as instruction is given in the principles of arithmetic and geography and any of the common branches of science, is exceedingly desirable and important for every citizen of this country to possess, whether he applies the principle in his personal conduct or not, because they are the warp and woof, the very fabric of society, of the surroundings in which he lives, the basis of our customs and laws and of the conduct of life. These general principles are exceedingly essential and important not only to apply in personal conduct, but a knowledge of them should be possessed by any one who is to enter successfully into the ordinary competitions and relations of life. There never was a great nation yet which was without an affirmative religious belief and practice—a religion which was the source and inspiration of perhaps the noblest deeds of the people.

Section 2 then goes on further to guard against anything like sectarian instruction in the following words:

But no money raised by taxation imposed by law or any money or other property or credit belonging to any municipal organization, or to any State, or to the United States, shall ever be appropriated, applied, or given to the use or purposes of any school, institution, corporation, or person, whereby instruction or training shall be given in the doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances peculiar to any sect, denomination, organization, or society, being, or claiming to be, religious in its character, nor shall such peculiar doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances, be taught or inculcated in the free public schools.

I need not advert to the very large accumulation of facts in all parts of the country which have admonished the public mind already that it is essential to the preservation of our institutions, if we would keep them free from the interference of ecclesiastical intolerance and encroachment, that the hand of the State lay itself by constitutional enactment, reaching everywhere throughout the country, upon the increasing practice of the appropriation of the public funds to the promotion and to the maintenance of private religious institutions—in a word, of sectarianism.

I do not enter upon any minute discussion of that subject. That must inevitably come hereafter, because it is up in the country. It is one of those questions which will not down until it is settled, and settled as it ought to be settled.

The third section is as follows:

To the end that each State, the United States, and all the people thereof, may have and preserve governments republican in form and in substance, the United States shall guaranty to every State, and to the people of every State and of the United States, the support and maintenance of such a system of free public schools as is herein provided.

The most important guaranty of the Constitution to the States is the possession of governments republican in form, which is found in section 4 of the fourth article:

The United States shall guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government; it shall protect each of them against invasion, etc.

In that guaranty by the National Government to the States of governments republican in form, is to be found, to my mind, the all-important and preservative function of this nation. I see but two ways in which that guaranty can be made good where in a State it does not already exist, whether it be in an aristocratic form, a government of the many by the few, or whether it be in any other form than a government that is republican. I see, I say, no way in which that guaranty can be made good except it be by force, or that it be by qualifying the citizen in advance to discharge the duties which are incumbent upon him as one of the sovereigns of his country; in other words, to guaranty education, instruction, knowledge, intellectual knowledge, and also a knowledge of the principles of virtue and morality, and of the general principles of that religion which is the religion of the United States.

The object of this third section is to specify a way in which, in advance, the guaranty of a government republican in form can be given to every State. This is not a duty to be entered upon unless the parent fails. The State does not enter upon it unless the parent fails, but the fact is that as a rule parents can not educate their children. Therefore it is that the State is called upon to do it, and it does it in every State of the Union so far as constitutions and theories and laws are concerned as to every child. That is the theory. If the parent did this the State would have no occasion to do it. But the parent does not do it; the parent can not do it, and the State assumes that burden of necessity.

If the State fails, since intelligence and virtue are indispensable to the existence of republican government in the State, how is the nation to accomplish this guaranty unless by qualifying the child, or at least giving the opportunity of the qualification to the child who is to become the citizen? So I have proposed in this amendment that this guaranty, where the State fails and only where the State fails, shall be made good, not by force, but by a preliminary preparation of the child to be a citizen, so that when he becomes a sovereign, wherever he is, a government republican in form prevails as a matter of course.

Force may establish the government republican in form, but education alone can preserve, or, in the language of the Constitution, can guaranty its continuance to the States or its preservation to the nation itself.

Such, very briefly indeed, are the provisions of this proposed amendment and the principles upon which it is founded. It has been pending since last May, as I said before, and I now move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

THE SAMOAN ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

On the 2d of April last I transmitted to the House of Representatives, in response to its resolution of the 8th of the preceding March, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying correspondence, relative to affairs in Samoa. On the same day I answered a resolution of the Senate of the 21st of the preceding December to the same effect, but adopted in executive session; and, in order to avoid duplication of the numerous documents involved, referred to the correspondence which accompanied my public response to the resolution of the House of Representatives and which was duly printed and published by order of that body. (House Executive Document No. 238, Fiftieth Congress, first session.)

In my annual message of the 3d instant I announced my intention in due course to lay before Congress further correspondence on Samoan affairs. Accordingly, I now transmit a report of the Secretary of State with accompanying correspondence on that subject.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, December 21, 1888.

JAMES A. TERRELL.

Mr. COCKRELL. This morning I asked the Senator from Iowa to give way until I could call up the bill (S. 1278) for the relief of James A. Terrell, which has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Claims, and simply refers a claim to the Quartermaster's Department to be investigated and reported on to Congress. I hope it will pass. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1278) for the relief of James A. Terrell.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 13, after the word "purposes," to strike out the words "the amount of the injury and damage to such hotel arising from and incident to such use and occupation;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army the circumstances, character, and extent of the alleged use and occupation by the United States military authorities for Government purposes, during the late war, of the large frame hotel situate on block 2, in and on the east side of Macon City, in the county of Macon, in the State of Missouri, and of a large tract of timbered land on the west and adjoining said Macon City, the actual value of the use and occupation of the said hotel for the time it was so used and occupied for Government purposes, and the value of the timber taken from such timbered land by military authority for Government purposes, and to find, award, and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what amount of money, if any, is equitably due to said James A. Terrell from the United States as the reasonable value of such use and occupation of said frame hotel so occupied, and for the injuries and damages to such hotel building, the natural result of such use and occupation, and the value of the timber taken from said timbered land, by military authority, for Government purposes and so used; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said James A. Terrell, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount, if any, so found and awarded to be due from the United States, not to exceed $3,456; and the acceptance by said Terrell of any sum awarded under this act shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of every character and nature for such use and occupation and all damages resulting therefrom, and for all such timber.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT ELECTRIC WIRES.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have a report or two from the Committee on Printing that I would be glad to submit to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, if there be no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have first the appendices to Major Raymond's report concerning conduits in the District of Columbia. The committee reports, of course, that they should be printed. The cost is moderate, being $760.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Including the maps and papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the maps to be reprinted?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are to be printed. The report itself was ordered printed heretofore, and has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations; but the appendices were referred to the Committee on Printing for an estimate. The committee recommends that they be printed, and the cost will be $760.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRIBUTION OF SUPREME COURT REPORTS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to call up the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes, for which the Committee on Printing recommends a substitute.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 683 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to provide for the distribution, by the Secretary of the Interior, of one set of the official reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, or an exact reprint of the same, comprising volumes 1 to 122, inclusive, or so many volumes as may be needed with those already supplied to make one such set, to each of the places where the circuit and district courts of the United States are regularly held: Provided, That where a circuit court and district court are both holden at the same place, only one such set, or so many volumes as may be needed with those already supplied to make one such set, shall be distributed to that place: Provided further, That for the sets or parts of sets distributed as aforesaid not exceeding $2 per volume shall be paid; and said report shall be kept by the clerks of said courts and their successors in office for the use of said courts and the officers thereof; and the sum of $28,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to carry out the above provision.

SEC. 2. That, beginning with volume 123, the reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States shall deliver to the Secretary of the Interior, in addition to the number heretofore required by law to be so delivered by him, 76 copies of each volume of the reports of said decisions, for which additional copies he shall be allowed not exceeding $2 per volume. And hereafter all the copies of said reports furnished by said reporter shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner heretofore authorized by law: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall also distribute to each of the places where the circuit and district courts of the United States are regularly holden one copy of the reports so furnished, to be kept by the clerks of said courts and their successors in office, for the use of said courts and the officers thereof: Provided, further, That where a circuit court and a district court are both holden at the same place, only one copy shall be distributed to that place, and the residue of the copies shall be deposited in the Library of Congress. And the said reports, in all cases where the same are distributed as aforesaid, shall remain the property of the United States, and be preserved as such by the above-named officers, and by them to be turned over to their successors in office; and so much of section 386 of the Revised Statutes as charges the Department of Justice with the distribution thereof is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CALL. I move to add to the amendment the words "one copy to each Senator and Representative." I suggest that amendment to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator will excuse me from agreeing to that. I think it opens quite another question to give one hundred and fifty volumes, more or less, to each Senator. We want to provide the circuit and district courts with a set of the reports. It seems to be entirely proper to do so. Some of them have a partial set, and it is proposed to fill out the sets.

The bill came from the House of Representatives, but seemed to be quite imperfect as it came here. It has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General, and the draught which the committee submits as an amendment came from the Attorney-General's Office, and was carefully drawn to supply what he thinks ought to be supplied, remodeling to some extent the old section 683. I beg the Senator from Florida not to try to add to it a present to Senators and Representatives.

Mr. CALL. I shall not embarrass the passage of the bill against the wishes of the Senator who has it in charge. I will, however, say that there can be no possible reason why a judge of a court should be better informed in regard to the construction of the laws than the members of the legislative bodies that have to create the law.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose the answer to that is that we have a library right at our own hands for reference, and that a set of the reports at a court are used by the whole bench and bar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the distribution of the reports of the Supreme Court."

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed again to the consideration of the bill (S. 2511) to withdraw the public lands of the United States in Mississippi from sale at ordinary private entry, and to restrict disposals thereof under general statutes to homestead settlers, it being the bill which was under consideration this morning.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WALTHALL to add:

But this act shall not be so construed as to deny to any State the right to select lands in place or indemnity lands in accordance with existing laws making land grants to States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. After the word "entry," in line 6, I move to insert the words "except those in the State of Missouri."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add at the close of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not interfere with the existing authority to enter lands for town sites, nor with the authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to sell isolated and disconnected tracts of land of less than 160 acres in extent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the bill be read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as it stands with the amendments.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the public lands of the United States now subject to private entry, except those in the State of Missouri, shall be disposed of under and according to the provisions of the homestead laws only. But this act shall not be so construed as to deny to any State the right to select lands in place or indemnity lands in accordance with existing laws making land grants to States: Provided, That this act shall not interfere with the existing authority to enter lands for town sites, nor with the authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to sell isolated and disconnected tracts of land of less than 160 acres in extent.

Mr. DOLPH. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that the proviso might prevent the perfection of title to pre-emption claims, if there be any, upon these offered lands. I suggest that he add to the proviso "nor to prevent the perfection of title to pre-emption claims already initiated."

Mr. PLUMB. Very, well; I do not think it would do so, but I will move that amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. The law is that the United States may make another disposition of the land upon which there is a pre-emption claim until the patent finally issues. I think this might be held to be another disposition of the land and cut off those pre-emption claimants.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add to the proviso the words "nor to prevent the perfection of titles to pre-emption claims already initiated."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proviso will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this act shall not interfere with the existing authority to enter lands for town sites, nor with the authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to sell isolated and disconnected tracts of land of less than 160 acres in extent, nor to prevent the perfection of titles to pre-emption claims already initiated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only."

MICHAEL PIGOTT.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8469) for the relief of Michael Pigott.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay Michael Pigott, late postmaster at Quincy, Ill., $48, paid by him for use of telephone for the year ending June 30, 1873.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY ROAD AT FLORENCE, S. C.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10869) to construct a road from Florence, S. C., to the national cemetery adjacent thereto.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $15,000, to be used in the construction of a macadam or gravel road leading from the town of Florence, S. C., to the national cemetery in the vicinity of that town.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EQUIPMENT OF OREGON MILITIA.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5009) to provide certain arms, ammunition, and equipage to the State of Oregon for the militia thereof.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

EQUIPMENT OF MONTANA MILITIA.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1959) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, after the word "artillery," in line 11, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the amount to be expended under the provisions of this act shall not exceed the sum of $33,860.76, being the balance remaining charged against said Territory on account of the sum of $69,296.77, charged against said Territory on account of the issuance of field artillery, arms, etc., in August, 1867; and to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of this act said sum of $33,860.76 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MOORHEAD, LEECH LAKE AND NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7261) granting the right of way through certain lands in the State of Minnesota to the Moorhead, Leech Lake and Northern Railway Company.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 870) to provide for the retirement of a certain class of officers in the United States Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not insist upon taking that bill up now. I shall be compelled to discuss it at some little length, and I shall be compelled also to ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon it. I am afraid the Senator would not be able to get it through this evening, and there will be time for its consideration after the holiday recess. I trust the Senator will not insist upon it this evening. It certainly can not be passed this evening.

Mr. HALE. I can not urge it if the Senator insists. I had hoped that by this time he would have permitted it to go through without objection. If he desires to discuss it or to call for the yeas and nays, of course I can not insist on going on with it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will say frankly that I shall be compelled to do that.

FORFEITURE OF MICHIGAN RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me until I can make a report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VANCE. Very well.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State, to report back the bill with the recommendation that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a committee of conference. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, reports the bill stated by him with the recommendation that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference upon the bill and amendments. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11624) to increase the pension of Jacob Rogers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. VANCE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment, under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, being to Wednesday, January 2, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 21st day of December, 1888.

UNITED STATES CONSULS.

John Tyler Campbell, of California, now consul at Auckland, to be consul of the United States at Foo-Chow, vice Joseph C. A. Wingate, resigned.

John Darcey Connolly, of California, to be consul of the United States at Auckland, in the place of John Tyler Campbell, nominated to be consul at Foo-Chow.

William H. Robertson, of the District of Columbia, now commercial agent at Port Hope, Canada, to be consul of the United States at St. Galle, in place of Peter Staub, resigned.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Daniel W. Moseley, of Virginia, to be collector of customs for the district of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, to succeed Otis H. Russell, removed.

POSTMASTER.

Rufus H. Steadman, to be postmaster at Perry, in the county of Wyoming and State of New York, in the place of Hugh M. Scranton, whose commission expired December 19, 1888.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 21, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Hon. WILLIAM L. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, appeared and took his seat.

HOUSES FOR OFFICERS, NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations for the construction of houses for officers of the Naval Academy; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT FUND, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of expenditures for contingent expenses of the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

LIMIT OF ADVANCES TO UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information as to the effect of the provision of law limiting advances to United States marshals to $300,000; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of fact and law in certain spoliation cases; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 3645) granting to the Astoria and State Coast Railway Company the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, in the county of Clatsop, State of Oregon; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. O'DONNELL, for this day.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 337) granting a pension to Mary E. Johnston; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution I send to the desk at this time.

The SPEAKER. Has this resolution been reported from a committee?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; it is on the Calendar. I ask to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the resolution providing for an investigation into certain affairs in the District of Columbia——

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The resolution was read at length.

Mr. ATKINSON. I object.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understood that this was unanimously reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I wish to state to the gentleman that I call this up at the request of the chairman of the District Committee.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to say that I still adhere to my objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Regular order.

Mr. TOOLE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that request for a moment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well, I will withdraw it.

Mr. TOOLE. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of Senate bill 1941, to provide for the erection of a public building at Helena, Mont., and pass the same with an amendment reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is the consideration of this bill asked for, or simply the consideration of an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The consideration of the bill. The committee reports an amendment. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, the regular order is the call of committees for reports on bills of a private nature.

AFFAIRS IN MADAGASCAR.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the following resolution—

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, any recent information in the Department of State touching affairs in Madagascar"— having had the same under consideration, report it back and recommend its passage.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. McCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING THE DIGEST.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to submit a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 2,500 copies of the Digest of the present session, prepared by John C. Robinson, Journal Clerk, under the act of March 3, 1877, be printed and bound for the use of the House, the same to be printed under the direction of the Speaker and the Clerk of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is the usual resolution in regard to the Digest which has been adopted heretofore.

Mr. BURROWS. Is that reported from the committee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not reported by the committee. I now offer the resolution for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to rise to submit a report from the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir. I offer it as a privileged resolution for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. It is not privileged in its present form. If reported by the committee it would be a privileged resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I ask its reference to the Committee on Printing.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand for the regular order, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] has withdrawn his objection to the consideration of my resolution.

Mr. WILKINS. Is it the resolution for the investigation?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. WILKINS. Then I object.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to announce to the gentleman that we are——

Mr. WILKINS. Regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. But attempting——

Mr. WILKINS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand that.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the committees for reports.

Mr. TAULBEE. Regular order. [Laughter.]

IRRIGATION IN EGYPT.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the House resolution requesting the Secretary of War to transmit to the House the translation made by Maj. A. M. Miller, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, of a work on irrigation in Egypt by a French engineer officer, with accompanying plates.

The SPEAKER. This is a public measure, and the regular order is the submitting of reports on private measures; but if there be no objection the Chair will entertain the request of the gentleman.

Mr. GEAR. I move to refer it to the Committee on Printing, as it carries an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Military Affairs will be discharged from its further consideration, and it will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

DIGEST AND MANUAL OF RULES AND PRACTICE OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the following report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having considered House resolution to print 2,500 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives, report the same with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is not that the resolution which was referred to the committee a few minutes ago?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order that the committee has had no session since the resolution was referred to it; and that it has no authority to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I withdraw the resolution.

The call of the committees was completed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. VANDEVER. I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is insisted upon by several gentlemen; but if the gentleman will send up his bill the Chair will cause it to be referred.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. McMILLIN in the chair.

NICARAGUA MARITIME CANAL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (S. 135) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, with the following pending amendment: On page 4, section 2, line 3, after the word "each," strike out down to and including the word "each" in line 4.

Mr. ADAMS. In regard to this amendment and other amendments that have been proposed I wish to say this: A large majority of members in this House are in favor of this project, but many gentlemen have proposed amendments calculated to hamper and restrain the action of the incorporators of the new company.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend until order is restored.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment which the Clerk has just read.

Mr. PAYSON. In the confusion it was not quite heard here.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], and I may say in regard to amendments proposed by other gentlemen, I wish to point out that although they are proposed by gentlemen with the utmost good faith, they are for the most part unnecessary, and therefore, as I think, they are injurious.

I have noticed in the course of this debate that hardly a single member of the House has spoken against the project of a canal across the Isthmus by the Nicaragua route. We all seem to be in favor of the enterprise. But gentlemen propose amendments to the bill, and the effect of all these amendments is to hamper or restrain the action of the incorporators of the canal company, either in the formation of the company or in the prosecution of its business after the incorporation has been effected. The idea seems to be that without such restraints there is danger that the company will be perverted from its legitimate functions and become a mere stock-jobbing or kite-flying concern.

I do not believe there is the slightest danger of that, and therefore I think that most of the amendments proposed are unnecessary and injurious. I am unwilling to hamper in the outset the greatest American enterprise that has been set on foot during this generation by any amendment to this bill the propriety and necessity of which can not be clearly proved. I am not willing by my vote to place the slightest obstacle in the way of the successful inauguration and completion of a project fraught with almost incalculable advantages, political as well as commercial, to the people of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, let us remember when we vote on these amendments that if we incorporate this company it will go into the money markets of the world and solicit subscriptions to its stock and bonds under great disadvantages. It will encounter from the very beginning strong and persistent opposition from many quarters. All its operations from the opening of its subscription-books till the canal is in actual operation will be carried on under the electric light, if I may say so, of hostile criticism.

The stockholders of the present Panama Canal Company, or of the new Panama Canal Company, if there shall be a new one, will have the strongest motives to discourage this new undertaking. If successful it will be an active rival of their own enterprise. So long as human nature is what it is they may be expected to exaggerate its difficulties and discourage subscriptions to its stock. The stockholders of the Suez Canal Company will be influenced by the same motives, and they will act in the same way. The success of this enterprise will open a new and rival route between Liverpool and Hong-Kong. The Pacific railroads of the United States, and for all I know the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, will watch with jealous scrutiny every step in the progress of this new corporation. The Panama Railroad Company and the American Atlantic and Pacific Ship Canal Company, which has mailed a circular to all of us, also have an interest antagonistic to the Nicaragua Canal Company.

But that is not all. It is not improbable that the entire merchant marine of Great Britain, and particularly the steam-ship interest of England and Scotland, will have some reason to look upon the Nicaragua project with an unfriendly eye. It has been pointed out by Commander H. C. Taylor in a recent number of the Forum magazine that the Nicaragua route between Europe and the East has such a relation to the course of the trade-winds that the opening of this route will probably give an impetus to the building and use of sailing vessels instead of steamers for the ocean carrying trade. If that is so it will endanger the supremacy of the tramp steamer. And as the tramp steamer is the most important factor in the present supremacy of the British merchant marine, it is not impossible that the success of the Nicaragua route will mark the first step in the restoration of the American merchant marine. It is more than probable that the vast amount of capital invested in the building and running of British freight steamers will foresee this, and will view the success of the Nicaragua Canal Company with jealousy and alarm.

The consequence of the antagonism of all this vast amount of capital which I have referred to will be that every restriction which we lay upon the management of the enterprise will be an additional obstacle to its success, while at the same time the jealous scrutiny to which it will be subjected by hostile criticism tends to render unnecessary those checks and safeguards which, under other conditions, would be entirely proper. I believe that the circumstances under which the Nicaragua Canal Company will have to fight its way to success will render it impossible to make of it a kite-flying or a stock-jobbing concern.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is not all. I have spoken of the commercial rivals of the Nicaragua Canal. Let me remind the committee that political influences may be against it. There is a political power, not strong on the floor of this House, but strong in London, Paris, and Frankfort, where the company may go for the capital to carry on the work which is likely to look askance on a Nicaragua Canal Company incorporated by Congress under a charter which Congress has the right to amend, and governed by a board of directors a majority of whom must be citizens of the United States. I mean the political power of the British Empire. Let me remind the committee of the diplomatic contention between Great Britain and the United States in regard to the Monroe doctrine, or rather in regard to the application of that doctrine to the question of transit across the American isthmus.

When the Monroe doctrine was first announced as the American policy, over sixty years ago, it was with the approval, and even at the suggestion of Great Britain. It was then demanded by British interests as well as American. But twenty-five years later, when we projected a Nicaragua canal on the very route now proposed, we found the eastern terminus of the proposed canal in possession of a tribe of Indians under the protectorate of Great Britain. For that reason, and only for that reason, we made the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. From that time to this the British contention has been that by making that treaty we have debarred ourselves from applying the Monroe doctrine to the question of transit across the isthmus.

Our contention, on the other hand, has been for the last twenty-five years that neither the Clayton-Bulwer treaty nor anything else ought to prevent us from carrying out what President Hayes declared to be the policy of this country—a canal under American control.

Now, then, can we suppose that the same British influence which was exerted to delay and embarrass the building of the Suez Canal until it was seen to be more of a benefit to the British Empire than to any one else, will not be exerted directly or indirectly to embarrass and delay the sale of the stocks and bonds of this American company in the money centers of Europe?

Mr. PAYSON. Will my colleague permit an inquiry at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. A single question. How are the difficulties which my colleague suggests to be met by permitting this corporation to issue fictitious evidences of capital?

Mr. ADAMS. But I am not in favor of allowing that. No part of this bill will permit the issue of fictitious evidences of capital or indebtedness. I have not the time to go into that question at length. If the capital can be enlarged—that is, the shares of capital stock—it will only be because more money has been paid in. I am not in favor of stock-watering, nor do I think there is any danger of it under this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the passage of this bill and the inauguration and completion of the Nicaragua Canal under the provisions of this bill will be a practical assertion of the Monroe doctrine as applied to the question of canal transit across the Isthmus. The failure to pass this bill or the failure of the company to organize under its provisions will leave that great question undecided. It ought to be decided now. It is far better to secure the building of a canal under American control at the present time, when our relations with foreign powers are friendly, than to postpone action to a time when complications with European powers may exist, and when our action may be attributed to a desire to add to those complications, or to take advantage of them.

We do not know whether the Panama Canal will be built by the present company or by some new company. We do not know whether it will ever be built at all. If it is built we do not know whether the stock will continue to be owned by citizens of France, as it is now, or will be transferred to British subjects, or even to the British Government, as a large part of the stock of the Suez Canal Company was transferred.

One thing we do know—we have nothing to lose and everything to gain by the speedy completion of the Nicaragua Canal under American auspices. We can not afford to take the slightest risk of failure or delay. We can not afford even to allow the work to be done under a State charter, which Congress would not have the right to amend. We ought to pass the bill in such a shape that the company will be promptly formed, the money promptly subscribed, and the work promptly completed.

For that reason we ought not to adopt any amendment to the bill unless it is clearly shown to be necessary. To say that the passage of the bill imposes an additional political responsibility upon the United States is nothing against it. That responsibility we ought not to hesitate to assume. It means simply that Congress by an act of legislation will assert the same American policy which our Presidents and Secretaries of State have been asserting for the last twenty-five years.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen on the other side are entitled to five minutes if they desire to occupy it.

The CHAIRMAN. Those who are opposed to the bill are entitled to five minutes more, and if no other gentleman desires to occupy the time the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. The motion to limit the debate to ten minutes did not prevail. The motion was made, and it was under consideration when the House adjourned.

Mr. CLARDY. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, the motion did prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is so informed by the clerk who keeps the time.

Mr. SPINOLA. We proceeded to a vote, but the point of "no quorum" was raised, and the matter went over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have read by the Clerk the portion of the RECORD which pertains to the question raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA].

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the further consideration of the pending bill; and pending that he moves that all debate upon the second section and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] moves to amend by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty."

Mr. PAYSON. And also by limiting the motion to the section and the pending amendments.

Mr. CLARDY. My motion applies to all amendments to the section. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] that I am willing to agree to twenty minutes, provided the limitation applies to all the amendments to the section.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not agree to that. I am willing to have a short limitation, provided it be confined to pending amendments; but I desire to have it so that those who have substantial amendments to offer shall have an opportunity to discuss them.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. PAYSON; and there were—ayes 15, noes 63.

Mr. SPINOLA. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 13, noes 150.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the previous question has already been ordered. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 13.

Mr. SPINOLA. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. SPINOLA and Mr. CLARDY.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 148, noes 16.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] to control the time in favor of the amendment, if he desires recognition. The gentleman is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. SPINOLA. My purpose, Mr. Chairman, in presenting the amendment was to limit, if possible, the amount of capital with which this company shall go into operation. It appeared to me that $100,000,000 was a very large sum of money for this purpose, and with the right to issue an unlimited amount of bonds would give the company all the facilities they would require in the construction of this great public work; for it is a great public work, and I so recognize it. I wish to state here that the amendments I have offered have been offered in good faith and for the sole purpose of perfecting the bill by making it as acceptable as possible to the House of Representatives and the public at large.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. And pulling back its passage all the while, you might as well say.

Mr. SPINOLA. You may throw that fling out if you please. I will continue, while on the floor of the House, to "pull back the passage" of any bill which I do not consider proper.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Well, it is a nice way to destroy the bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. My dear friend, I could be persuaded to do almost anything in the world for you that you might ask or suggest, except to vote for a measure which does not fully meet my approbation.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Well, I hope the gentleman will soon get the bill into a shape to meet his approbation, and let us vote upon it.

Mr. SPINOLA. This is my time——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, but you are polite enough to allow me to interrupt you; you are always very polite; still you are sometimes very damaging to the progress of legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPINOLA. When an amendment is offered which, from my point of view, appears detrimental to the public interest, I desire to be as "damaging" as possible. Upon any other question the gentleman will find me pliable—as soft as putty. [Laughter.]

My purpose in this amendment, as I have stated, was to limit the amount of stock this company shall issue.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In other words, to provide that the stock shall have some relation to the cost of the work.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, that is my purpose.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not think that is a very bad proposition.

Mr. SPINOLA. Now, if the House should not think proper to adopt my amendment, I can not help it. I shall feel that I have done my duty. A majority of members, doing what they think to be right, may vote the other way. I shall vote for the amendment, because I consider it a proper one to be adopted.

One word in regard to all these adverse interests which the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. ADAMS] has enumerated, going over the five fingers of his hand. If he had five fingers more, he could have named probably five more. [Laughter.] I simply desire to state that those interests to which the gentleman has referred have none of them appealed to me by letter or otherwise; on the contrary, I have in my drawer a large number of telegrams and private letters from some of the best men in the city of New York, some of my most intimate and close personal friends, asking me to favor the passage of this bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the gentleman did not understand me as saying that those parties are opposing the passage of this bill here on the floor of the House. I said they would embarrass the sale of its stock and bonds in the money markets of the world, so long as human nature is what it is.

Mr. SPINOLA. They may do that anyhow. Of course that is human nature, and we can not prevent it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What is the estimated cost of this work?

Mr. SPINOLA. As I understand by the reports coming from the Senate, and from the statements made before the Senate committee, the engineer, Mr. Menocal, who has charge of the enterprise, has fixed the amount at $64,000,000, or thereabouts.

Mr. CLARDY. One of the engineers estimates the cost at $147,000,000.

Mr. SPINOLA. And one estimate is as low as $46,000,000; so that there is a disagreement among the doctors.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If I understand the purpose of my friend from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], his sole object is to provide in the bill that the amount of capital when issued shall have some just and proper relation to the cost of constructing the work.

Mr. CLARDY. Stock can only be issued, as I said the other day, for property to be used in the operation of the canal and for money paid in.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I only want to say further, if my friend from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] will permit me, that in my judgment, if there is any one thing from which our people are suffering to-day, it is from the increased cost of transportation resulting from the necessity of declaring dividends upon watered stock.

A MEMBER. Fictitious capital.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, "fictitious capital;" and my friend from Missouri will certainly agree with me that there ought to be in this bill such limitations as will prevent the consummation of a wrong like that. I do not say that it is intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time limited for debate on this section is exhausted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, which announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

The message announced passage of House bills of the following titles, with amendments in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. 5985) to increase the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardiner, and Mrs. Lilla May Pavy to $30 per month; and A bill (H. R. 9385) for the relief of Christian Kunzie.

NICARAGUA MARITIME CANAL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 22, noes 46.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. SPINOLA and Mr. CLARDY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 25, noes 138.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next section.

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the rule requires, when a vote of the committee discloses the absence of a quorum, that the roll shall be called.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct in his premises; but by the last announcement of the tellers a quorum has voted on this question.

Mr. PAYSON. I offer a further amendment, to come in after the word "corporation," in the last line but four of the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE], which is first in order, and which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be inserted after section 2:

"Provided, That the concessions of the Nicaraguan Government, nor any part thereof, shall not be changed, nor shall the company here chartered release the Government of Nicaragua from any of said concessions without the consent of the Government of the United States first obtained; and any violation of this provision shall operate as a forfeiture of the franchises of the company."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 18, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I desired to offer a moment ago was proposed to be offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, and as a part of section 2. I observe that that amendment becomes a new section, section 3, and as there are possibly other amendments pending with reference to the second section, and as I do not desire to forestall any action on the part of those who have amendments to offer to section 2, I shall withdraw the amendment for the present until section 3 is reached in its regular order.

Mr. SPINOLA. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 2 as follows:

"Nothing in this act contained shall interfere with the rights, privileges, immunities, and franchises of the Central American Transit Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYSON. I now offer the amendment to which I referred a few moments ago, to come in at the end of section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

Insert after section 2:

"All bonds, stocks, and certificates issued for or as a part of the capital of the company shall be issued at its principal office in the city of New York."

Mr. CLARDY. That section has been passed from.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was sent up some time ago, but was temporarily withdrawn, as the Clerk was about to commence the reading of the third section and the question was raised as to whether it was amendable or not. The Chair thinks it is but right to allow the gentleman to offer the amendment under the circumstances.

Mr. CLARDY. I will make no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. CLARDY. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON. I now offer a further amendment, to come in at the end of section 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the amendment just adopted:

"All shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities of this company, shall be disposed of only for cash, to be paid into the company's treasury and used for corporate purposes: Provided, That this shall not apply to bonds or certificates issued under article 50 of the concession of Nicaragua to the canal company."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 21, noes 58.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. PAYSON and Mr. CLARDY.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. CLARDY (one of the tellers). I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois may be again submitted to the committee.

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KILGORE reported that the Committee on Enrolled Bills had examined and found duly enrolled the bill (H. R. 11878) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

NICARAGUA MARITIME CANAL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the affairs of the said company shall be managed by a board of directors, fifteen in number, who shall hold their office for three years and until their successors are duly chosen and qualified, and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States. At the first election five shall be chosen by the stockholders for one year, five for two years, and five for three years, and at each annual election thereafter five shall be chosen by the stockholders for three years. The said board shall elect from its number a president, who shall be a citizen and resident of the United States, and one or more vice-presidents of the company, who shall hold office for such terms as the by-laws of said board may provide and until their successors are duly elected and shall have qualified.

Mr. LANHAM. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, section 3, strike out the words "a majority of whom" and insert "who."

Mr. LANHAM. The object of this amendment is to require that all the directors of the company shall be citizens of the United States. The text of the bill requires a majority of them simply to be citizens of the United States. My purpose is to Americanize this institution as far as practicable if the bill shall become a law.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment; to strike out the words, on page 5, line 4, "a majority," and insert "two-thirds;" so that it will read:

And two-thirds of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States.

Mr. BAYNE (to Mr. LANHAM). That is better; perhaps you had better accept that.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; it is right as first suggested.

Mr. CLARDY. The bill as originally introduced was without any provision as to citizenship or residence of the directors, but it was amended by the committee so that a majority of the directory should be residents and citizens of the United States. It will be necessary, of course, as has been frequently stated on the floor, to go abroad to raise money to construct the canal; and it has been thought, as perhaps much more than half the capital would be raised elsewhere, it would be but right and proper that some representation should be given to the foreign stockholders.

And I think myself that if the majority of the directors are Americans, it sufficiently, to use the language of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], Americanizes this enterprise, and I do not believe the amendment ought to be insisted upon. I know the gentleman from Texas would do nothing he believed would militate against the passage of this bill in such a shape as that the money could be raised and the canal be built under it; and I therefore think that neither the amendment presented by the gentleman from Texas, nor that presented by the gentleman from Ohio, providing that two-thirds of the directors shall be Americans, should be adopted.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. It seems to me that when this charter is given by the Congress of the United States that we ought to have two-thirds of the directors citizens of the United States. If the bill is as important as it has been stated to be, and I believe it is, I think it is a matter of great importance to this country, and for that reason I am in favor of more than a majority. I think where we have a board of fifteen directors two-thirds of these should be citizens and residents of the United States. Where you have a board of fifteen and only have a bare majority, that bare majority may not control in important meetings and in regard to important questions. We would only have eight Americans and might have seven foreigners. The sickness of a single member might change control for the time being. I think that would not be entirely safe, and if we propose to enforce the Monroe doctrine in this country, and propose to charter this corporation for this important purpose, we ought to have two-thirds inserted in this bill as the number of Americans who should be on this board of directors, and therefore I insist upon my amendment.

Mr. MCADOO. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept that amendment. I am, as every one knows, a friend of this bill; but I think this is a very proper amendment. We are going out of our way to incorporate this company. It is a very unusual thing for the United States to incorporate a great private corporation. We are doing it with the view of building the canal under American auspices, and we want to make this incorporation as safe as possible. Therefore I, for one, as a friend of the measure, will accept the amendment.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have no authority to accept an amendment of that kind. If I may be permitted to say so, this whole question was considered before the committee, and it was the judgment of the committee that a majority of the directors being citizens of the United States would be sufficient.

Mr. PLUMB withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. While in favor of guarding in every possible way the interests of our country, we certainly should be careful that we do not incumber the bill with provisions that will embarrass this corporation. By the bill as it is now drawn, a majority of the directors must not only be citizens, but residents of the United States, and by the bill as it now stands, the president must not only be a citizen, but a resident of the United States.

So far as the protection of the rights and interests of the United States is concerned, therefore, that is just as valuable as if we had every one of the directors, because it gives us control of the company. Now, when we bear in mind the fact that perhaps the bulk of this capital must be raised abroad, and the many other clauses that we have introduced into this bill for the purpose of protecting the interests of our own country, it will be seen that this is not necessary. If we should adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] it would make it impossible for us to have even a director resident in Nicaragua, because all of the directors would be required to reside within the limits of the United States. I submit that that would be entirely unnecessary, would be in no sense a benefit to the United States, and would not protect our interests any further than they would be protected by the other provisions, but would simply result in embarrassing this enterprise unnecessarily, and in making it more difficult to raise the money abroad.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman, I would be very much in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] were it not for the fact that it contravenes the provisions of the concession. The concession, in article 11, provides that—

The Government of Nicaragua, in its character of shareholder in the company of execution, as hereinafter provided for, shall have the perpetual right of naming one director, who shall be an integral part of the board of directors of the company, with all the rights, privileges, and advantages conferred upon them by the statutes of the company and the laws of the country under which it shall organize.

That is the concession. As to the amendment providing that all the directors shall be residents of the United States, I am in favor of it, but I call attention to the fact that it contravenes the terms of the concession.

Mr. MCADOO. We do not ask that all shall be residents of the United States, only two-thirds.

Mr. LANHAM. As I understand the provision of the concession just read by the gentleman from Maryland, it only provides that one director shall be a citizen of Nicaragua.

Mr. RAYNER. But your amendment provides that they shall all of them be citizens of the United States.

Mr. LANHAM. Well, I am willing that my amendment shall be modified so as to permit the one Nicaraguan director provided for in the concession.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What benefit will that be to us?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] proposes to modify his amendment so as to allow one director in accordance with the terms of the concession cited by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

Mr. MCADOO withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR to the amendment of Mr. LANHAM, and the amendment was agreed to—ayes 40, noes 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] as amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment as amended.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 4 and 5 the words "and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States" and insert "the directors shall be citizens of the United States or of Nicaragua, and a majority of such directors shall be citizens and residents of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that that would not be in order as an amendment to the amendment which has just been adopted, but that it would be in order as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Texas as amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the way in which I offer it. It is very obvious that unless some such amendment is adopted this company is to be practically a foreign corporation, because the great body of the capital is to be furnished by foreigners. The country seems to be very sensitive upon some questions in connection with our foreign relations; but when it comes to extending undue favoritism to foreign capital we seem to be very prompt in granting extraordinary franchises, such as we have never granted to our own citizens in such sweeping form.

If this corporation is to have any American character at all, its board of directors at least should be American, or if not entirely American, should pertain to the American continent. I admit that under the terms of the concessions—the so-called concessions (for it is a matter of doubt whether any have been made by the Nicaraguan Government)— that Government is entitled to one director. But I hope this Congress will not allow this matter to go beyond the two governments at least. If by an extraordinary provision we should create a corporation foreign in its capital and largely foreign in its control, we might be embroiled not only with the southern governments of our own continent, but also with European governments. I insist that this company should at least have the merit of being confined to the two governments concerned—the one that is to take the responsibility of controlling this great enterprise, the other the government within whose territorial limits these extraordinary powers are to be exercised. It seems to me that an argument in favor of such a line of policy is apparent in this: that we are taking a new departure here; we are taking a step of exceedingly doubtful constitutionality in legislating in a field from which Congress has heretofore shrunk. We are proposing to assume the responsibility of coming in contact, direct contact, with the European as well as the South American powers. I hope to this extent at least some protection will be furnished.

Mr. CLARDY. If we can have a vote now, I shall not move that the committee rise, otherwise I must do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 4 and 5 the words "and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States" and insert "the directors shall be citizens of the United States or of Nicaragua, and a majority of such directors shall be citizens and residents of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question) said: The noes seem to have it

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 32, noes 33.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the vote will be taken over again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will put the question again, as there was a very small number voting.

The question being again taken, the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was adopted.

Mr. LANHAM. I move to amend by inserting, in line 11 of section 3, after the words "one or more vice-presidents of the company," the words "who shall also be citizens and residents of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to amend by inserting at the end of section 3 the provision which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All tolls, charges, and regulations concerning commerce of or with the United States shall be reasonable and just; and in case of dispute between this company or any of its agents and any citizen, firm, or corporation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce in or with the United States concerning any tolls, charges, or regulations of this company, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have jurisdiction under such rules of practice as the commission may determine; and all tolls, charges, and regulations shall be subject to the revision and jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to place this corporation in the same attitude with reference to foreign and interstate commerce in which we have placed all the railroads of the country, and to provide for citizens having any dispute with the corporation a court of adjudication, it being a principle of our existing law, as it is of our civilization, that no disputes between citizens or between citizens and corporations ought to be without some court for the adjudication of such differences. This amendment contemplates the same character of adjudication that we provide for the residue of our interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. RAYNER. How can we constitute a court with jurisdiction outside of the limits of the country?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I admit that our authority in this matter may be a little nebulous in its character, but the whole question of our giving status to this business upon foreign soil is in the same attitude. If we can pass a measure of this kind, if we can adopt any substantial provisions, such as are here contemplated, we can at least take the usual steps to provide a method of redress for our citizens who may have grievances arising out of their business with this corporation.

Mr. RAYNER. Only one word in answer to the gentleman from Arkansas. There is no objection to the amendment substantially. We have no right under the Constitution to organize a court outside of the territorial limits of the country. It would be absolutely void if we did so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. They are bound to do it outside the limits of the country. If we can create this thing we can follow it up and protect our own citizens. If you can not do that, do not have anything to do with it.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the fact that it is provided in the concession these tolls must be subject to the approval of the Republic of Nicaragua and shall not exceed a certain amount, and further, that when they exceed a certain amount they shall be reduced. They have to be reduced when they exceed a certain amount, and that reduction must be enforced under the provision of article 52 for the benefit of the toll-payers or taxpayers. An amendment requiring the collection of these tolls under the interstate-commerce act would therefore be inconsistent with the concession under which the canal alone can be built.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

All vessels sailing under the American flag shall be entitled to a rebate of 20 per cent. from the lowest charges made upon vessels sailing under the flag of any other country, except vessels belonging to the American Navy, which shall be entitled to a rebate of 50 per cent. from the lowest price charged the vessels belonging to the navy of any other country.

Mr. CLARDY. That is all right; but all American vessels are entitled to a rebate of 50 per cent. under the concession.

Mr. SPINOLA's amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to address the committee directly on the amendment now pending. I have given the details of the bill but slight and imperfect consideration; hence I will not enter upon the discussion of them. I have given attention and consideration to the subject-matter of the bill, and it is to that I propose to speak.

I thought I heard a few moments ago an expression of doubt by my esteemed friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] as to the power of Congress to pass this measure. I like to hear such expressions, for they evince a respect for the limitations put upon our power by the States and people of this nation. It is both wise and patriotic to inquire and see what things we are commissioned to do.

I have heard similar doubts expressed by others at an earlier period of this debate. I have given this matter some attention. The gravity and importance of the query, as well as of the merits of the bill itself, demanded it. The bill is to incorporate a company of capitalist citizens of the United States to construct what is known as the Nicaragua Canal through a part of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, utilizing the great lake of the latter name, so as to secure a passage for ships through the Isthmus from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

The work which the company when incorporated proposes to do lies entirely outside of the geographical limits of the United States, and that fact makes it necessary for Congress to know that the country in whose jurisdiction the work proposed is to be done has made or will make a concession to such corporation of the right to do it, for in the absence of such concession the corporation would fail for manifest reasons. But such concession having been made by the proper authorities, the point is now made that Congress has no right to create a corporation of this character. The law as well as Government is a progressive science.

It was held by the Supreme Court of the United States many years ago, in the celebrated case of McCulloch vs. Maryland, adhered to and reaffirmed in the Bank of Augusta vs. Earl, in 13 Peters's Reports, to be common-law doctrine that a corporation, being created by law, could exist only within the boundary of the sovereignty which gave it life. That it must reside and have its home and being within the geographical boundary which gave it birth. But in practical application the rule has qualifications and conditions attached to it in order that it may not obstruct commerce and business. So the same court held in the Railroad vs. Koontz, 104 United States Reports, that such corporation might do business in all places where its charter allows, the local authorities of course assenting thereto.

Wherever it goes for business it carries its charter, as that is the law of its existence. (Relf vs. Rundel, 103 United States.)

The charter is the same abroad as at home. (Canadian Southern Railway vs. Gebhard, 109 United States.)

It is well settled that Congress has no power to create corporations and grant franchises to operate within the territorial jurisdiction of the States except for the purpose of carrying into effect and giving operation to some of the powers delegated to it by the Constitution. That was decided by the Supreme Court a half century ago, and has been adhered to ever since. The opponents of the bill may claim with an apparent plausibility that there is no grant of power to Congress to which this bill may be referred. I will not assert that the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations is broad enough to warrant the incorporation of a company to construct a maritime canal in a foreign country, though I am inclined to that opinion. I am quite sure, however, that Congress could not grant a charter or incorporate a company to dig a canal from one of our States to another for the regulation of commerce among the States, because the power to construct canals is not granted.

It may be possible that the power to regulate commerce, the United States having an agreement to that effect with a foreign nation concerned therein, vests Congress with authority to pass the measure, but I would prefer not to rest it there. I think that the power may exist under the treaty-making clause of the Constitution, which is very broad.

But, sir, we are not confined to that. I believe that Congress may enter a broader field and find therein ample power for the legislation proposed. When we view the Constitution in its true light new beauties and excellences illumine our pathway, and every hour's study we give to it but adds to its beneficence. But, sir, it was designed to operate only upon and among the parties to its creation, which were the States. It is a compact of union made by them for their mutual convenience, benefit, and protection; and they vested in it all powers they had touching international affairs.

The powers delegated to the United States to make treaties, regulate commerce, etc., with foreign nations, meant upon the part of the States that they renounced these sovereign and unlimited powers and transferred them in all their original plenitude to the National Government.

The Constitution created a national government with limited powers over, among, and between the States who created it, but with unlimited powers toward all other nations and peoples. Each of the parties to its creation was before its adoption a sovereign and independent State or nation, and was so acknowledged by Great Britain at the peace. Each possessed the right to make treaties and regulate commerce with foreign nations without limit until they delegated or granted that right to the United States, and ever since they have had no power over either.

If the States had these powers without limit, all that they possessed passed by the grant, and it follows as a logical sequence that the United States, in dealing with foreign powers, is not restrained by constitutional limitations nor restricted to affirmative grants. Other nations do not recognize New York or Georgia as sovereignties. They do not recognize any State or any number of States as having any right to deal with them in any respect whatever. They deal with the United States as a single sovereignty, as one of the nations of the earth. They take no note of any limitation of its power or want of power. They know nothing of the Constitution and its restraints, and care less. And when the United States make treaties, regulate commerce, or transact any other business, they act as though they were but one State—a solid body—as though Congress and the President were sovereign or empowered without limit, save their own discretion, which is in fact no limit at all, except that their policy may be condemned by the people at the next election.

This idea is not altogether new; it did not originate with me. I have seen that it was advanced in debate as far back as 1848 by Mr. Calhoun, when he was called upon to cite constitutional power or authority for the appropriation which was proposed for the relief of the starving Irish people, and he said that there was no constitutional question involved, because the powers of this Government as to foreign nations were not restricted to constitutional grants; and I think he was right.

I have often heard the assertion that the purchase of Louisiana was an unconstitutional act, and Mr. Jefferson himself was of that opinion. In his letter to Dr. Sibley in June, 1803, he admitted it. He was anxious that a constitutional amendment should be adopted giving such power, and said:

That it will be desirable for Congress to do what is necessary in silence.

He also said:

Whatever Congress shall think necessary to do should be done with as little debate as possible, and particularly so far as respects the constitutional difficulty.

It seems never to have occurred to him, notwithstanding all of his learning and profundity of thought on the problem of government and familiarity with his own, that its foreign policy was not restricted to constitutional grants of power; and yet the Supreme Court subsequently substantially so decided in Canter's case, reported in 1 Peters's Reports; also see note a, 1 Kent's Commentaries, side page 159. In 1833 Judge Story, commenting upon this subject in connection with this decision, employed the following language:

As an incidental power the constitutional right of the United States to acquire territory would seem so naturally to flow from the sovereignty confided to it as not to admit of very serious question. The Constitution confers on the Government of the Union the power of making war, and of making treaties; and it seems consequently to possess the power of acquiring territory either by conquest or treaty.

It is said that the cost of constructing the canal will be but $65,000,000. Grant that it may cost double that sum, and then it is a mere bagatelle compared with the value of the work when completed to the commerce of the world. I do not know the ability of the proposed corporators, but I take it for granted that they are both earnest and honest men, possessed or assured of ample means to prosecute the enterprise with diligence and to secure its completion within a reasonable time, perhaps within five years from the date of beginning operations.

The commercial importance of the canal can not well be overestimated. Ships from Europe bound for Australia, Borneo, Japan, and other countries of the Pacific, would pass just to the southward of Hayti, taking an air line through the proposed canal, thereby saving in sailing distances from 1,000 to 5,000 miles. The course of vessels sailing from any of the Atlantic ports of the United States or Canada to California or to any of the islands or countries of the Pacific Ocean, would be via Cuba and the Gulf of Mexico, and would save to them from 8,000 to 11,000 miles of sailing distance over the present route around Cape Horn.

The construction of this canal would add more than 8,000 miles to the coasting trade, giving to our vessels an unobstructed run from Maine to Alaska. It will give special advantages to the feeble and languishing commerce of the United States over the trade of the East Indies and the countries of the Pacific Ocean. It will save in distance—

	Miles.
Between New York and San Francisco	10,000
Between New York and Alaska	8,000
Between New York and Hong-Kong	4,100
Between New York and Melbourne	3,300
Between New York and Sandwich Islands	7,800
Between New York and Valparaiso	9,700
Between New Orleans and San Francisco	11,000
Between New Orleans and Valparaiso	9,900
Between Liverpool and San Francisco	7,200
Between Liverpool and Melbourne	400
Between Liverpool and Hong-Kong	1,300
Between Liverpool and Yokohama	3,900
Between Hamburg and Acapulco	7,000
Between France and Tonquin	1,300

From New Orleans around Cape Horn to San Francisco is 15,000 miles—more than 1,000 miles further than it is from New York to San Francisco, notwithstanding New Orleans is by land 1,000 miles nearer. This results from the latter being situated on the Gulf, which extends more than 1,000 miles inland from the track of the ocean steamer from New York to Cape Horn. By the proposed canal the distance from New York to San Francisco will be 4,700 miles, and from New Orleans to San Francisco but 4,000 miles. I take New Orleans as indicating the mean distance of all the Gulf ports.

It will liberate the people of California and the Pacific Slope from the commercial bondage in which they are held by railroad corporations. It will give to this country a safe harbor and the most advantageous naval station on the western hemisphere, in Lake Nicaragua, from which, in case of war, our ships could operate with equal facility in both oceans and the Gulf of Mexico. The United States would then be in condition to enforce the Monroe doctrine otherwise than on paper and by protest, if the necessity therefor should ever occur; and besides all this, the present bill looks to the consummation of this great work as well as its subsequent management by citizens of the United States.

A practicable passage through the Isthmus has been discussed, talked of, and sought after nearly ever since Columbus discovered America. The United States have expended many thousands of dollars in surveys and examinations, and the grand result of ages of investigation and effort is the Nicaraguan route.

In the colonial days of this country the South was the seat of wealth, power, opulence, and happiness. Just preceding the Revolution, which resulted in separation from Great Britain, the imports received into New York amounted to less than $1,000,000 in value. Pennsylvania received not over two and a half millions, and all New England about three millions, while Virginia alone imported four and a quarter millions and South Carolina nearly $3,000,000 worth, quite as much as the whole of New England.

Some forty years after the adoption of the Constitution New York's imports reached twenty-five millions while South Carolina's remained about the same. In 1832 New York's reached fifty-seven millions, more than double, while South Carolina had fallen to about one and a quarter and Virginia had dwindled to a half million dollars. This change of trade, which it was claimed was produced by Federal legislation, was the cause of nullification in South Carolina.

The loss of trade to the South and the transfer of it to the Northern section of the Union was, while no doubt partly due to natural shipping advantages possessed by the North, attributed entirely to the course of Federal legislation contrary to the objects of the Union. The protective tariff, internal improvements, national debt, pensions, bounties, subsidies, the multiplication of offices, national banks, the funding system, and extravagant expenditures tending to convert the limited and simple Government established by the fathers into an unlimited one, were the chief factors in subtracting capital from the South and transferring it northward, and gave rise to that discontent which finally led to the effort of the South to withdraw from the Union.

In 1860 the imports of New York were over two hundred millions and those of Massachusetts sixty millions, while those of Virginia were one and a quarter and of South Carolina a little less than two million dollars. The discontent continued to grow, as Mr. Madison feared that it would. In his eighty-sixth year he wrote as follows:

The visible susceptibility to the contagion of nullification in the Southern States, the sympathy arising from known causes, and the inculcated impression of a permanent incompatibility of interest between the North and South may put it in the power of popular leaders, aspiring to the highest stations, to unite the South on some critical occasion in some course of action of which nullification may be the first step, secession the second, and a farewell separation the last.

The "critical occasion" upon which the popular and aspiring leaders united the South was the election of Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency upon his proclamation of the irrepressible conflict between free labor and slave labor, which would continue until all were free or all slave.

Of the result I will not speak, since it is foreign to my subject, except to say that the commerce of the Southern States, coastwise and foreign, was completely destroyed.

The proposed construction of the Nicaragua Canal is the first indication I have seen since the war which offers a hope for commercial life and prosperity for that much-abused but glorious section of our common country. The stream of commerce which will flow through the Gulf of Mexico when the canal is completed will inevitably add greatly to the trade of the Gulf ports, and thereby afford a readier market and better prices for all the marketable products of the Gulf States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire more time?

Mr. OATES. I should like to have a few minutes longer.

Mr. DUNN. If I am recognized, I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Arkansas.

I do not share, Mr. Chairman, in the apprehensions expressed a few days ago by my distinguished colleague from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], whose opinions I always respect, because he is one of the most conservative and painstaking members of this body. He assumed that it was a very dangerous experiment for the United States to charter this company, from the fact that the United States would be committed to the protection of the property which these corporators would acquire under the charter, and that it would involve the necessity of a great standing navy and at least two naval stations in the vicinity of the work, and that this would involve the country not only in a heavy outlay but in all probability in a war with some other nation.

Mr. Chairman, it is the duty, and always has been, of the United States to protect the persons and property of their citizens wherever they may be. Shall we refuse this act of incorporation, and to give the project reasonable encouragement, not by money but simply by this enactment, to prosecute the work, because it would then become the duty of the Government to protect them in the enjoyment of that property?

If a nation sees proper to invade their rights, I do not see why this Government should not protect them as fully as it would protect any other citizen of the United States in the enjoyment of any property rights, however acquired, elsewhere; and while I would not welcome a war at any time or on any occasion, I am not sure that, if the cause of the United States was just, our involvement in a foreign war would be of any very great or serious detriment to the interests of the country. I believe it would have one beneficial effect at least, and I am somewhat apprehensive that nothing else will ever completely accomplish that; I mean the eradication of sectionalism in this country.

I believe, sir, that sectional division, sectional feeling, and even hatred, is stronger in this country to-day than it has been at any time in the last fifteen years. Organizations of soldiers and the sons of veterans marched as such organizations under political banners in the late campaign.

Political parties are essential to give expression to and enforce the policy of the majority, but there are questions which rise in importance far above that of the predominance of any political party, and one of these is that of sectional animosity and prejudice. The cultivation of the bitter memories of the war is the one thing which to-day above every other appeals to patriotic hearts, North and South, to unite in putting it down, and striving to disseminate fraternal and patriotic feeling throughout the Union. Let the white men of America differ on questions of policy as they may, but be one universal brotherhood.

Let Southern men no longer sneer at the despised Yankee, and Northern men cease to point to the "scars of rebels" as dishonorable mementoes of "a foul conspiracy and the crime of rebellion." Such a bandying of epithets, like grievous words, stir up anger, and will make the young men of the South love those of the North like the French inhabitants of Alsace and Lorraine love the Germans, or as the Catholic Irish love the English; and the young men of the North, under such tutelage, will manifest towards those of the South the same feeling of superiority which the English Tory manifests for the Catholic Irish.

When statesmanship and a lofty manhood unite in magnanimity to a fallen foe they never fail to inspire respect and confidence which soon ripen into sincere affection.

A war with a foreign power would heal old wounds, turn attention to the later exhibition of heroism and triumphs of the arms of the nation, and restore fraternal feeling from the Canadas to the Gulf. But, sir, neither the construction nor operation of that canal will involve the United States in war unless it should be constructed and operated by a company of Europeans in the interest of their home government.

The situation of the United States relieves them from all of the complications of European nations, and this, with our numerical strength and exhaustless internal resources, absolutely exempts us from even remote probability of war. The construction of the canal will benefit the commerce of the world and give cause for rejoicing rather than for war. I congratulate my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] upon the fortunate connection of his name with this great enterprise by his skillful management of this bill. I take great pleasure in recording my vote in its favor, and hope to see grand results flow from this legislation.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of the pending bill no gentleman has expressed a doubt of the commercial importance of the great enterprise the measure seeks to inaugurate. Some gentlemen oppose it because they do not believe that Congress has the power to incorporate a company to do an extraterritorial act; and others look with disfavor upon it because, in their opinion, the Government may at some distant day be appealed to to come to the rescue of the company or its stockholders to make good their losses or to afford protection to their property. But all agree, I think, that the passage of this bill will most likely lead to the construction of a canal that must prove of incalculable benefit to all sections of our country.

After what has been said by my friend from Alabama and other gentlemen on this floor, it is hardly necessary to speak of the power of Congress, under the Constitution, to grant a charter. The greatest Chief-Justice the country ever had, interpreting what is known as the commercial clause of the Constitution, said that "it means intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all their branches."

Another justice of the Supreme Court, speaking for the court, said of this clause:

It is general, and includes alike commerce by individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations.

The same justice, speaking for the court in the Daniel Ball case, 10 Wallace, said "that the commercial power given to Congress authorizes all appropriate legislation for the protection or advancement of either interstate or foreign commerce." And in Veazie vs. Moore, 14 Howard, and in Lord vs. Steam-ship Company, 102 United States Reports, the court has expressly declared that Congress has the power to incorporate a company to do an extraterritorial act. This is the construction the Supreme Court has placed on the provision of the Constitution referred to. And as showing the construction placed upon it by the executive department I beg to refer to the fact that at least twelve engineering parties have been sent by the executive department of our Government to Panama, Nicaragua, and Tehuantepec with directions to ascertain whether it was possible to construct a ship-canal between the two oceans, and the expenses of the numerous surveys and explorations made were paid for out of money appropriated by Congress for that purpose.

Were these engineering parties sent out to gratify an idle curiosity on the part of the American people? Did they go to look for the strait which the great discoverer believed nature had left as a passage way between the continents, or to prove the continuity of the Isthmus and the unreality of the long-sought strait? Or did they go for the practical purpose of ascertaining if a canal could not be made to span the Isthmus and wed the sunrise to the sunset?

Mr. HERBERT withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CLARDY. I trust, Mr. Chairman, we shall now get a vote.

The question was taken; and the amendment offered by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the management and disposition of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the said company the board of directors may make such by-laws, rules, and regulations as may conform to the authority granted in such canal concession or concessions, and not be inconsistent with this act or the laws of the United States or the existing treaty stipulations of the United States with the Government of Nicaragua or of Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic; and may fix the time for election of directors, and in case of vacancy in said board, caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, may fill the same. No person shall be a director who is not a stockholder, and any one ceasing to be a stockholder shall cease to be a director. All meetings of stockholders shall be held at the office of the company in the city of New York, and at least one such meeting shall be held in each year; but failure to elect directors on the day appointed by said by-laws shall not be deemed to dissolve said company, but such election may be holden on any day appointed thereafter by the directors first giving thirty days' notice thereof, in manner aforesaid. The directors, of whom eight, including the president, shall be a quorum, shall have full power touching the election or appointment of all officers of the company, and said officers shall hold office at the will and pleasure of said board.

Mr. MACDONALD. I have an amendment to offer to that section which I think will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 4 the following:

"Provided, That no change or concessions heretofore or hereafter granted by the Nicaragua and Costa Rica Governments for or in behalf of the construction of said canal which in any manner affect the rights of the American citizens to the use of said canal, or which affect the rights of the Government of the United States to have a voice and governmental control of the use of the same, shall be made until the consent of the Government of the United States to such change shall have been first given thereto."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am not competent to consider the proposition whether under the powers vested in Congress by the Constitution we have the right to grant a charter such as it is proposed to confer under the bill we are now considering. I shall assume that we have such power, and I arrive at this conclusion because gentlemen on this floor, learned in the law, and in whose legal abilities and patriotism I have the utmost confidence, say we have.

Furthermore, sir, as far as I am able to judge or form an opinion, during the past twenty-five years the Constitution of our country has been so construed, not only by the Congress but by the courts of last resort, that to-day it can be made to mean anything or nothing, and has long ago ceased to be our compass and chart, limiting or defining the powers of the Federal Government, when it has stood in the way of party supremacy or party success. Sir, no man regrets this condition of affairs more than I do; but if the venerable instrument can stand such strains as it has been subject to during the period I have referred to, threatening the fundamental principles upon which it was based, may we not hope that in case this bill should become a law it will not so impair the venerable instrument but that what may be left of it may be of some utility and value to future generations?

But, sir, I wish to say a few words in regard to the bill from a national and commercial standpoint, and I might say from a cosmopolitan standpoint, for the construction of this canal will, in my judgment, not only affect our commercial interests but that of the world. To my mind, sir, it is wonderfully strange that a problem which, during the close of the fifteenth century, occupied the minds of the people of Europe and which the Spanish and Portuguese navigators were endeavoring to solve—a short route to the Indies—should yet remain unsolved in this the close of the nineteenth century so far as this continent has any interest in it. While the Portuguese in the latter part of the fifteenth century were endeavoring to solve this problem by the doubling of the Cape of Good Hope, the conception of the Spanish navigators, that not only a new continent existed but that the short route to the Indies was by sailing westward, ultimately led to the discovery of this continent, and for centuries after the southern half of it was settled expeditions still left the shores of Europe seeking for some break in it between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans which would solve the problem they had so much at heart.

Sir, it is a remarkable fact in connection with this whole subject, which it has required four centuries of time to demonstrate, that within a few hundred miles of the port from which Columbus set sail in the Mediterranean the short route to the Indies, so far as the interests of continental Europe were concerned, was to be found, and that the construction of the Suez Canal has finally settled this question for continental Europe. It is hard, sir, to overestimate the importance of the Suez Canal and its beneficial results upon the commercial interests of Europe; and probably to no people have its direct results been more injurious than to those of the United States. The English people, ever alive to their commercial supremacy, either did not believe in the feasibility of the project or for some ulterior reasons discouraged it, and it was left to the enterprise and the ingenuity of a Frenchman to demonstrate its practicability.

When we consider, sir, the fact that England is practically the mistress of the Mediterranean, occupying as she does not only Gibraltar but the Island of Malta, one would naturally infer that her best interests would have been identified with the construction of this canal, and that her naval supremacy, together with her military stations in the Mediterranean, would have assured to her all the rights and immunities for her commerce she could reasonably demand. The statesmanship of the younger Pitt was never more clearly demonstrated than after the capture of Malta by the English. Rather than surrender it, as the condition of peace made by the first Napoleon, he continued a war when England was virtually bankrupt, and to-day Malta virtually controls the Suez Canal from a military standpoint. But, sir, what has this policy demonstrated? No sooner had this canal become a success than a majority of its shares was bought up by an English ministry and to-day are in the treasury of Great Britain. And she did not stop here, sir, for the occupation of Egypt to-day by the English forces and the complications surrounding this occupation are but a part of a general plan to insure the control of this water way for English commerce and English trade.

We may, if these statements are correct, form some opinion as to the value to English interests of a short route to the Indies; and just here it may be well to inquire what effect the construction of this canal has had upon us as a people and our interests. We all know that prior to its construction it was practically impossible to ship the wheat of India to European ports. It was neither raised nor exported largely. The exports of wheat from India prior to the construction of this canal were practically nothing. But since its construction it has risen from a few millions of bushels up to as high as thirty or forty millions of bushels per annum. Climatic causes stood in their way; the long voyage in doubling the Cape of Good Hope, with their cargoes of grain passing through the tropics, so deteriorated its quality that much of it was hardly merchantable upon arriving at its port of destination. But the Suez Canal has changed all this, and the low price of our cereals, especially wheat, during the past five or ten years, can be more attributed to India competition than to any other cause.

Sir, after the construction of the Suez Canal the problem of a short route to the Indies was transferred from the continent of Europe to this continent, and it confronts us to-day.

If practical experience and engineering ability are of any value, I think we may safely come to the conclusion that the construction of the Nicaragua Canal is the only feasible and practical solution of this question for us as a nation. And when we consider the fact that it will not only furnish us the shortest route to the eastern continent, but will accomplish something perhaps even of more value to us—the shortest possible oceanic route to our possessions on the Pacific—I do not see how its importance from a national standpoint of view can be overestimated. It will not only accomplish this, but it makes it possible for us to secure our due share of the trade of the South American Republics on the Pacific Slope.

If we are never again to be a factor in the foreign commerce of the world, the construction of this canal will at least add to our coastwise trade and tonnage, and possibly build up our merchant marine, which, in case of necessity, may be an important factor in our future relations with foreign nations.

As a business proposition, divested of any constitutional considerations, I would be willing to vote the necessary money out of the Treasury of the United States to construct this canal, if it could be absolutely owned and controlled by our Government. [Applause.] This is what I understand the Monroe doctrine to mean. I know of no more important coaling station or naval rendezvous unoccupied in the world today from a strategic point of view than can be found on the shores of Lake Nicaragua if this canal is built, through which ships of war of heavy draught can pass.

Sir, the construction of this canal will unquestionably enable our manufacturers on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains and the Gulf of Mexico to favorably compete, not only in the markets of South America, but in our Pacific States, with the manufacturers of the world. There is hardly any section of our common country which will not be benefited by it. The Southern States unquestionably have a large interest in it. The development of the manufacturing and mineral interests of some of them, now going on, located as they are so near the Gulf of Mexico, ought to find a market for their products on the western shores of this continent by the construction of this canal, and coal now mined within 250 miles of the Gulf of Mexico should compete in South America and in our Pacific States with coal now shipped and imported from Australia and British Columbia.

To the wheat-growers of our Pacific States and Territories the construction of this canal and cheapening the cost of transportation to Europe must be of inestimable value. From San Francisco to Liverpool, via Cape Horn, the distance is estimated to be 14,690 miles, and via the Nicaragua Canal 7,508 miles, showing a saving of 7,182 miles of ocean navigation. From New York City to San Francisco the saving would be, over that of the Cape Horn route, 18,080 miles, from New Orleans 11,005 miles, and an average to South American ports south of the equator of from six to eight thousand miles.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this bill will receive the favorable consideration of this House; and that, while it may have thrown around it all the safeguards essentially necessary to protect those of our people who may be induced to invest their money in it, that it may not be incumbered with unnecessary restrictions and limitations which would virtually make a charter granted by the Congress useless for practical business purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACDONALD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MACDONALD. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen understand the full effect of this amendment, and I ask that it be again reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer as an additional section, section 5, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Said company shall make a report on the first Monday in each year to the Secretary of the Interior, which shall be duly verified by the president and secretary thereof, giving such detailed statement of its affairs and of its assets and liabilities as may be required by the Secretary of the Interior, and any false statement so made shall be deemed perjury and punished as such; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to require such annual statement and to prescribe the form thereof and the particulars to be given thereby.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, it will be noticed that the bill as it comes to the House contains no provision for an annual report being made of the affairs of this proposed corporation to any person or power. Under the laws of the State of New York all corporations are required to submit annual reports of their affairs, their assets, and their liabilities to the controller. The only criticism I can make on this bill as a friend of the project is that it does not provide for an annual report to some authority, and I propose to remedy that defect by the additional section just read. Such a report will enable the public, the stockholders, the bondholders, the creditors of this corporation to learn once a year through the medium of the Interior Department just what the "true inwardness" of the corporation is, what it has done, and what is the situation of their interests. It strikes me as due to the public as well as to the corporate interests concerned, and I think the amendment will commend itself to all friends of the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] ought not to be made. I think a moment's reflection will convince every member here that the adoption of such an amendment would commit the United States to this enterprise in a way not contemplated by the bill itself, nor by the concessions made by the Republic of Nicaragua to the association that seeks a charter from this Government.

If our Interior Department is to have cognizance of this work, as provided by this amendment, then the Government would seem to be fairly committed to the control of the building and operation of this canal. If the report of the directors of the canal company is to be made to the Secretary of the Interior, it must be for the purpose of giving the Government of the United States such information as any nation seeking to control the enterprise might properly require.

Sir, as I understand the Monroe doctrine, it means that no foreign government shall be permitted to undertake a work of this sort, but it does not mean that the Government of the United States may undertake such a work; and hitherto it has been impossible to get a measure of legislation passed by Congress that would commit the United States to its control. If the report of the directors of this canal company is to be made annually to the Secretary of the Interior it would, of course, give information to the public, but its prime object would appear to be to give to the Government such information as would enable it to exercise control and supervision of the enterprise, not only while the canal is being constructed, but in its subsequent use.

Article 8 of the concession provides that "the company of execution" can not, nor can the Republic of Nicarauga in any case, transfer any part of said concession to any foreign government. In what possible contingency, then, can it be proper to connect the Secretary of the Interior with the control of the proposed canal?

Mr. Chairman, it seems to be understood by some that the Monroe doctrine requires that the United States Government should control this canal. I do not so understand that doctrine. The position taken by President Monroe, and which has ever since been sanctioned by the American people, is that no government outside of Central America can ever, without the approval of the United States, be allowed to control that country, or to build a canal across the Isthmus of Darien; but it is nowhere maintained in that doctrine that this Government has that right, or can have it, except by treaty, and no such treaty has as yet received the sanction of the Republic of Nicaragua and of the United States.

As is well known, such a treaty has been under consideration, but has never been confirmed; and, what is more, no one can now say that another opportunity to make such a treaty will ever be given to this Government by the Republic of Nicaragua. It would seem that that Republic has concluded to grant to the association which asks Congress for this charter the concession contained in the decree before us, and to retain under its own control everything pertaining to the proposed water way, except what is so clearly set forth in the fifty-five articles in which the concession appears.

Mr. Chairman, the Monroe doctrine should be sedulously maintained, but I very much doubt the propriety of going beyond it and claiming for ourselves what we deny to others. If such a step was absolutely necessary, in order to secure a passage way for the commerce of the United States and of the world, through this barrier, we might take it, and with it take the consequences; but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the project now before us presents a better plan.

Here we have presented the most feasible route for a ship-canal that experienced engineers, after years of search, have been able to find, and it is beyond question the cheapest and the most practicable of any. Nature herself has beckoned the engineer to the San Juan River and to Nicaragua Lake with its great basin, where the vast watershed that surrounds it furnishes an ample supply of water for all possible requirements for the canal. The repeated surveys made reveal such superior advantages for this route that an association of capitalists of high character are willing to give their money and their energy to this great work. Sir, we should not hesitate to grant to these gentlemen the charter they ask; and for one I regret that so many members of the committee have felt it to be their duty to offer amendments to this bill, which, although well intended, will, if adopted, endanger the success of this work.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR], which requires that two-thirds of the directors of the canal company shall be citizens and residents of the United States, seems to me to be open to the objection I have just indicated. To construct this great water way and make it equal to the requirements of the steam-ships and large sail vessels of the present period will require an amount of money so large that it is not probable that it would all be furnished by American capitalists; on the contrary, it is more than likely that a majority of the one hundred or more millions of dollars needed will be furnished by foreign investors. In such a case what propriety or what fairness would there be in insisting that two-thirds of the directors who are to control the construction and operation of the canal should be American citizens?

This is a business operation and should be dealt with on business principles. The restrictions and regulations contained in the articles of concession, and found in the bill before us, are sufficient to secure the successful opening and working of the contemplated water way, and that is what is most wanted by the people of the United States. To us it is a matter of no consequence whether the money comes from Europe or America, and especially is it so since it is inexpedient for this Government to build and control this canal, and it becomes our duty to guard against such restrictions as will tend to defeat its successful accomplishment.

Mr. Chairman, every material interest of our people will be advanced by this water way that is to shorten by thousands of miles the distance required by our merchant marine to reach our Atlantic and Pacific ports. It will, moreover, effect as great a revolution in the world's commerce as was done by the opening of the Suez Canal, with which the Nicaragua Canal would be a competitor.

But not alone in our shipping interests are our people to be benefited. In fact, the greatest good will come to our internal industries, both agricultural and manufacturing. The South American trade manifestly and legitimately belongs to us, and yet is wrested from us by European statesmanship and European enterprise, and to secure it for our own people has come to be a thought uppermost in the American mind.

The able and interesting report of the commission appointed by President Arthur to "ascertain and report upon the best modes of securing more intimate national and commercial relations between the United States and the several countries of Central and South America" demonstrates not only the importance of that trade to the United States, but gives the humiliating fact that only 10 per cent. of it is now enjoyed by our people.

Mr. Chairman, of the 27,000,000 of people in the South American states nearly 14,000,000 inhabit Central America, Venezuela, and the republics situated on the west coast of South America, all of which are more contiguous to us than to any other nation, and yet we do not have their markets nor do they have ours to any extent, except as reached by way of Liverpool.

We have an increasing commerce with Venezuela and such portions of the Central American states as skirt the Caribbean Sea, but the Pacific coast line of those states, and the republics on the west coast of South America, though geographically near us, have hitherto been beyond our reach. A glance at the map will show that a line extended through Tallahassee, Fla., due south, leaves the entire west coast of South America to the eastward of such a line. Now, let the Nicaragua Canal be built, and ships from New Orleans and New York could reach the ports of these South American republics without loss of distance or time, and at rates of freight remunerative and cheap compared with the possibilities of the present. New Orleans would, with this canal, become the entrepôt for the trade of the Mississippi Valley with the portions of Central and South America we have been considering.

The city of New Orleans, situated where the drainage of the Mississippi Valley, consisting of 18,000 miles of navigable rivers, finds its way into the Gulf of Mexico, being also the objective point of extended railway systems, with a depth of water in its harbor sufficient for the largest ships, ought to have an immense trade with the countries I have named. But what are the facts?

The countries of Central America, Colombia, Bolivia, Argentine Republic, Chili, Peru, and Ecuador, all of which are most accessible from the Pacific Ocean, contain a population of 17,000,000 in round numbers, or more than one-half of the whole of South America. The export and import trade of that entire continent amounts, as stated, to $700,000,000 annually, but not more than one-tenth of this commerce has up to this time been secured by the United States.

The total value of merchandise imported into New Orleans for the year ending June 30, 1888, was $11,617,749, or only 1.6 per cent. of the aggregate imports for the whole country.

The total exports from that port for the same period were $80,788,696. Now, if you deduct from this amount $71,844,280 for cotton, and $2,709,642 for cotton-seed products, there remains $6,234,174 for the total exports except cotton and cotton-seed products, or ninety-one one-hundredths of 1 per cent. of the exports of the United States. This, be it remembered, is the entire commerce of New Orleans.

The extent of the trade from this port with Central and South America is shown by official reports to be as follows:

Domestic exports from New Orleans to Central America in 1887, $509,684, and to all other countries of South America, $90,276.

The imports from Central America $1,347,733. Imports from all other South American countries $68,422.

Mr. Chairman, how is this almost total extinguishment of commerce between the most contiguous and important portions of North and South America—I mean New Orleans and the republics on the Pacific coast—to be explained? The northern hemisphere is peopled with a race noted for their energy and enterprise, whose mechanics and workingmen for practical ingenuity are the peers of any on earth; while the temperate climate and rich soil enjoyed by the agriculturists of the Mississippi Valley enable them to produce largely of those staples which are in demand in the southern hemisphere. The tropical and semi-tropical climates of the southern republics produce what we need both for consumption and manufacture. Their principal products are sugar, coffee, cocoa, fibrous plants, hard woods, cochineal, dye-stuffs, immense herds and flocks furnishing countless hides and quantities of wool, beside numerous other products, all of which are needed in the United States, in return for which they should receive the goods we manufacture from cotton, iron, and other metals, agricultural implements and machinery, shoes, hats, watches, window-glass, bottles, reapers, wind-mills, wooden ware, with a long list of other articles made in this country suited to their wants; beside flour, bacon, butter, cheese, lard, and other provisions. As I have said, the imports and exports of Central and South America as estimated reach $700,000,000 per annum, of which the entire United States gets scarce 10 per cent., and New Orleans about 1 per cent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, not less than $300,000,000 of this is produced in Central America and those republics on the west coast of South America, the major part of which legitimately belongs to us, but we have secured only a trifling percentage of it.

What, Mr. Chairman, is the remedy? I reply, the first thing to do is to encourage and secure the construction of a ship-canal across the Isthmus. This obstacle removed from the pathway to our sister republics, and the desired exchange of product can be made. Let this work be entered upon now, and let no pennywise policy induce us to impose onerous conditions upon the capital that proposes to confer on the commerce of the world this great boon. Our true position on this isthmian-canal question as set forth in the Monroe doctrine can best and most satisfactorily be maintained by creating a corporation composed of capitalists of any and all countries. By them let the great work be consummated, not solely for our advantage, but for the benefit of the entire world. This done, and the ships of all nations, whether coming from or going towards the rising or setting sun can have an unimpeded right of way.

Mr. Chairman, every American port on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts is deeply interested in securing the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. By it they will be brought nearer together by thousands of miles and months of time; and especially is it needed by New Orleans and the Mississippi Valley. The continent of South America, vast in extent, rich in material resources, with a population more than half as great as that of North America, is now assuming a new importance among the nations. To it have been attracted the energy and capital of Europe; extensive railway routes have been opened, some of which now nearly span the continent, and with its navigable rivers there will soon be developed a complete system of internal transportation. A large portion of the trade of that country is naturally ours. The corporation we are asked to create will materially assist us in securing that trade.

The equality thus enjoyed by all, and vouchsafed to all, will justify the Government of the United States in the eyes of Christendom in asserting and maintaining the Monroe doctrine against any other government that at any time may have the temerity to seek the control of this or any other communication across the Isthmus of Darien.

The French people, whose confidence in De Lesseps has allured them to furnish the millions already expended in the brave attempt to compass an impracticable scheme at Panama, are entitled to a better outcome for their adventure than now seems possible. In cheapness of construction, in reliability for use if ever finished, it can never compare with the Nicaragua route. The American people will not consent to an assumption of the work by the French Government, yet all Americans will cordially extend to the French company their good wishes, and will hope that if possible they may carry out what they have undertaken at such fearful cost.

The completion of both the Panama and Nicaragua Canals will work no harm to the commerce of the world.

Mr. Chairman, the bill now before us to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, as passed by the Senate and recommended by the Committee on Commerce, taken with the fifty-five articles of concession to be made a part of it, contains all necessary safeguards for the public, and the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER], as well as other amendments that have been considered, are much more likely to retard this great work than to accomplish any good, and I trust the bill may be passed essentially as it stands.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I do not see that the adoption of this amendment will in any way or to any extent commit our Government to this enterprise. The amendment is similar to provisions which prevail, I think, in nearly all the States of the Union, under which corporations chartered by a State are required to make reports to the State authorities in order that the condition of the corporation may be known to the citizens of the State. This is proper as a matter of public information. It is true that the stockholders of this company will receive their reports, but those would not be open to the public. The citizens of the United States who will be patrons of this great enterprise will be entitled to information——

Mr. COBB. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether State laws requiring a corporation to report to the State are not for the purpose of enabling the State to control its business interests?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COBB. Now, will the United States have the right to control business interests of this corporation?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I simply say that this corporation is seeking a charter at the hands of the United States Government; and when the corporation has been created by our authority, it ought to be in some manner responsible to the Government which creates it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to avail myself of this opportunity—the only one I have had—to say a few words in regard to the main project. I believe this enterprise is within the purview of the Constitution. I believe it is an enterprise which this Government ought to foster. I believe it is an enterprise which ought to be under the control of citizens of the United States; and I think it is an enterprise which ought to be carried out without any unnecessary delay. Whether we look at it from the standpoint of commerce or from the standpoint of the common defense, it is equally and immeasurably important in either of these points of view. As was stated a moment ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], this enterprise as a matter of public defense will double our naval power. It extends the coast line of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The great water-way system of the United States, the greatest almost in the world, consists of three branches, the ocean water ways, the river water ways, and the lake water ways.

I avail myself of the moment now remaining to me to say that these three ought to be made one; that the two oceans ought to be joined; the coast line of the United States ought to be extended from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in the interest of commerce, oriental and occidental; and then the Lake system ought to be joined with the Gulf system (which is a part of the ocean system) by a ship-canal which will connect the Great Lakes with the Mississippi River; so that the commerce of the great Northwest may flow from the Lakes into the Mississippi, and then through the Gulf and by way of this canal to the Pacific. To complete this magnificent water system, the Atlantic ought to be connected somewhere from the Hudson at tide-water with the Great Lake system. This ought to be done in the interest both of commerce and of defense, so that an American gun-boat might pass from New York Harbor through a ship-canal into the Lakes, above Niagara Falls; thence around through a ship-canal connecting the Lakes with the Mississippi River; down the Mississippi and through the Gulf of Mexico and the Nicaragua Canal to the Pacific. When this shall have been done, our magnificent water-way system will have been completed in the interest alike of commerce and of the public defense.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARDY. I hope now we shall have a vote.

Mr. COBB withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CLARDY. I hope we may now have a vote.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I wish to say a word.

Mr. CLARDY. I will yield the gentleman two minutes of my time.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I propose to submit what I have to say in the fewest possible words, but I do not wish to be limited to two minutes, and will therefore speak in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The gentleman from New York objects to this amendment and the gentleman on my left [Mr. COBB] criticises it in the direction of retaining in the control of the Government this corporation. We should remember in the last section of the bill it is proposed the Congress at all times in the future may alter, amend, or repeal this act when in its judgment the public good may require it.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman excuse me a moment if I interrupt him?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. COBB. Does not the gentleman know the effect of that part of the bill he has just read is entirely different from that of his amendment and has no relation whatever to it?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I know, but I think every gentleman of the committee understands the proposed section offered by myself is in the direction of a better administration of the affairs of this corporation, in the direction of the good of the people of this country, of the men who invest capital in it, and for the better management of the enterprise in all respects. I can see no reason in the world, Mr. Chairman, why the provision should not be incorporated exactly as it is offered by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I offer a further amendment; to insert after the word "report" the words "which report shall be verified by the oaths of the president and secretary."

Mr. SPINOLA. That is in already.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Not as I understand the amendment. It provides that if a false report is made they may be punished for perjury.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. It requires that the report shall be verified under oath.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the proposition of the gentleman from New York will be adopted. It seems fair enough. It simply requires reports of the operations of the corporation, and places such reports where the stockholders and others interested may have access to and investigate them.

The amendment of Mr. BAKER, of New York, was adopted.

The Clerk read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construed to in any wise restrict or impair any right of the United States under any treaty in force with the Republic of Nicaragua.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I move to amend the numbers of the sections so far as read, to conform to the amendments heretofore adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done by the Clerk, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND rose.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in as a new section after the fifth section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That at any time hereafter the Government of the United States shall have the right, at its own option, to acquire, by purchase, the entire property of said company in said canal and its appurtenances at a price equal to the actual cost thereof, with interest on such cost at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri rose for what purpose?

Mr. BLAND. To submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is to the section just read by the Clerk, it will properly come in before that of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BLAND. I want to offer a further proviso to section 5.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. Then I will temporarily withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. BLAND, as follows:

And nothing herein shall be construed to estop this Government from asserting at any time any of the rights or powers that may now exist by virtue of the laws of nations, or that may be acquired by treaty stipulations, with respect to the rights of transportation of the citizens of the United States or their property over this canal or the country through which the same may be constructed, or to transport troops or munitions of war in time of peace.

Mr. CLARDY. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BAYNE. It is a good amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. I now submit the amendment which was temporarily withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been read, and unless the reading is again called for the question will be taken upon its adoption.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I would desire to call the attention of my friend from Illinois to the fact that his amendment may produce a result which is foreign, I know, to his intention. It reserves the right to the Government at any time to take this work at its actual cost with 5 per cent. added. Suppose after the lapse of twenty years from the construction of the work the Government should desire to exercise that option, it would have to pay the cost of the work and interest thereon for the twenty years.

If he will frame his amendment so that the Government may take the works at cost, with 5 per cent. added, deducting the net receipts, he will possibly accomplish the purpose he desires. As it now stands, the longer the Government defers the option the greater the price it will have to pay for the property.

Mr. ADAMS. I think my colleague has overlooked the fact that a part of this stock, by the terms of the concession, is to go to the Republic of Nicaragua. This Government can not acquire that stock, and I believe it is one of the conditions of the concession that the cession shall not be made to or transferred to any foreign government.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is correct in that, and I will read that clause of the cession. Article 8 provides:

The present cession is transferable only to such company of execution as shall be organized as the Nicaragua Canal Company, and in no case to governments or to foreign powers; nor shall the company cede to any foreign government any part of the lands granted to it by this contract, but it may make transfers to private parties under the same restrictions.

So it will be seen that any effort to cede or forfeit the charter or concession to this Government, or any other government, would forfeit, by the conditions of the cession, all the rights acquired by this company from the Nicaraguan Government.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. I call for the question.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 5, noes 81.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, and Mr. CLARDY as tellers.

Mr. CLARDY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he permit a vote to be taken in the House on his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have a vote on it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois (one of the tellers) said: I will withdraw the point of no quorum in view of an understanding had with the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HOLMAN. There ought to be a vote on this question. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CLARDY. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will hear a proposition in regard to the pending question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this is a matter that ought to be settled now.

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman from Illinois asks leave to withdraw the point of no quorum, which, of course, he has the right to do, upon an agreement, however, that there shall be another vote in the committee, he reserving, of course, the right to make a further point of order if he shall desire to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am understood as calling for the regular order for the present.

If it shall be agreed that a yea-and-nay vote may be taken in the House upon the proposition, I shall not object to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARDY. This is a proposition simply that another vote may be taken in committee on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER].

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will put the question to the committee again.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of no quorum and the gentleman from Indiana renews it. The tellers will take their places.

After some time spent in consultation,

Mr. CLARDY said: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER] withdraws his point of no quorum, and another vote is to be taken with the consent of the House. In consideration of that fact the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] withdraws the point of no quorum on an agreement that we shall take a yea-and-nay vote upon the pending amendment and also upon the amendment offered by him which was amended by the amendment of Mr. COBB, and another offered by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and another offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], which was withdrawn, I believe, and which at the time he said he would present to the House. We agree that a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken in the House upon these three propositions, with the understanding that the point of no quorum is now withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes are 6, noes 115. The noes have it and the amendment is not agreed to. An agreement made in committee would not bind the House except so far as the gentlemen who make it can control the matter in the House. The Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act when in its judgment the public good may so require.

Mr. CLARDY. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (S. 1305) entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments to the bill made by the committee. Is a separate vote demanded?

Mr. CLARDY. I ask the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto.

Mr. SOWDEN. Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARDY. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw that.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw the motion temporarily.

Mr. CLARDY. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers; and

A bill (H. R. 10323) to incorporate the American Historical Association.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills and a concurrent resolution with amendments in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. 10621) for the removal of the political disabilities of John H. Parker, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. 5349) for the relief of James Trabue, deceased, and others; and Concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 copies of the report and evidence lately submitted by the Committee on Manufactures of the House in relation to the sugar trust and the Standard Oil trust.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, was received.

The message further announced that he had approved and signed joint resolution (H. Res. 226) to pay the officers, clerks, and employés of Congress their salary for December on December 20, 1888.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SOWDEN. I now move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. COX. I move that the House adjourn, in order that members can start for home.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The recess begins to-morrow, and I think it would be well that the motion of the gentleman from New York should prevail.

Mr. CLARDY. Before the question is taken I will say that I have been asked by several gentlemen that they may have leave to publish in the RECORD or to extend remarks on the bill which we have just concluded. I hope that leave will be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that leave be given to print and extend remarks on the bill which has just been reported? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw the motion to take a recess for a moment in order that a message from the President of the United States can be submitted to the House, as this will probably be the last opportunity before the recess.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw it temporarily for that purpose.

SAMOA.

The following message was laid before the House:

To the Congress:

On the 2d of April last I transmitted to the House of Representatives, in response to its resolution of the 8th of the preceding March, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying correspondence, relative to affairs in Samoa. On the same day I answered a resolution of the Senate of the 21st of the preceding December to the same effect, but adopted in executive session; and, in order to avoid duplication of the numerous documents involved, referred to the correspondence which accompanied my public response to the resolution of the House of Representatives and which was duly printed and published by order of that body. (House Executive Document No. 238, Fiftieth Congress, first session.)

In my annual message of the 3rd instant I announced my intention in due course to lay before Congress further correspondence on Samoan affairs. Accordingly, I now transmit a report of the Secretary of State with accompanying correspondence on that subject.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 21, 1888.

The message and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES AT HEARINGS, ETC.

Mr. VANDEVER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11900) to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses at hearings before registers and receivers of district land offices, fixing the fees of witnesses, and prescribing penalties; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LAKE-VIEW WATER-WORKS.

Mr. ADAMS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11901) to authorize the city of Lake View, Ill., to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for water-work purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PENSACOLA NAVAL RESERVATION.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass a bill passed by both Houses at the last session, but through a mistake did not go to the President. It is a bill giving the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad through a portion of the Pensacola naval reservation. That company is ready to begin work and desires to begin on the 1st of January. It is a bill (S. 3732) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to the said railway company over and through the United States military and naval reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] requests consent for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. HERBERT. This bill passed both Houses, and by mistake was overlooked by the President. I understand he has no objection to it. It was considered by a committee of this House.

Mr. PAYSON. What committee?

Mr. HERBERT. The Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PAYSON. How does the Committee on Naval Affairs get jurisdiction over a bill granting a right of way through public lands?

Mr. HERBERT. There is a general law granting a right of way through the public lands of the United States, and this was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs simply because the bill related to a right of way through the naval reservation at Pensacola.

Mr. PAYSON. Are there any provisions in the bill enlarging the rights of the company beyond what it would get under the general law?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I am content with it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill had better be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company, a company organized under the laws of the States of Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi, is hereby granted the right of way, 100 feet wide, through the lands belonging to the United States lying near Pensacola, in the State of Florida, known as the naval reservation, be, and hereby is, granted to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company, a corporation organized, etc., to be located to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, evidenced by his written consent: Provided, That the said railroad company, on notification by the Secretary of the Navy, shall, within a reasonable time thereafter, construct, maintain, and operate at its own expense a spur track or tracks to enter into and be located at such place or places within the present limits of the navy-yard inclosure on said reservation as may be designated by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized to allow the use by said company, in the accommodation of its general traffic and the maintenance of a coaling station, of so much of the land and water-front of the said reservation lying west of and outside the present navy-yard inclosure as in his judgment will not be required for naval purposes and as will not be a hindrance to the public defense nor prejudicial to the health of those residing on the Government reservation, and not to exceed in any case 300 feet of water-front, which width may extend back along the line of said road not more than 1,000 feet; the value of the use of land to be appraised by a board of naval officers, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That said company shall reimburse the residents of said reservation for any damage to their property or tenements caused by the construction, excavation, or operation of said road, such damage in all cases to be fixed by said board: And provided further, That the right of way and other privileges granted in this section shall become inoperative and null and void unless the said railroad company shall complete the construction of and have in use its tracks across said reservation within one year from the date of the passage of this act.

The Secretary of the Navy may, at any time when he shall deem it necessary for the public good, cause to be removed or destroyed all or any of the structures hereby permitted, without subjecting the Government to damages, and Congress may at any time alter or repeal this act.

And the said company shall not erect or allow the use of any residences on said reservation, nor shall it erect any structures of any kind thereon, except such as the Secretary of the Navy shall approve, and all approvals in this act required shall be in writing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was taken up, ordered to a third reading, and accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COX. When I made that motion a few minutes ago, Mr. Speaker, I agreed to withdraw it in order to allow my friend from Iowa on the other side [Mr. GEAR] to call up a bill for a pensioner who is one hundred and five years of age.

Mr. GEAR. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] will withdraw his motion.

Mr. MATSON. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. GEAR. I will state to the House that the pensioner for whose benefit this bill is, is well attested to be one hundred and five years of age. He was a soldier in the war of 1812.

JACOB ROGERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Jacob Rogers, late a private in Capt. J. McChesney's company, in the Sixteenth United States Infantry, war of 1812, to $50 per month, to date from the 1st day of September, 1887.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GEAR. As I have already said, it is a well-established fact that this man is one hundred and five years of age. The Committee on Pensions have recommended an amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "thirty;" so as to make the pension $30 a month, but I say that a man who is of that age, who has served his country as this man has done, and who bears in his person a British bullet, is entitled to a pension of $50 a month, and I hope the House will not agree to the amendment recommended by the committee. [Renewed cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BLAND. Is he disabled?

Mr. GEAR. He is incapacitated and nearly blind.

Mr. BLAND. Well, he ought to have it all.

Mr. SOWDEN. How much does he receive now?

Mr. GEAR. Eight dollars a month.

Mr. SOWDEN. He ought to have $100. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEAR. Certainly he ought.

The question was taken on the amendment of the committee, striking out "fifty" and inserting "thirty," and it was rejected—ayes 24, noes 71.

Mr. MATSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "to date from the 1st day of September, 1887." That will strike out the arrears feature.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker, I insist on my motion that the House adjourn.

MISLAID BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before putting that motion, the Chair will state that Senate bill No. 3159, for the relief of the Oregon Paving and Contract Company, which was sent over from the Senate, has been mislaid, and, if there be no objection, an order will be made requesting the Senate to send a duplicate copy to the House.

Mr. HERMANN. I hope that will be done.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 56, noes 41; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House, under previous order, adjourned until the 2d day of January, 1889.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BLISS: A bill (H. R. 11902) to restore the name of Florida Kennerly to the pension-roll—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CANDLER: A bill (H. R. 11903) for the relief of Elizabeth Young, widow of Robert Young—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11906) granting a pension to Thomas J. Cassidy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11907) granting a pension to Mrs. A. A. Rowe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11908) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 11909) granting a pension to James Phelps—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11910) for the relief of R. F. Harrison—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11911) for the relief of the administrator of Cynthia Todlock, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PUGSLEY: A bill (H. R. 11912) to restore the name of Rollin B. Stadden to the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. E. J. TURNER: A bill (H. R. 11913) granting a pension to William Carr—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11914) granting a pension to Hiram C. Main—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOST: A bill (H. R. 11915) for the relief of the heirs of David Garber—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ABBOTT: Petition of citizens of Ellis County, Texas, in favor of pure food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BIGGS: Petition of manufacturers of macaroni, vermicelli, and Italian paste, praying for increased duties on these articles—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BUNNELL: Petition of citizens of East Smithfield and of Bradford County, Pennsylvania, in favor of pure food and pure lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LODGE: Petition of the Boston Chamber of Commerce for the protection of shipwrecked and needy seamen on the Arctic coast—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MATSON: Petition of Richard M. Butcher and 60 others, citizens of Monroe County, Indiana, for a special act granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen Downing—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE: Petition of W. D. Darley and 61 others, of Fayette County, Texas, in favor of pure lard and pure food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MORSE: Resolutions of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, in aid of a petition for the protection of shipwrecked and needy seamen on the Arctic coast—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, urging the passage of bills providing for the constitutional centennial celebration of 1889, the world's exposition of 1892, and the permanent exposition of the three Americas—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring branch hydrographic offices—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SAYERS: Petition of citizens of San Saba County, Texas, for the passage of a law regulating the sale of food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. WILLIAM WHITING: Petition of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, in aid of a petition for the protection of shipwrecked and needy seamen on the Arctic coast—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The following petitions against the passage of the international copyright bill were received and severally referred to the Committee on Patents:

By Mr. BLISS: Of printers and others, of New York City.

By Mr. BRYCE: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

By Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL: Of printers and others, of New York City.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

By Mr. FITCH: Of electrotypers, pressmen, and others, of the Thirteenth district of New York.

By Mr. GEST: Of De Witt Owen, of Port Byron, and of J. C. Coulson, of La Harpe, Ill.

By Mr. KERR: Of J. W. Arnold, of Garrison, and of Longley & Rider, of Tipton, Iowa.

By Mr. MAHONEY: Of printers and others, of New York City.

By Mr. SPINOLA: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 2, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

JAMES Z. GEORGE, a Senator from the State of Mississippi, and WADE HAMPTON, a Senator from the State of South Carolina, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 21, 1888, was read and approved.

CERTIFICATES OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed by the States of Arkansas, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Nevada, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, New York, and Virginia; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying certificates, to lie on the table.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, in pursuance of the act of January 20, 1885, the decision of that court in a certain French spoliation claim; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the memorial of one branch of the Woman's Relief Corps, of James B. McLean Post, No. 1, of Salt Lake City, Utah, remonstrating against any action by Congress looking to the admission of Utah as a State, setting forth that it would be a polygamous State if admitted, and that the good interests of all citizens who are in favor of right morals in life would be put in jeopardy. I am happy to say that, as I think, there is no danger of the State being admitted at this session at least.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Harriette R. Shattuck, Dora B. Smith, Harriet H. Robinson, and 15 others, officers and members of the National Woman Suffrage Association, praying for the submission to the States of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting disfranchisement on account of sex; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a memorial of the National Board of Trade, which, as it is very brief and upon an important subject of public interest, I ask may be read.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

NATIONAL BOARD OF TRADE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Boston, December 10, 1888.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the National Board of Trade respectfully showeth:

Whereas the present coinage of silver dollars, in connection with other forms of currency, is sufficient for all the requirements of the domestic trade and commerce of the United States; and

Whereas the profits which result from this coinage, and which are counted as part of the annual income of the Government, are not a legitimate source of revenue under the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas, when the condition of foreign exchanges may require the export of precious metals, these dollars can not, on account of their overvaluation, be sent abroad without ruinous loss to all classes of the population:

Congress is hereby memorialized to provide by law for the suspension of the purchase of silver bullion and of the coinage of silver dollars.

By vote, and in behalf of the board.

FRED FRALEY, President.
HAMILTON A. HILL, Secretary.

Mr. HALE. I present the memorial of Henry Hall, of New York, urging legislation that shall incorporate in the next census provisions for taking a complete enumeration of the surviving veterans of the war of the rebellion, including name, age, residence, length of service, and the command under which they served. The proposition of the memorial is stated with such distinctness and force that I ask to have it printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be printed as a document, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of the Woman Suffrage Association of Nebraska, praying for legislation allowing women to vote for delegates to constitutional conventions in case of the admission of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of the National Board of Trade, praying Congress to make from time to time ample appropriations for the judicious improvement of the principal rivers, harbors, and water ways of the Union; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the National Board of Trade, praying Congress to provide immediately such defenses as will be necessary in the event of war to protect our sea, gulf, and lake coasts and harbors; which was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. CALL. I present two petitions, one from citizens of South Florida, on the Atlantic coast, signed by W. S. Walber and numerous other citizens, and another from citizens of South Florida, praying for the deepening of Mosquito Inlet on the Atlantic coast, and setting forth the reasons which render it necessary for the commerce of the country. I move the reference of the petitions, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Charles Jones and 111 other citizens of Midway, S. C., being qualified voters, who were deprived of the right to vote for want of registration certificates, praying the Congress of the United States to take steps to amend or abolish the State law of registration which deprives them of the right as citizens to vote in the election for presiding officers in the State and nation; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

GOODLOE'S INTERNAL-REVENUE COMPILATION.

Mr. HAWLEY. In behalf of the Committee on Printing I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of certain manuscripts, being a historical compilation of the internal-revenue laws of the United States prepared by D. R. Goodloe, and that the manuscripts be returned to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3758) to increase the pension of Ziba Yarnell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3759) to increase the pension of Zachariah T. Crawford; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3760) to refund excessive duties caused by extraordinary overvaluations of the Austrian florin in the year 1878; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3761) to provide for the heating and keeping in order of the rooms occupied by the circuit and district courts of the United States and the chambers of the judges of said courts, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Nancy Polock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3763) to authorize the Falls Church and Potomac Railway Company to construct, maintain, and use a bridge over the Potomac River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3764) to license and authorize the Falls Church and Potomac Railway Company to construct and operate a railway over the Arlington estate lands of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3765) for the relief of Harriet Young; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the river and harbor bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed. I offer the amendment at this time for the purpose, if I may be permitted to do so, of at an early day submitting some remarks upon it. It proposes to make an appropriation for a boat railway at The Dalles of the Columbia.

I move that the amendment lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS IN BEHRING SEA.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate all correspondence which may have taken place with the Government of Great Britain in regard to the right of fishing, taking seal, or navigating in Behring Sea or in any waters adjacent thereto;

Also the circumstances in regard to the seizure or release of any British vessels in or near said waters by the United States;

Also all regulations, rules, or directions which may have been promulgated by the Government of the United States, or any Department thereof, in relation to fishing or taking seal in said sea or waters;

Also to inform the Senate whether any rules or regulations concerning such fishing or taking seal are enforced against citizens or vessels of the United States which are not enforced against the citizens or vessels of other countries.

EDMUND RANDOLPH'S ACCOUNT.

Mr. DANIEL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the account of Edmund Randolph, formerly Attorney-General of the United States, has ever been settled and paid in full, and to state what is its condition.

CANCELED LAND ENTRIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], coming over from a previous day under objection, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. VOORHEES December 21, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate, prior to the expiration of the present session of Congress, a list of all homestead, timber-culture, and pre-emption entries to public lands which have been canceled after issuance of final receipt and certificate therefor, during the present administration, for any cause other than voluntary relinquishment. Such list shall be similar in the data supplied to the list of canceled desert-land entries furnished in response to a prior resolution of this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question upon agreeing to the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in his seat, nor the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I think the resolution had better lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will lie over without prejudice, subject to be called as morning business to-morrow.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on December 24, 1888, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3144) granting a pension to Nancy A. Hayes;

An act (S. 2666) granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner;

An act (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward;

An act (S. 2240) for the relief of George S. Thwing;

An act (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal; and

An act (S. 2254) to increase the pension of Mrs. Ella M. Grover.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4982) prohibiting the allowance of fee in any claim for increase of pension on account of the increase of disability for which the pension was allowed;

A bill (H. R. 6172) providing for additional leave of absence for employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and

A bill (H. R. 11794) to amend the postal laws of the United States in reference to letters bearing special-delivery stamps.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

If there be none, that order is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VEST, in Schedule I, cotton manufactures, line 1211, to strike out "10 cents per pound" and insert "35 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to make the paragraph read:

313. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn (not wound upon spools), whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. Before the holiday recess, in discussing this amendment, I stated in general terms that the effect of the changes made in the existing law by the substitute now pending would increase the duty upon all the higher-priced cotton fabrics, both as to the threads—which are the raw material of the manufacture—and as to the cotton cloth after it is in the finished condition. I made that statement upon what was a cursory examination of this schedule; but during the time afforded by the recess I have been more than confirmed in the conclusion which I then stated. Like that eastern queen who was dazzled by the glories of the court of Solomon, "the half was not told me."

When I examined this schedule I found the artistic hand of my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] evident in every line of these increases. In 1883 there was an increase upon the cotton schedule, not adopted in either House after deliberate and fair discussion, but put in by a conference committee without a vote by either House upon it, and that at a time when the cotton manufacturers did not need that increase except as a matter of profit. It is a notorious fact, easily established from the tables of statistics and the returns from those factories, that the cotton manufacturers of the country are in a more prosperous condition to-day than any other manufacturers in the United States. There are losses occasionally upon woolen mills, but the testimony of the cotton manufacturers themselves is, and their reports exhibit it, that the industry is in a prosperous condition.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would it interrupt the Senator from Missouri if I should ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly not.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that the conference committee upon the bill of 1883 proposed an increase, which was afterwards enacted into law, in the rates of duty upon some kinds of cotton goods above the law which was then in existence. Did the Senator from Missouri make that statement?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir, I did.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish, then, to enter my denial, and to say that that is not true; and I shall show it from the record.

Mr. VEST. I have heard before from the Senator from Rhode Island that he proposed to take an early opportunity to deny the statement in regard to the increase of duties on the woolen and cotton schedules made by the conference report of 1883. I should be glad to hear the Senator upon that subject. I say that there was an increase in the cotton schedule.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator desire to hear me now?

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection. I think I am a fair debater, and I am always ready to meet any antagonist at any time.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will consult the convenience of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. It is entirely convenient to me. The Senator can go on if he wants to make the statement now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state, then, that there was but one change made in the cotton schedule by the conference committee in the bill as it passed the Senate in 1883, and that change was a proviso which was incorporated in the existing law, providing that upon goods of a certain value certain rates should be fixed. I have not the proviso before me, but I will send to the committee-room and obtain it. In each one of those cases there was a large reduction over the rates of duty then in existence. I will send to the committee-room and get the proviso. It was a new proviso, which established rates less than the rates then in existence. I will have it for the Senator in a few minutes, if he will allow me.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. While the Senator is waiting for that, I ask leave to go back to page 105, paragraph 134.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the clause be read?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; I do not care to have it read. I had some controversy with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] about chains. The committee have examined that matter further, and in line 474, before the word "cents," I move to strike out "3" and insert "2½."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 105, in line 474, before the word "cents," it is proposed to strike out "3" and insert "2½;" so as to read:

134. Chain or chains of all kinds, made of iron or steel, not less than three-fourths of 1 inch in diameter, 1.6 cents per pound; less than three-fourths of 1 inch and not less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter, 1.8 cents per pound; less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter, 2½ cents per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. That restores the existing law upon that quality of chains.

Mr. VANCE. Does the Senator from Iowa concede that that refers to trace-chains?

Mr. ALLISON. I concede that it may include some chains that I did not think it included when I had the discussion with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I have a specimen of trace-chains and a letter from an importer of those articles which puts it beyond a doubt that under that classification of less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter trace-chains are included.

Mr. ALLISON. I have also specimens; I shall be glad to submit them for examination later.

Mr. VANCE. Does the Senator wish to have his amendment acted upon now?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. I desire to reduce the rate to 2½ cents a pound.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to ask the Senator if he has the means of saying what would be the equivalent ad valorem of 2½ cents a pound?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; I have that. It is 44.37 per cent., a little less than the 45 per cent. rate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At present prices?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The proposition is merely to return to the existing law, not reduce the rate?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. There is no reduction proposed?

Mr. ALLISON. No reduction and no increase. That is the existing law.

Mr. VANCE. Would an amendment to the amendment be in order?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly it would.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Iowa by striking out the words "two and one-half cents per pound" and inserting "30 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out "2½ cents per pound" and insert in lieu thereof "30 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

Less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I have here a letter from a leading hardware-importing house in the city of New York. It is a letter from the importing firm of Alfred Field & Co., 93 Chambers street, as follows:

Hon. Z. B. VANCE:

DEAR SIR: Inclosed I hand you calculations of duties on chains, which I hope may be of service to you in showing the rates of the Senate bill.

I ask the Chief Clerk to read the calculations, showing the duty on a number of chains, including trace-chains, which I have reason to believe is much higher than is represented by the tables of the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Calculation showing ad valorem rates on trace-chains under present tariff and under proposed Senate bill.

[The sizes selected are the three leading sizes used, 6½ by 10 by 2 being the standard size.]

Sizes.	Weight per pair.	Cost abroad per pair.	Present duty.		Senate bill at 3 cents per pound.
			2½ cents per pound.	Equals ad valorem rate of—
	Pounds.	Cents.	Cents.	Per cent.	Per cent.
6½ feet long, 10 links to foot, No. 3 iron-wire gauge	5½	15.50	13.75	89	106½
6½ feet long, 10 links to foot, No. 2 iron-wire gauge	6½	18	16.25	90	108
7 feet long, 10 links to foot, No. 2 iron-wire gauge	7	20	17.50	87½	105

The duty of 2½ cents per pound has been practically prohibitory for over fifteen years past. All the above are less than one-quarter inch diameter.

Calculation showing ad valorem rates on ship-chain under present tariff and under Senate bill.

Sizes.	Present duty per pound.	Duty Senate bill per pound.	Per 112 pounds.
			Present cost abroad.	Present duty.	Ad valorem rates.	Duty Senate bill ad valorem.
	Cents.	Cents.			Per cent.	Per cent.
3/16 inch diameter	2½	3	$4.25	$2.80	66	80
¼ inch diameter	2½	3	3.16	2.80	90	106
5/16 inch diameter	2½	3	2.92	2.80	96	115
⅜ inch diameter	2	1.8	2.67	2.24	84	76
7/16 inch diameter	2	1.8	2.55	2.24	90	79
½ inch diameter	2	1.8	2.37	2.24	94	85
⅝ inch diameter	2	1.8	2.18	2.24	103	93
¾ inch diameter	1½	1.6	2.12	1.96	92	85
1 inch diameter	1½	1.6	2.00	1.96	98	90

Under present tariff all sizes larger than three-sixteenths inch diameter have been practically shut out for many years. Very small quantities of three-sixteenth inch are imported. My estimate is that 90 per cent. of this size is made in America and 10 per cent. imported.

Calculation showing ad valorem rates on bright coil chain (used mainly for agricultural machinery) under present tariff and under Senate bill.

Sizes.	Iron-wire gauge.	Per 100 feet.
		Present cost abroad.	Present duty.	Ad valorem rate.	Ad valorem rate Senate bill.
			Cents.	Per cent.	Per cent.
No. 000	5	$1.30	92	70	86
No. 00	6	1.15	76	66	80
No. 0	7	1.05	60	57	70
No. 1	8	.96	48	50	60
No. 2	9	.91	37	40	50
No. 3	10	.86	28	32	40
No. 4	11	.83	22	27	31
No. 5	12	.81	18	22	26
No. 6	13	.80	11	14	16

Halter-chains for tying up cattle will figure out just about as above. The leading sizes are 000, 00, 0, and 1. The other sizes are not of much value. This bright coil chain and halter-chains are about the only agricultural chains now imported, and the American manufacturers are now making a lot of it, and are very close competitors.

Present duty, all sizes, 2½ cents per pound.

Senate bill duty, all sizes, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. VANCE. I have a further letter from the same firm in explanation of the duty on chains, which I shall read without troubling the clerks:

NEW YORK, December 17, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We have been very much amused over the debate about duty on trace-chains. Mr. ALLISON has been misled; there are no such chains as he thinks imported. Also there are no trace-chains of any account imported, and have not been for many years. The chain that comes in is called coil chain, main sizes 5, 6, 7, and 8 wire gauge, i. e., size of iron the chain is made of, and is used mainly for agricultural machinery. There are also some halter-chains and cow-ties imported, and these are the chains that are mainly imported; all others are shut out. We used to import hundreds of thousands of pairs of trace-chains, but we have not for years been able to import any. We send you per express, prepaid, sample of the leading trace-chain used in this country, and also sample of halter-chain and cow-tie, and trust they may be of service to you in setting Senator ALLISON right.

Very truly,

ALFRED FIELD & CO.

Hon. ZEBULON B. VANCE, Washington.

If those chains are already excluded by the amount of the duty, if it is not possible to import them, why increase the duty? I can see no object in increasing the duty unless it may be a desire on the part of the American makers of trace-chains to combine and put up the price, which they could not do except by the help of a duty which excludes foreign competition. That the rate of 2½ cents proposed is an increase, and a very considerable one, I think the letter which has been read from the importer conclusively establishes.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment which I propose is the existing law, 2½ cents per pound, upon this class of chains. Under it quite a number of chains are imported, but very probably, as Alfred Field & Co. say, only the finer chains are imported. I was glad to have the corroborative testimony of this large importing house to what I already knew, namely, that there is close competition in our own country in the production of these chains, and that they are entirely produced in this country, except a small amount of the chains covered by this amendment.

I also thank the Senator for calling my attention to the letter showing the misapprehension on my part respecting these chains. A further examination of the subject shows that trace-chains of a certain size may be included in this paragraph. But the chains to which I alluded when the question was up before were the small steel chains, which are of high value and are imported. Now, the committee propose to restore the existing duty, and notwithstanding Messrs. Fields' statement, according to the statement produced here by the other side of the Chamber, the statement of the Treasury Department, the present rate of duty is an ad valorem of 44.37 per cent. Upon the larger size chains this amendment reduces the existing rate of duty. On this particular class of chains I propose the existing rate.

I trust that will be satisfactory to the Senator from North Carolina, and that he will not press an amendment which would reduce the ad valorem rate below the cost of the raw material in our own country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. At the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] my pair will be transferred to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], so that the Senator from Maine and myself may vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and vote "nay."

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am informed that I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). Did the junior Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore can not vote

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], but my pair has been transferred to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], but my pair having been transferred to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. He not having voted, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I desire to announce the pair between my colleague [Mr. BERRY] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MANDERSON. In order to make a quorum, I have arranged with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to transfer pairs. I announce a pair between the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORMAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. SABIN] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. GIBSON. I inquire if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is recorded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He announced a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. He was in the Chamber a moment since.

Mr. GIBSON. As the Senator from Colorado is not recorded, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. MORRILL. I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HAMPTON. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. GIBSON. The pair of the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] with his colleague [Mr. STANFORD] has been transferred, and the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I cast my vote "yea."

Mr. STANFORD. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	George,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Call,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Reagan,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed, in line 1211, by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. ALDRICH. In answer to the allegation made by the Senator from Missouri, which has been made in the Senate before, that the duties on some articles in the cotton schedule were increased on the recommendation of the conference committee by the tariff act of 1883 to rates which were in excess of those imposed by the law then in force, I desire to submit a statement of the facts.

I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the only changes made or suggested by the conference committee in the cotton schedule were two: First, by adding a proviso in line 1215 of the bill, a copy of which I have before me, which reads as follows:

Provided, That on all cotton cloth not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 8 cents per square yard;

Bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard;

Dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 13 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem.

And, second, in line 1229 the word "such" was inserted; so as to read:

Provided, That on all such cotton cloths not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 10 cents per square yard;

Bleached, valued at over 12 cents per square yard;

And dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 15 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem.

So that this proviso would only apply to goods counting more than two hundred threads to the square inch.

The proviso which I have last read, with the exception of the word "such," was in the bill as it passed the Senate and went to the committee of conference. The only change made by the conference committee in that proviso was the insertion of the word named.

An examination of those two provisos together will disclose the fact that the only effect of the first proviso was to reduce the limit of valuation on goods not dyed, etc., from 10 cents a square yard to 8 cents a square yard; on bleached goods, from 12 cents to 10 cents, and on dyed, colored, stained, painted or printed, from 15 to 13 cents. The goods included within these limits were the only goods which were or could be affected by the changes proposed.

The rate of duty fixed by these amendments on the goods within the limits I have named was 40 per cent. ad valorem, and the charge made by the Senator from Missouri is that this rate was an increase over the duty which was then imposed upon this class of goods. Now, let us see whether this is the fact or not. The law in existence prior to March 3, 1883, imposed the following rates on the goods named, namely, in paragraph 2 of Schedule A:

2. On finer and lighter goods of like description, not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, unbleached, 5 cents per square yard; if bleached, 5½ cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, 5½ cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem.

That is on one description. Another class is provided for in paragraph 5 of the same schedule, as follows:

5. On finer or lighter goods of like description, not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, if unbleached, 6 cents per square yard; if bleached, 6½ cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, 6½ cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Those two provisions covered the goods to which I have alluded, and fixed duties varying, as shown, from 5 to 5½ cents per square yard and 20 per cent. ad valorem to 6 and 6½ cents per square yard and 15 per cent. ad valorem. The goods affected by the conference committee amendments were all valued, it will be noticed, at between 8 and 10 cents if unbleached, 10 and 12 if bleached, and 13 and 15 if printed or dyed; and the rate on all these goods was fixed by the conference amendments at 40 per cent. ad valorem. Forty per cent. on the first class, unbleached, valued between 8 and 10 cents, would be on the lowest grade 3.2 cents per square yard, and on the highest 4 cents per square yard, and on intermediate values sums ranging between 3.2 and 4 cents per square yard. The lowest rate of duty fixed by the law then in existence on this class of unbleached goods was 6.6 cents per square yard (5 cents per square yard and 20 per cent. ad valorem), and it ranged from that to 7.2 cents per square yard. So, then, instead of being an increase, there was a reduction upon that class of goods from 6.6 cents and 7.2 cents per square yard to 3.2 to 4 cents, or an approximate reduction of 50 per cent.

In other words, the duty levied under the committee's proviso must be from 3.2 to 4 cents a yard; it could not exceed 4 cents, and would never be less than 3.2 cents. Under the law then in existence the duty upon the same goods would run from 6.6 to 7.2 cents a yard; never less than 6.6 and never more than 7.2.

On the next grade—bleached goods—the duty under the proviso would be, on goods valued at 10 cents, 4 cents; goods valued at 12 cents, 4.8 cents. Under the provisions of the law then in existence the duty on this class of bleached goods would have been from 7½ on the lowest class to 8.3 cents a square yard on the highest, or a reduction in rates of nearly 50 per cent. I will not stop to give the exact percentage of reduction, but it is certainly 40 per cent. On goods dyed or printed the duty fixed by the proviso would range from 5.2 to 6 cents a square yard, while under the provisions of the law then in existence the duties would have been from 8.1 to 8.45 cents per square yard.

It will be observed that instead of an increase of duty by the conference provisions, there was a reduction effected on every item ranging from 35 to 50 per cent. This should have been known to any man who had the slightest knowledge of the provisions of the act of 1883 and the law in force prior to that time. A similar statement has been made in regard to changes made in the woolen schedule, and with no more truthfulness. I say to the Senator from Missouri that the only reason I have not made this statement in detail before was the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who had probably been misled into repeating these falsehoods. I trust the explanation I have now made will convince the Senator from Missouri that there was no increase in existing duties upon articles in the cotton schedules effected by the terms of the proviso adopted by the conference committee in 1883.

Mr. VEST. I have supposed that the minority report made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] was correct, for he is very accurate generally in regard to these matters. He says that in Schedule I, cotton goods, a new proviso was added increasing the tax, and he follows that by quoting the proviso.

Now, will the Senator from Rhode Island, in addition to the information he has given us—for he is an expert in these matters—tell us why did that conference committee reduce these rates; why did they reduce them from the law before 1883?

Mr. ALDRICH. Because the reduction was made all along the line. I have already stated in the hearing of the Senator that there was no single schedule in that whole tariff that was so greatly reduced and so greatly simplified as the cotton schedule, and the whole effect of this proviso and the sole object of its insertion was to make an equitable arrangement by which the duties should be levied on various classes of goods in a proper manner.

Mr. VEST. I have a statement made by an expert in regard to the cotton schedule and the changes made in it by the conference report of 1883. I was so certain that the statements I have heard made in regard to that matter were correct that I left the paper at my residence. I have sent for it, and I shall put that in evidence when it comes. There is a great discrepancy between the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island and of the experts who have hitherto examined this matter. One of the members of that conference committee was unquestionably of the opinion that the cotton schedule was increased—I mean the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]—because in an interview published in the Commercial-Gazette soon after the adjournment of that session of Congress he made a statement in regard to it:

The truth is there was a grave fault in constituting the committee on the part of the Senate. The two members of the Finance Committee from New England were put on the conference committee, when, by custom and precedents, Mr. JONES, of Nevada, should have been a member, or, if he declined, Mr. ALLISON. The result was that these two New England Senators controlled the conference, and they were known to be opposed to the duty on wool and in favor of an increase on woolen and cotton goods.

And if a member of that conference committee was mistaken in regard to the cotton schedule, it must be admitted that a layman like myself might have made a similar mistake, if it be one.

Mr. ALLISON. It ought to be stated in connection with what the Senator from Missouri has read as to the construction of that conference committee that it so happened that the conference report was made at the short session of Congress, and my time was wholly occupied in the Committee on Appropriations, as the Senator very well knows. Therefore I could not serve upon the conference, although, as it is said, on the order of precedence usually observed I should probably have been put upon it if I could have served; and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] happened to be absent. So the conference committee was made up of the gentlemen of the Finance Committee who could serve on it, all the Democrats having declined.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, since this matter has been opened up I shall take occasion some time during this discussion to submit an analysis of that report of the conference committee. I know that I can not be mistaken in the assertion I have made to-day that there are increases of duty in the cotton and woolen schedules, and also in the metal schedule, directly against the vote of the Senate. I recollect one of them distinctly now. It was in regard to what are called wire cloths in the metal schedule. If I am not mistaken, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] moved an amendment to the bill reported by the Finance Committee in 1883 that decreased the duty on wire cloth. That amendment was carried in the Senate. It went to the conference committee, and they reported back an increase over the bill, ignoring the action of the Senate upon the amendment, and that conference report was adopted finally on the last night of the session, at nearly 12 o'clock, by a vote of 32 to 31, when the bill that passed the Senate had gone through by a vote of 42 to 19. I recollect that item, and I shall take occasion to refer to that and others before this debate closes.

Mr. ALDRICH. The question at issue between the Senator from Missouri and myself is not who constituted the conference committee, and not whether it was properly constituted, and not what was the opinion of any Senator as to the result of that conference committee's action, but whether the amendment to the cotton schedule resulted in an increase of duties above the then existing law. That was the point I was discussing.

It is undoubtedly true that that conference committee increased the rates which had been fixed in the Senate. What is the object of a conference committee if it is not to arrive at conclusions on matters in issue between the two Houses? We certainly increased the rates upon many things. I presume we did. I can tell very easily upon an examination of the bill before me. But that is entirely aside from the questions I am now discussing. When the Senator presents his report of the experts I shall be glad to see it.

Mr. VEST. I made no issue in regard to the personnel of that committee. I simply quoted what was said by a member of the committee as to the action of the majority. That is all. I certainly have a parliamentary right to do that.

The Senator from Ohio complained of the action of that committee in the public prints after the adjournment of Congress, and said in very plain language that the committee had been constituted so as to increase the woolen and cotton schedules. His principal complaint was in regard to wool. He said the duty had been decreased upon the raw material, but increased as to manufactured goods; in other words, that the wool-producers of Ohio had been made to lose upon this wool product, whilst at the same time they were compelled to pay a higher price for woolen clothing.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is much more simple for me to demonstrate that the change made in the woolen schedule was not an increase from the existing law than it is to demonstrate that the cotton schedule was not increased; and whenever the Senator makes that statement I shall be glad to challenge him with the facts.

Mr. VEST. I hope, then, the Senator will be able to explain the action of that conference committee on sugar, which is a very material part of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. VEST. Because it is now attempted by the Republican party, through the report of this bill, to reduce the surplus in the Treasury by a decrease of the duties on sugar, every dollar of which, except the very small portion which is spent for collection, goes into the Treasury as revenue, but at the same time they increase the duty upon imported woolen and cotton goods, one-fifth of which goes to the Treasury and four-fifths to the manufacturer, and that sugar schedule is most important. I recollect in regard to the sugar schedule, as we are upon it, that we took a vote in the Senate in 1883, and put the duty upon sugars between 14 and 16, Dutch standard, at 2.40 cents per pound. Then when certain Democrats who had charge of the matter upon the Finance Committee agreed to fix the duty at 2.50, at the instance, I believe, of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the report came back from the conference committee at 2.75. Does the Senator from Rhode Island deny that statement? It came back from the committee at 2.75 when the Senate had first fixed it at 2.40 and then the agreement made it 2.50, and yet that duty was put up in that conference committee and rushed through here at nearly 12 o'clock at night by a majority of one and became the law of the land, in direct violation of the agreement had in the Senate and of the sentiment of both Houses.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Missouri mean to state that a conference committee has no right to change the rates fixed by the Senate upon any article, and does he mean to say that the House had fixed a different or lower rate upon sugar from the rate he mentioned?

Mr. VEST. The House was not consulted about the matter, not permitted even to take a vote. The matter was rushed into a conference committee and put through under whip and spur at nearly midnight. There were not three men in the Senate who knew what was in that conference report.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was their own fault if they did not know.

Mr. VEST. The members of the Committee on Finance on this side were not in that conference.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why?

Mr. VEST. Because they did not propose to be made parties to what they knew was a preadjudged matter. That was the reason. They did not propose to be bound by the action of a tribunal which was ex parte, according to the testimony of the Senator from Ohio, which was so constituted that the duties in favor of the New England manufacturers could be increased by the action of that committee.

Mr. ALLISON. On this question of the conference, I wish to say that it is the uniform custom in making up conference committees that the minority shall be represented, and it often happens here that the minority does not consent to a report. Surely no man could excuse himself from serving on a committee because he belonged to the minority and the majority was likely to overrule him. That is the argument of the Senator.

Mr. VEST. Not at all.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me a moment?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. I think the Senator from Iowa will remember that one reason why the minority was not represented on that conference committee was that they claimed that it was not a free conference, that the House had passed a resolution that the substitution of an entire tax bill in the manner in which that bill in 1883 was substituted by the Senate was a violation of the privilege of the House, which alone has the power to originate tax bills, and they passed that resolution, and the committee from the House attended with that resolution in their pockets, and the members of the minority of the Senate committee objected, stating that if the conference suited the House they would keep the authority in their pockets and not produce it; if the conference did not suit the members of the House, they would withdraw, questioning the legality of the Senate bill, and for that reason Messrs. BECK and Bayard both withdrew, and were not present when the conference was concluded. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is mistaken in his history. No such statement was made to the conference committee, and the gentlemen appointed from that side of the Chamber never attended any meeting of the conference.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will remember, that statement was made by both Messrs. BECK and Bayard upon this floor, and he will so find it in the RECORD.

Mr. ALDRICH. They based their action solely on certain resolutions that passed the House of Representatives. They never attended any conference, and no such statement was made in conference.

Mr. VANCE. They declined to attend it for that reason as I find it. They declined to participate and be bound by a conference which was not free, and it was so stated here upon the floor.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I did not propose to open a question which is almost ancient history now as to that conference committee, but there were statements made by members of that committee which were very significant, and which ought not to make that a very pleasurable reminiscence to anybody engaged in the business. Here is what one member of the committee said. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] said:

> The classification is so changed that none but an expert can understand it.

I do not deny that a conference committee has the right——

Mr. ALDRICH. What classification is that?

Mr. VEST. As to the question of the cotton schedule.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have already stated to the Senator that the only change made was the insertion of that proviso, which did not change the classification one particle.

Mr. VEST. I am quoting from a member of the conference committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator seems to be adopting his language.

Mr. VEST. I quote the language.

Mr. ALDRICH. You seem to be adopting it.

Mr. VEST. I am quoting it. He says:

> The classification is so changed that none but an expert can understand it.

That was the statement of the Senator from Ohio, and it is very well known that a newspaper controversy was had afterwards between two distinguished Senators, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], in regard to that conference report, in which one charged the other with having taken advantage of the personnel of the committee with two New England Senators upon it to put up the duties on cotton and woolen goods, whilst the Senator from Vermont retorted that the Senator from Ohio worked the matter so as to put up the duties on iron and steel. The Senator from Vermont replied at considerable length in the New York Tribune to the Senator from Ohio, in which he stated:

> The distinguished Senator is a remarkably cool and sagacious man, but he was evidently in a pet, and by this time he will regret some of his rather exaggerated and hasty statements. He criticises the fact that two members of the conference committee were from New England, and would seem to indicate that this brought to bear a malign sectional influence, forgetting that two of the members of the conference committee were from the State of Ohio alone, and perhaps, too, sensitively remembering that the large increase of duties on plain white crockery-ware had never been insisted upon in the Senate by New England.

In other words, the Senator from Ohio charged that two other members of the conference committee had taken advantage of their position on the committee to put up the duties on cotton and woolen fabrics, whilst he is charged with doing the same thing as to an Ohio product—crockery-ware. Further, the Senator from Vermont said:

But the Senator complains that the duties on woolens were raised in the conference committee; so they were on pig and bar iron.

Now, I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to say there was no increase on the woolen schedule; but the Senator from Vermont admitted that there was an increase, and retorted by saying to the Senator from Ohio, "Well, you're another; you also increased the duty upon pig-iron in the interests of the Ohio producers." Again he said:

Only a proviso was inserted in the conference committee by which a special class of cotton cloth should be subject to a duty of 40 per cent., which is the same or a little less than the existing law.

Now the Senator from Rhode Island says that there is a reduction of 50 per cent. under that proviso, whilst the Senator from Vermont declared it was just the same as the then existing law or a little less.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have given the figures and they will appear in the RECORD. The Senator can figure his own percentage and ascertain the amount.

Mr. VEST. I have never taken the position that a conference committee could not put different provisions in a bill from those contained in it when referred to them; but I do submit that the ordinary and proper mode of procedure is when a conference committee is created and a vote has been had by the body which appointed them indicating the sentiment of that body, that decent respect should be paid to that legislative action; and new provisions and higher rates of duty after the Senate had voted against them should not have been inserted in that report. But the result is always the same. There is either an increase of duty, or there is some sort of proviso put into a bill which meets the wishes of the manufacturers without regard to the interests of the consumers of the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. If it does not interrupt the Senator, I should like to make an additional statement to show what was done in regard to the woolen schedule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Of course, if the Senator wishes to go on.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no wish about it except the convenience of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I prefer to get through with what I have to say.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that the majority of the Committee on Finance devoted a large portion of their report to a denunciation of the system of ad valorem duties, and when they come to these cotton threads adopt precisely that system. When it suits them and has the effect of increasing the duty, then the ad valorem system is good enough. Take the provisions in this bill in regard to cotton threads:

313. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn (not wound upon spools), whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single, by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 10 cents per pound.

There is the valuation which has given rise to so much fraud, according to the report of the Finance Committee. Why is it they disregard their own argument? Why is it that they trample under foot their own declaration that overvaluation is the prolific source of fraud, and adopt that very system in regard to these cotton threads? All through this cotton-thread section we find valuations, and if the specific duty be the only proper way in which to fix duties on imports, why is it that the committee abandon that and adopt this infamous system, as they denounce it in their report?

It is almost impossible to consider this question of cotton threads without considering the whole cotton schedule, and, as I stated before the recess—and I have examined it analytically since as best I could—the whole meaning and purpose of the changes in the cotton schedule is to increase duties for the benefit of the New England manufacturers without regard to the manufacturers in other sections of the country or to the interest of the consumers. Is there any doubt that the cotton manufacturers of this country are in a flourishing condition to-day? I read some time ago in the Senate, and I can read it again if necessary, the report of the dividends made by the cotton factories in New England. If there is any other industry in this country that is in as flourishing a condition I do not know it. I read from a paper published in the city in which is the residence of my friend from Rhode Island himself [Mr. ALDRICH], the Providence Journal, giving the dividends and profits for three months during the last summer. American Company, capital stock $400,000, net profits for three months $25,000, more than 25 per cent.; Bourne Mills, capital stock $400,000, net profits for three months $16,000; Chace Mills, capital stock $500,000, net profits for three months $10,000, and so on through the whole of this list, making dividends of 9, 10, 12, 15, and up to 25 per cent.; and yet we are asked now deliberately to increase the profit of these manufacturers without regard to the interests of the consumers. There is no increase of duty upon the coarse cotton cloths manufactured in the South, and nobody asks for that increase. New England to-day has a monopoly of the manufacture of the finer cotton cloths in the United States. They have changed their machinery because they know they can not compete with the Southern factories in the manufacture of the coarser and heavier cloths, because the difference in the price of cotton, in freight, and in price of labor gives the advantage to the Southern factories, and the New England manufacturers have abandoned to them this trade, which asks no additional protection from the Congress of the United States.

I am glad to say that the cotton factories of the South are in a flourishing condition, and that they are exporting their products to China, to Brazil, to Mexico, and to all the South American countries; and, as the evidence taken before this committee and before the committees of the House shows, the cotton factories in the Southern States are making large dividends. They can compete successfully with the English manufacturers. They are taking from the English their own markets in their own provinces, and I am exceedingly gratified to be able to state that fact here and now.

But the cotton factories engaged in the manufacture of finer fabrics in New England are not satisfied with the present duty, not satisfied with these dividends I have read. Do they ask to have these increases on cotton threads and the finer cotton cloths to protect the workingmen of New England? We hear that continually in this debate. No legislation for the capitalist—all of it for the poor workingman, the American laborer! And we have had rosy descriptions of the comfortable homes, the almost luxurious abodes of the cotton-spinners and workmen in the cotton factories of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Mr. President, we might as well have all the facts in regard to this matter. In the last canvass and upon this floor we are continually reminded that this is not a question for doctrinaires, and as the President of the United States said, "The Republican party wants markets, not maxims," and in that sign they conquer. I do not want to figure as a doctrinaire; I do not want the statements of politicians, but I want the statements of workmen in regard to whether they are protected by these duties, and I have taken some pains to ascertain what they say in direct contradiction to statements made upon this floor.

I hold in my hand volume 1 of the Report on Relations between Labor and Capital from a committee over which my distinguished friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] presided, and I have here the testimony, which I have read from beginning to end with the greatest possible interest, of Mr. Robert Howard:

Q. What is your occupation?

A. Mule-spinner in the cotton mills; that was my occupation up to the last two or three years. Now I am the paid secretary of our organization.

That is, the mule-spinners' organization.

Q. Are you now or were you formerly a member of the Massachusetts Legislature?

A. I was a member of the Legislature of Massachusetts in 1881. I served one year, and the year following I was nominated again, but I declined. I thought it would have a tendency to create bad feeling among the members of our organization, some of them perhaps thinking that I was seeking political honors, and therefore I declined the nomination.

Q. Have you knowledge of the condition of the working people generally, or of those of your own craft in New England and also in Old England?

A. Yes, sir; I have a thorough knowledge of it.

THE ENGLISH MULE-SPINNERS BETTER OFF THAN THE AMERICAN.

Q. Before proceeding to a detailed statement of the condition of the working people as you have observed it in this country, please give us a somewhat particular account of the condition of the working classes in Great Britain, and in Ireland also, if you are acquainted with it.

A. I worked in England upwards of seventeen years as a mule-spinner and a piecer for the mule-spinner—that is, simply an assistant—and my opinion of the condition of the workmen in that branch of industry relative in the United States and England is that the English spinner is in a far better condition. I will not speak for the weavers, but only for the mule-spinners; they are better off in England because the manufacturers there don't appear to be so desirous of working the men so much like horses or slaves as they do in our State—they don't work at the same extraordinary rate of speed that we do in Fall River. There they give a man a pair of mules, that is cotton-spinning frames, and they give a man an assistant to work between the mules with him, and also an assistant to work on the back of the mules; but in this country it is a very peculiar fact (but I know it is so with the exception of one or two places) that however large the mules may be, no matter how many spindles they may contain, the employers will not come down to the same policy adopted in England.

This gentleman—it is not necessary that I should read everything he states—goes on to give the product in the mills at Fall River:

We have worked out by figures the rate of our production, and we find that we turn out cloth at the rate of a mile a minute in Fall River, and, as I have said, three-fifths of the entire production of print cloths in the United States is in that city.

Q. In Oldham, that English city which you have mentioned, do they turn out as much cloth in proportion to the number of mules as they do in Fall River? That is, do they turn it out at the rate of 5 miles per minute?

A. I think they can get about the same production there that we get in Fall River. But the spinners have more assistance there. There is not as much labor put upon one man there as there is in our city, and our machinery goes at a higher rate of speed.

Q. Then, mule for mule, Fall River produces more cloth?

A. Yes.

By Mr. GEORGE:

Q. Is that on account of the greater rate of speed of the spindles of Fall River?

A. To a great extent it is; but there is one other thing that we should not lose sight of. We get in Fall River the pick of all the help coming out here from England. A boat runs direct from New York to Fall River, which is on the route to Boston, and on the other side Boston is so near to us that all the picked help who are continually coming to these great cities, or the majority of them, come and settle here in Fall River.

He goes on and gives a very interesting and intelligent account of the working of the mills at Fall River. He then proceeds to say:

But in England they manage those matters very differently. The manufacturers have a board of trade with a paid secretary (I am speaking now of Oldham, the largest print-manufacturing place there), and the spinners have an organization of some 5,000 members, and they also have a permanent paid secretary. Then they have a list to go by.

Then he comes to the question of the American cotton manufactures, can they compete with the English? I hold this to be the most valuable testimony, because it comes from a man who has been all his life engaged in this manufacture, who has been intelligent enough to be a representative in the Massachusetts Legislature, who is the president of an association of his fellow-workingmen, and who, his whole evidence shows, has thought and reflected and is acquainted experimentally with what he is talking about. He says, referring to Consul Shaw:

Again, the year before, in a letter that he sent to the Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, he says that he does not see why we should not be able to compete with the English manufacturers, and indeed Mr. Blaine himself says that he can not see why, either. Mr. Shaw mentions several kinds of cloth of which the cost of production in England is in the ratio of 2.55 there against 2.50 here, so that it really costs more in England.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN WAGES.

Mr. Shaw gives also the wages of the weavers and spinners in England, and the reason that I did not want to go into that matter in detail now was that I have not those figures with me, but I think the wages given by Mr. Shaw for the weavers commence at $3.84 and range all the way up to $8.64, and the wages earned in America by the weavers commence at $4.62 and run up to $8.73, so that there is hardly any perceptible difference between the wages in England and the wages here. I think the wages paid to spinners in America he puts at from $7.20 up to $10.63, and the wages paid to spinners in England, if I recollect right, start at a little higher than the lowest wages here and run up to a few cents lower than the highest here; but there is hardly any difference in the figures. And, moreover, we are not paid so much in proportion to our production here as they are paid in England; for the reason that if we get as much wages here, we have to give more work for it.

AMERICAN OPERATIVES WORK HARDER THAN ENGLISH.

You will see a good smart girl running eight print-cloth looms in our mills here. She ought not to be allowed to do it, but she does it; and there is not a weaver in England that is allowed to run over four, and the English weaver has an assistant in running even four. So that the weavers do not get paid as much per loom for their production here as they get in England.

AMERICAN MILLS "RUN" AT LESS COST THAN ENGLISH.

I also noticed in Mr. Shaw's report this year some figures showing the cost of running mills in Massachusetts and at Ashton-under-Lyne, and also at Blackburn, in England, and he shows that some of the mills here are run on less cost than those English mills, particularly the Rhode Island mills, which are run by water and which, with the exception of Conant's mill, pay very low wages. The wages generally are about $7 or $7.50 a week, but in Conant's mill it is exceptional; there they pay as high as $12 a week. These facts were the basis for Mr. Blaine's inference from Mr. Shaw's report.

This gentleman goes on to testify in regard to the manner in which these corporations in New England conduct their business, and he is asked this question:

Q. Have you ever known an instance where, there being a rise in the market, the employers voluntarily, without solicitation and without active effort on the part of the operatives, raised their wages?

A. Not one.

Q. Did you ever hear of such an instance?

A. I have heard of instances where shortly after the men had returned to work after a strike the employers advanced them.

Q. But I mean an instance where there was no active effort on the part of the operatives, and where, there being a rise in the market price of the thing produced, the employer came forward voluntarily and said to his operatives, "I will give you more wages; I can afford to do it?"

A. I never heard of any such occurrence as that. In 1880, when there was an extraordinary rise in prices, there was an advance given by our manufacturers in Fall River on the very same day that some resolutions of ours appeared in the papers resolving to strike their mills.

Q. What do you say your resolutions were?

A. Our resolution was that if we were not to be given better wages—if we were not to get back some of the 30 per cent. reduction of wages that we had been suffering under from 1873—we would strike ten mills in Fall River; and the same day that our resolution went to print the manufacturers' resolution to give us an advance also went to print.

Q. Whose resolution was adopted first in point of time?

A. I don't know; I think that both parties were ignorant of each other's action because the Boston papers and the Providence Journal began to fool us, saying, "What is the matter with Fall River, an advance asked for and an advance given on the same day!" But I do think the manufacturers did hear some little murmuring going on among the men in the mills.

By Mr. PUGH:

Q. Was the advance which they gave equal to the demand of the men?

A. Yes, sir; it was equal to the demand, only it was given in a different way.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you ever known another instance of that kind?

A. Not a solitary one.

Q. Either in the Old World or in the New?

A. Well, in England, both the secretary of the Manufacturers' Board and the secretary of the Spinners' Association have their eyes on the market all the time, and if there is a change in the market, the secretaries will ask through each other for a corresponding change in wages.

Q. I suppose it would be fair to ask you now if you have ever known an instance where, there being a fall in the market price of the thing produced, the operatives voluntarily asked to have their wages reduced?

A. I have never known an instance of that; but there is no need to ask that, because when there is a fall in the market, the employers will tell you a hundred times about it before it comes on the street. I do think, however, that there is more harm done at the street corners by the men who tell stories there than by anything else.

Q. I asked the question in order to develop your idea of the good influence of organization among the workingmen in securing their rights.

A. Well, I do not think there ever was a case of the kind you suggest, and it would be a very unadvisable course for the help to follow, because the employers would think they could reduce them a little more after that, and would get them down and down in that way. But I will show you the way they gave us that 10 per cent. advance. It is laughable to see the little trickery that goes on sometimes. We got reduced 10 per cent. on our prices, and the 10 per cent. which they gave us as an advance was 10 cents on the dollar earned. I wrote to the secretary of the Manufacturers' Board about it, but he did not seem to answer my letter, and I met some of the others on the street and I said to them, "I am afraid there is going to be trouble among our fellows." So we met two or three of the other agents and we talked for three hours, but we could not come to anything satisfactory to me.

The result of the testimony is that they demanded and threatened to strike ten mills unless they got an increase, and on the same day it was given to them.

The witness was then asked:

Q. If in the American market there is a certain amount of a certain kind of goods, and in the foreign market there is a certain surplus amount of the same kind of goods which is kept out from our market by a tariff, and if you remove that tariff and let that European surplus in, and you are a producer of the same kind of articles here, will you get more wages or less wages as a result of removing that tariff?

A. I do not think we would get any less in our city in our branch of industry. At first we might suffer on account of our corporations being built up under the tariff law; but if no tariff restrictions had been in existence when our corporations were built up I believe we would not suffer now by goods coming in from abroad. I think that what it took $600,000 to build under the tariff law could be built for $400,000 without it. Consequently the sales of a given amount of goods would yield a greater dividend and would enable our manufacturers to pay us good wages and compete with England. But the mills are there; the money is invested in them, and the owners want a return on it. We only want to do what is fair between capital and labor. Some of the new mills I think would not be able to stand; but some of the old ones would be able to stand against the competition of foreign goods.

Q. You think they have arrived at that point now?

A. I do, as to our branch of industry. I could not speak for all branches.

Q. How came those mills to be in existence in this country? Have you been observant of the rise of the manufacturing industries in this country?

A. No longer than for the past eleven years.

Q. Do you know whether the interest upon capital is higher or lower in this country than in European countries?

A. I suppose it is higher here.

Mr. President, one important portion of this testimony is in regard to the condition of operatives. I have not the strength to read it all, although I would be glad to do so, because it comes from the best source in the world, from an operative who is familiar with what he is talking about and who had seen the condition of labor in the old country and in this.

Q. In regard to the actual physical condition of the operatives in Fall River and elsewhere, can you give us any information?

A. The condition of the operatives in our city is a very unenviable one. The work there is very hard and the wages are very low—low in proportion to what they used to be some ten years ago, before the financial depression set in. Our females in particular are overworked; their strength is entirely overtaxed by the labors they have to perform. I have often argued myself that if our manufacturers would give over preaching so much about temperance and other things and try to bring about a reform in the condition of their operatives, it would be better than all the many thousand temperance lectures and temperance tales.

REDUCTION OF HOURS OF LABOR.

Q. What things would you suggest in the way of reform?

A. Well, we can not start anything in Fall River until we get New Hampshire and Rhode Island to do something, and the only practical thing we can see for them is to bring about a further reduction in the hours of labor.

OVERWORK AND ITS EFFECTS.

The work is too severe. Nobody would credit the amount of labor that a cotton operative has to perform. You may take a girl, boy, or man, from outside and put him in there to walk by the side of one who is employed in those mills, and I tell you that unless he has a very good constitution you will soon perceive a failure—that is, on account of the mere traveling, irrespective of the peculiar labor they have to perform. It is dreadful to see those girls, stripped almost to the skin, wearing only a kind of loose wrapper, and running like a race-horse from the beginning to the end of the day; and I can perceive that it is bringing about both a moral and physical decay in them. I do not want to say a word that would reflect disagreeably on my city or its people, because I think others are quite as bad, but I must say that I have noticed that the hard, slavish overwork is driving those girls into the saloons after they leave the mills in the evenings; and you might as well try to deprive them of their suppers; after they leave the mills you will see them going into saloons, looking scared and ashamed, and trying to go in without any one seeing them—good, respectable girls, too—but they come out so tired, and so thirsty, and so exhausted, especially in the summer months, from working along steadily from hour to hour and breathing the noxious effluvia from the grease and other ingredients that are used in the mills, and they are so exhausted when the time comes to quit that you will find that all their thoughts are concentrated on something to drink to allay their thirst.

I know of one girl in particular that lived close by me; her father died in the war and she lives with her widowed mother, who is receiving a pension from the State. The girl's health began to fail her some time ago and she had to go round the country trying to recruit her strength, and finally the doctor told her that the work was too hard and tried to keep her out of the mills, but the mother found it hard to get along, because it is so difficult to get occupation outside of the mills, and the doctor advised the mother to tell the girl to get a glass of beer or something to stimulate her appetite, as she could not eat anything; for beer, with all its bad faults—and I do not believe it is a good thing for anybody, still it has an effect sometimes in stimulating the stomach and creating the desire for something to eat, and without they do eat they won't work long in the mills. I would not put a child of mine in to be a mule-spinner for anything—I think I would sooner put it to a chimney-sweep to learn his trade. It is a trade and it is no trade, mule-spinning, and if the manufacturers would only try it a little they would think so too, because it is a continual race from morning till night, and there is not one man in twenty not brought up in the business who could follow a mule-spinner from the beginning of his day's work to the end, even considering nothing but the walking. I noticed one time in reading the history of the agitation for the ten-hour law in England that at that time assertions were made that the girls employed on spinning-mules, to work for the spinners, walked, say, from 17 to 20 miles per day.

There was a board of commissioners appointed by the Government to ascertain, among other things, whether those figures were correct. Lord Palmerston was one of those who were interested in the matter, and after the subject was investigated the calculation was made out; they decided that the operative had to walk from 18 to 25 miles per day. But I have often asked myself since whether they were correct in that statement, because at that time the mules only went about two stretches in a minute. They go to-day four stretches and over four stretches in one minute, which is as fast again as they went at that time, so that working it out in proportion, if two stretches a minute give a distance of from 18 to 25 miles a day what must be the distance traveled now by the operative in ten hours at the rate of four stretches a minute? But at any rate, whatever the exact figures may be, it is a constant race from morning to night after this machinery; and you may know as well as I can tell you how a man must feel in this hot weather following such an occupation as that. He just feels no manhood about him. He can only take a glass of beer to stimulate him, to give him a little appetite so that he may eat in order to be able to go through his daily drudgery. I have been there and I know it. From the time I was very young I was fond of reading, and I remember many occasions when I have gone to my supper and taken my daily paper and have fallen asleep with the paper in my hand and have slept there until about 11 o'clock. Then I have been determined to read it, and have put my lamp beside me when I went to bed, and have gone to sleep again with the paper in my hand and lain there just as I put myself down, without stirring until morning—the result of exhaustion.

Now, we can never expect to advance civilization among such a class of people until we get a reform of this miserable condition of affairs.

This workman comes now to the dwellings of operatives. I am not here to put any personal knowledge against that of the Senators from Massachusetts and Vermont, or those roseate pictures that almost equal the description in the Lady of Lyons of that palace by the Lake of Como "lifting its head to eternal summer," etc. Here is the evidence of a man who has gone through this thing, manifestly a superior man in his business, a representative man, who has been a member of the Legislature of Massachusetts and is president of this association; here is what he says about the dwellings of the operatives:

Q. In regard to the actual tenements in which the operatives live, and their sanitary condition generally, what have you to say?

A. Well, I think that in Fall River we are behind other cities of Massachusetts in regard to our dwellings.

Q. I do not ask you about Fall River alone, but about that and the other manufacturing cities, such of them as you have observed.

A. Well, I think myself that there should be something done by the city government in regard to those houses. I think there ought to be something done to prevent the building of these huge blocks of tenements with only one room for a man to sit in and cook in and live in. They will have two bedrooms and a kitchen, and in that kitchen they must cook and sit; and if a friend comes in they have got to meet him there. When I have gone into those places in the night where there was a hot stove and they were cooking, I have felt fit to run anywhere out of them. There is no comfort at all. If a man had a little room where he could go and read his paper and be comfortable, I think he would be more likely to stay at home instead of going abroad to seek other kinds of enjoyment.

This is not that typical New England cottage, with the piano, and the pictures, and the library, and a little garden, and the contentment of home, and the hope of the future, but this is an actual, real description given by a man who, to use his own language, "has been there."

In regard to the savings of factory operatives which we are told here could buy whole cities, I read the following from the testimony of the same witness:

Q. What do you say in regard to the adequacy of the wages received by the working people in the factories in Massachusetts and other places with which you are familiar? State first, if you please, to what extent you have known, or do know, of accumulations of property among the wage-workers in manufactories.

A. If I had been aware of it that I was to appear before this committee I could have brought you some figures on that subject. I intended to make a point on that, but not having the exact figures with me I could not venture to do it with safety. We have building associations in our city, and there are many private houses springing up now. I am the president of the finance committee of one of those associations. The members pay in so much money per month and sell the dwellings at auction.

Q. Are the operatives generally saving anything?

A. Very few of them save anything.

Q. About what proportion of them do you think are saving?

A. I do not think that 10 per cent. of them are saving; because, as I have said, they are overworked and they spend their money in order to try to keep up their physical condition.

OVERWORK LEADS TO DRINKING AND IMPROVIDENCE.

Q. In regard to the other 90 per cent., do you attribute their failure to save to improvident habits on their part, or to inadequacy of compensation?

A. I attribute it more to overwork than anything else. Wherever you go in this country, or in any other country in the world, near the abodes of people who are overworked, you will always see the sign of the rum shop. Wherever you find men toiling at some miserable, laborious occupation, you will always find that sign, and the more miserable the condition of the people is the more custom there is for the rum shop.

Q. Do you mean, then, the failure of the operatives to save results from their too-prolonged hours of labor rather than from the inadequacy of their pay?

A. I believe it is largely attributable to too long hours. Drinking is most prevalent among the working people where the hours of labor are long.

This gentleman is further asked in regard to what labor contributes to the value of the cotton product:

Q. I want to get your knowledge or your views as to the value which the labor of the operative imparts to the articles that are manufactured in the cotton mills at Fall River where you work. How much of the value does the labor of the operative impart to the cotton fabrics made there?

A. Do you mean what dividends are the mills making?

Q. No; I mean what proportion of the whole cost of the fabric, when it is put upon the market, is made up in the cost of labor—the wages paid to the operatives?

A. That question I could answer accurately if I had my report of the bureau of statistics with me; but I have not, and that is the reason that I said awhile ago that I did not want to go into figures.

Q. What per cent. of the cost of the fabric to the manufacturer is made up of the price he pays for labor? Can you tell what relation the cost of the labor bears to the other items of cost in producing the article?

A. I will tell you what I will do. I will send all these data to the committee in figures; because we have it in the last report of our bureau of labor statistics. I think it is 20 or 22 per cent., but I am not certain.

Q. What is your knowledge and information as to the share that the laborer gets of the product when a division is made between him and the manufacturer? What is your idea also as to whether that share is equitable and just and right—whether it is such a share of the product as the laborer should have in proportion to the amount of work that he does and the amount or value that his labor imparts to the product?

A. There is a wide difference between towns and cities. For instance, here are the Pacific Mills in Lawrence. Last year they reduced the wages of their help somewhere about 25 per cent., and we could prove that for nineteen years preceding the corporation had declared dividends averaging 20½ per cent. We could find evidence of that in our State records.

Q. You are telling us now what the capitalist, the manufacturer, got in that case?

A. Yes, sir; that is the kind of dividends they get in good times, and then when the first cloud of adversity comes, they never think of the large dividends they have been making for years, but they look around and say, "The market is falling, and we must keep up these dividends in some way;" and then they try to do it by cutting down the wages of their workmen.

Q. That is, they are not willing to lose any portion of these 20 per cent. dividends when revulsions in trade come and panics take place—they are not willing to lose anything themselves, but they make labor bear the loss?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not quite gather the statement there about the Pacific Mills. I understood this witness to state that for nineteen years prior to his statement the Pacific Mills had made an annual dividend of 28 per cent.

Mr. VEST. Twenty and one-ninth per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. Annually for nineteen successive years?

Mr. VEST. I will again read the statement:

Last year they reduced the wages of their help somewhere about 25 per cent., and we could prove that for nineteen years preceding the corporation had declared dividends averaging 20½ per cent. We could find evidence of that in our State records.

* * * * * * *

And the Pacific Mills that I have spoken of have not only made that dividend, but their capital stock has been increased from $2,500,000 to $5,000,000.

I have not the strength to read more of this evidence. I make no apology for reading it, however, because it strikes on the main point in this connection, and that is whether this increase of duties goes to the capitalist, to the manufacturer, or goes to the workingman, and I take it the best evidence in the world—not from doctrinaires, not from tables of statistics that can be manufactured, but from an intelligent workingman himself, who, not influenced by political considerations, has nothing before him but the good of his fellow-workmen.

Mr. ALLISON. What is this gentleman's name?

Mr. VEST. I gave it. His name is Howard, and he is an ex-member of the Massachusetts Legislature, and greatly to his credit he declined a re-election. I will read it again for the benefit of my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] if he takes any personal interest in it. I do not know him, and I went through this vast volume of testimony without particular attention to statements of the doctrinaires and the professors and the politicians, and accepted this man's statement as worth all of them put together. He has worked in both countries; he knows certainly what he is talking about, and he makes these statements from personal observation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to make a statement just there?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. This gentleman—undoubtedly he is a very worthy man—is politically a Democratic free-trade agitator.

Mr. VEST. I do not know anything in the world about him, and do not know whether he is a Democrat or Republican, and he does not state.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can inform the Senator that he is one of the Democratic leaders in the city of Fall River.

Mr. VANCE. That is all the better.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say, so far as his connection with labor organizations is concerned, that I do not think he has done any work himself for a good many years, except to draw his salary as a floor-walker or agitator or something of that kind.

Mr. VEST. That is always the way when anybody testifies against these manufacturers who make enormous profits. I have no doubt that my friend from Rhode Island would, if he had the power, put in the statutes of the United States a provision that any man who votes the Democratic ticket should be disqualified as a witness or juryman. I have not the slightest doubt of it. I know of no crime in the eyes of the manufacturers and their defenders here greater than that of resisting this system of taking enormous profits; and it matters not where the testimony or the arguments come from, we are met with an assault like this: "Is that man a Democrat? Does he vote the Republican ticket? Has he dipped in this political Pool of Siloam called the Republican party? If not, out with him! He is an agitator, a floor-walker, an incendiary; he is against the interests of the Republic!"

Mr. ALLISON. I was surprised to hear the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island after hearing the eulogy of the Senator from Missouri, who stated that after looking over that vast volume and reading the statements of amateurs and experts and politicians, he finally struck an honest man who took no interest in politics; and now it turns out that this man is a professional agitator. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Rhode Island makes that statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. He has been a Democratic candidate for State senator from Fall River for eight or ten years.

Mr. VEST. It seems he has been elected.

Mr. ALDRICH. Sometimes he has been, and sometimes he has been defeated—oftener defeated.

Mr. VEST. Here is his statement under oath:

I was a member of the Legislature of Massachusetts in 1881. I served one year, and the year following I was nominated again, but I declined. I thought it would have a tendency to create bad feeling among the members of our organization, some of them perhaps thinking that I was seeking political honors, and therefore I declined the nomination.

Mr. ALDRICH. He reconsidered that good resolution and ran the next year.

Mr. VEST. He may have committed perjury, but I have come to that time of life when I am very reluctant to believe that a man could deliberately swear to a lie without any other incentive to do it except simply the facility for doing so.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This statement was made under oath, was it not?

Mr. VEST. It was made before the committee of which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] was chairman. Here is this man's unpardonable sin. He was asked:

Q. What about its being a fact publicly known to the whole country that protection through the imposition of tariff laws is claimed, by members of Congress who represent that policy, for the benefit of the American laborer? Is not the tariff adjusted, or said to be adjusted, so as to afford protection for the benefit of the American laborer by enabling the manufacturer to pay him the highest wages for his work? Is not that the general ground on which it is claimed that there should be protection?

A. That is the ground upon which it is claimed; but that is not the prevalent opinion among the working people.

Q. Then, while this protective law is claimed to be and is passed in order that it may be a benefit to the operatives in our manufactories, I want to know how much benefit they do actually get from the increased prices which the protective tariff gives to the product. What share do the operatives receive when the product is sold and the proceeds are divided between them and capital?

A. The benefit? Looking at the wages here compared with the wages in England, I can not see any benefit.

Q. That is, the manufacturer takes the whole of the benefit; is that it?

A. Yes. They will go over to Canada and bring over hordes of French people here to work in our mills at 50 or 75 cents a day.

Q. Are not the operatives in New England intelligent enough to know that this protection that was intended for them in the passage of this tariff law does not reach them; and is not that one reason of their discontent?

A. Yes, sir. Secretaries of trades organizations in England write to me that we are selfish in keeping on our tariff laws.

But as a matter of course this man has committed the unpardonable sin in that he has dared to express the opinion that the protective system, as it is called, of the United States inures to the benefit of the capitalist and not to that of the laborer. If he had held the opposite opinion he might have been worthy of the following encomium, which I commend to the Senator from Rhode Island with the simple observation that if he continues as he has commenced the time may come when this mantle will fall upon him and he will stand upon the pedestal now occupied by our venerable friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. Here is what the president of the Manufacturers' Association says of the honorable Senator from Vermont, for whom I have a great regard:

Mr. MORRILL'S marvelous success did not proceed so much from his genius and intuitive suggestions as from a faculty higher than any genius which this statesman possesses in a degree unequaled by any other in the country—with perhaps the exception of Mr. KELLEY—of ascertaining in the minutest details the wants of every interest in connection with tariff legislation.

That is the highest element of statesmanship, to find out what the manufacturers want and give it to them. That is higher than genius, higher than anything else. Go down to the minutest detail and find out what they want and give it to them, and then you are entitled to the encomiums passed upon my honorable friend from Vermont in this evidence.

But, Mr. President, whether it is one constructor of a tariff bill or another, whether it is one Republican committee or another, the result is always the same—an increase of duty either by classification or by direct provision, always inuring to the benefit of the manufacturers without regard to the consumers, who are told simply to stand off and look upon this marvelous programme without any interest in it whatever, the entire tariff duty being paid by the foreign importer, and it being a question entirely with the manufacturer and importer in which the people of the country are not at all interested! If I should put a paraphrase upon some well-known lines I should say that—

> Protection's battle once begun,
> Bequeathed from grasping sire to son,
> Though often lost, is ever won.

There is never any end to it, and until the people of this country recognize the fact that the object of this system is to put money into the pockets of capitalists over and above any reasonable profit it is useless to make any argument or exhibit any facts.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. I yield if the Senator wants to ask a question.

Mr. STEWART. No; I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, a great deal has been said in this connection in regard to the beatific condition of the operatives in the States of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. I have in my hand the "Fourth Annual Report of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor, embracing the account of its operations and inquiries from March 1, 1872, to March 1, 1873, of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

I suppose this does not come from a false witness. This comes from a State board created by law, making their report and making it upon some points that are very material in this controversy; and I commend it to the Senators from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. We have heard a great deal here about the deposits in savings-banks, and in regard to that point I want to read the report of this bureau in 1873:

In further confirmation of the fact of poverty, we quote from the report of the State visiting agent of the board of State charities of Massachusetts.

Then follows a long report, showing the impoverished condition of the working people. Now, says the report of the bureau of statistics of labor:

To aid in the abolition of this condition, savings-banks were established. How far they represent the true condition of labor can be best understood by examination of our statistics. The people have not had the ability, nor the opportunity, nor the inclination to save much. Those who saved are not always the best cultured, nor the most intelligent, nor the best paid, best housed, or best clad. These do not save as a rule. Upon this point we are sustained by the bank commissioner of this State, whose testimony we have quoted in another part of the report. People save money by stinting their households, and this in matters of education, health, and culture.

To this mass of testimony of wages, earnings, and savings, or inability to save, we have added this year a table of returns from the assessors of 295 towns in the Commonwealth, showing that the total number of resident tax-payers in those towns was 212,000, of whom 87,000 paid only a poll-tax, 106,880 persons paid a tax under $50, and that five-sixths of the tax-payers own one-fifth of the total amount of real and personal estate in those towns.

As a rule, those wage-laborers who own real estate would not be likely to pay over $25 taxes. Of this latter class there are 40,000 tax-payers. It must also be borne in mind that, as a rule, this property is more or less mortgaged. And if it is claimed that the tax does not represent the full value of the property, it can be said to represent, at least, the full value of the property not mortgaged.

* * * * * * *

It is well known that the smaller deposits are more frequent than the larger ones. Perhaps the most frequent are those between $5 and $25, the less frequent being those over $300. It would take five deposits per year, of those who deposit at one time between $5 and $25, to reach the amount deposited by those depositors who deposit in the year the average under $300—that is, the average deposit between $5 and $25 is $15.25; five deposits in the year would amount to $76.25. The average amount of deposit in the year under $300 is $77.36. Many persons are supposed to deposit something from their weekly earnings; these would be of the class under $5. Of course, in many weeks no deposits are made by the same person.

* * * * * * *

The mass of testimony we have presented in this and the preceding report, consisting as it does of extracts from the reports of the bank commissioners from 1851 to 1870, from returns of 125 banks, and from the inaugural addresses of Governor Claflin, as well as the almost universal testimony of intelligent workingmen, sustains us in our claim that the fact of large sums of money in our savings institutions is not an index of the prosperity of the working classes.

Members of the last Legislature, who voted against the bureau, have stated that they know our deductions to be true. We could fill the space of this report with testimony substantiating every point we have claimed. But such testimony is not needed. We take the testimony and returns of the savings-bank officers themselves, and from their statements and figures have proved the utter fallacy of the savings-bank theory, and establish the fact, beyond contradiction, that nearly half, at least, of the amount of deposits is held by those who can deposit $573 at one time; a sum that wage-laborers can not save from the earnings of a single year, much less deposit at a single deposit; and the exceptions to which we have referred only prove the rule.

Reference was made, in the hearing before the bank committee, to an investigation made of the banks in the year 1871.

I will not undertake to read all of this report, but I make extracts from it. The deductions of the board are as follows:

From these figures it appears that in 1867 one-eighteenth of the whole number of deposits amounted to one-third of the whole amount deposited.

In 1868 and 1869 one-seventeenth of the whole number of deposits amounted to two-fifths of the whole amount deposited and sixteen-seventeenths to the remaining three-fifths.

In 1870 one-fourteenth of the whole number of deposits amounted to three-sevenths of the whole amount deposited, the remaining four-sevenths being the amount of thirteen-fourteenths.

In 1871 one-fourteenth of the whole number of deposits amounted to nearly one-half of the whole amount deposited.

From 1867 to 1871, inclusive, there has been an increase in the number of deposits of 64 per cent. and an increase of 98 per cent. in the number of deposits of and exceeding $300 at one time.

The facts and figures we have given in this and the preceding reports establish beyond a reasonable doubt—

First. That persons not wage-laborers are depositors to at least one-half of the whole amount deposited.

Second. That, as a rule, the wage-labor deposits average under $50 deposited at one time.

Third. That manufacturers, traders, and lawyers use these banks instead of banks of discount as a place of safety and convenience.

Fourth. That capitalists, persons living upon their income, use these banks to escape taxation and the care necessitated by other investments.

In making these statements we are not making charges against savings-banks. They are not responsible for the inability of the wage-laborer to save, or for the necessity compelling him to withdraw his savings; they are, undoubtedly, as a rule, carefully managed in the matter of security, and deserve the protection and fostering care of the State. The dangers that beset them are many. As security against these dangers, a uniform system of booking should be demanded by the State, small loans should be encouraged or compelled, discounts should be forbidden, and large rates of interest prohibited,

By the United States census it appears that the average number of days of work in the manufacturing and mechanical industries of the State for that year was 280. It is well known that carpenters, bricklayers, etc., can work only during the spring, summer, and fall months, some of even that time being lost from inclement weather and other causes. In the textile fabrics no such loss occurs. In them the stoppage is generally for repairs, breakage, etc., or on account of high or low water. This last is being constantly obviated by the introduction of steam as an auxiliary, even in places where there is water power. In such closely confined employments time is lost, however, from sickness and other causes, it being considered that two and one-half days a month is a fair average for such lost time.

With these average earnings, then, our statements of inability to save or to secure a home, or to acquire a competence, can be easily understood. By our cost-of-living tables, derived almost wholly from the higher classes of working people, it will be seen that the cost of living is in excess of these annual wages. We have attempted to obtain from traders an average percentage of the loss on bills due from the working classes, but have been unable to gain any important statistics upon that point, but enough is known to establish the fact of such loss. Our statements of these facts in the past reports have called forth the remark, "How does it happen that the working people continue to live if in debt?"

The only reply to be given is the fact of the non-payment of the debt, it being a well-known practice that such debtors often change from one creditor to another, or suddenly remove from one place to another, leaving the debt unsettled, and begin again. Lawyers, doctors, landlords, grocers, and traders have reason to know that not only are large numbers of wage-laborers in debt, but that even men of the middle class, salaried persons, even traders themselves, are not free from this incumbrance, the trader having the advantage that by failing he can close up his accounts and start again. How many of this class succeed in business? We have heard it placed below 10 per cent. by the very best authority, in reference even to the higher mercantile class.

Then the report goes on to speak of "the serving of trustee processes," etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator state by whom that report is signed?

Mr. VEST. It is an official document which I obtained from the Congressional Library. All I know about this book is that it purports to be the "Fourth Annual Report of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor, embracing the account of its operations and increase from March 1, 1872, to March 1, 1873, printed by order of the Legislature of Massachusetts."

Mr. ALDRICH. Who was the commissioner of labor?

Mr. VEST. I really did not examine, for I took no interest in the personnel of the business. The book is printed by authority of the Legislature and is an official document. If they are floor-walkers or politicians, I do not know it. I know that this is the official statement of the bureau.

From the report for 1871 of the same bureau I read as follows:

Did you ever know an instance of a workman (other than an overseer) working at ordinary day wages, or at piece-work pay, who acquired a competence upon which he could live without work; and, if yes, in how many years did he acquire such competence?

Upon that question this bureau makes the following statement:

Remarks.—This question has been answered by all except five, and almost invariably in the negative. A large number declare that it is impossible. A few have cited instances of men who have accumulated what they deem a competence, which we here give. A woolen-spinner says: "I never knew such a person. I know a man, however, who has acquired $1,200, but has done it by thrift and injustice to his own stomach. It has taken him twelve years to accumulate that sum, and he has denied himself and family many things which I consider the necessaries of life, such as sugar, butter, butcher's meat, eggs, etc. I don't call that living. There are some people who can live on what others would starve. I believe in doing justice to the stomach; it is of the utmost importance, clothing being only of secondary importance. There are men working for this company, in the finishing department, who get but a few cents over a dollar per day. How they manage to get along I can not imagine. There are many women working in the card-room for 65 cents a day."

A dress-tender says: "I never knew a man who acquired a competence by working in the mills."

A boot-maker says: "I do not think there is such a case on record. I would go a great way to see such a man and get a full account of how he did it."

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the Senator reading from now?

Mr. VEST. I am reading from a speech of Mr. Read, of Kentucky, in 1872, and these are extracts from the report of that same bureau of labor of Massachusetts.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say that that report was written by Mr. George E. McNeil, who is also a professional agitator.

Mr. VEST. Well, they are thick. I presume that is claimed to be true of any man who belongs to any of these organizations who is not a Republican politician.

Have you ever known instances wherein an ordinary operative earned a competence or was enabled to retire at fifty years of age on moneys earned as a wage-laborer? If yes, what percentage would the number of employés so earning be of the whole number of your employés?

The report says:

The answers to these questions and the extracts show better than any theorizing the actual condition of the wage-laborer, the results of the system of wages, and that the instances of even small competences are the very rare exceptions to a general rule.

This question was submitted to the operatives:

Have your present earnings and present cost of living each increased in the same proportion to what they were before the late war, or has the cost of living increased in a greater ratio?

The report says:

The answers to this question, without exception, agree with the statement of Commissioner Wells, that wages have not increased in the ratio of the increased cost of living.

I suppose that Commissioner Wells is another agitator.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me, I suppose he refers to David A. Wells.

Mr. VEST. It just says Commissioner Wells.

Mr. ALDRICH. He was at that time Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. VEST. He is an agitator, of course, because he is opposed to a protective tariff.

Mr. ALDRICH. But he was not a Republican agitator so far as we are aware.

Mr. VEST. He was a Republican, I believe, at one time. I know he has written an unanswerable work on American shipping that I have heard a good many Senators try to answer on this floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. Was that one of his earlier or later works, does the Senator know?

Mr. VEST. I do not know that he ever prepared more than one such work, and that was "The American Merchant Marine."

Mr. ALDRICH. He has written on both sides of the subject at various times, and I did not know to which the Senator referred.

Mr. VEST. I have never read more than one statement from Mr. Wells, and that is his "American Merchant Marine," which is an unanswerable argument, showing the destruction of the merchant marine in this country by the protective-tariff system.

This question was put:

What proportion of the working people, so far as you know, are in debt? What in your knowledge or judgment were the causes of such debts?

The report of the bureau says:

These questions were quite fully answered, and they indicate that a very large percentage of wage-laborers are in debt. The causes generally assigned are insufficient remuneration, and the habits that spring out of such insufficiency, habits tending to waste and not to thrift.

A boot-crimper says:

The working people are in the hands of their employers by way of mortgages, etc., caused by not having pay enough for labor. I have known temperate men in actual distress, owing to large families, to such an extent as to require aid from the societies to which they belonged.

Then come statements from a nail-maker, a female weaver, and a dress-maker, and so on.

The same report gives the average dividends of the cotton mills: Chicopee Mills, dividends 26¼ per cent.; capital, $420,000; value of stock, $325 on par of $100. Merrimac Mills, 15½ per cent. Middlesex Mills, 22½ per cent. Naumkeag Mills, dividend 19⅝ per cent. Pacific Mills, dividend 21¼ per cent. Salisbury Mills, dividend 22½ per cent.

Mr. President, a plain unsophisticated Western countryman must be excused if he doubts these highly-colored pictures of domestic affluence among the operatives in Massachusetts. I must confess that whilst I sympathize with these operatives, my chief objection to a high protective tariff is the enormous amount which it makes my people in the West pay, the real producers of this country, in order to increase the profits of the manufacturing capitalists of New England. I have no objection to a reasonable profit, but I do object to these enormous profits and this persistent attempt year after year to increase the tariff, and under the miserable subterfuge, for it is nothing else, with all respect to the gentlemen who make it, that the tariff duty does not come out of the consumer, but that it is gate-money paid by the importer, and that it does not affect the price of the commodity to the man who uses it.

That is all I desire to say now upon the subject.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the tariff, but I find it so connected with the question of money that I am unable to separate them. Therefore I ask the indulgence of the Senate to consider them in connection with each other.

"A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but money answereth all things." It is now more than three thousand years since this truth was declared by the great lawgiver in Israel. Napoleon was once asked, "What are the three most essential requisites in war?" and replied, "The first is money; the second is money; and the third is money." What is true of war is true of every undertaking or enterprise. The power of money is not confined to the acquisition of property and services, but it draws after it rank, station, and badges of nobility. All things are estimated in money. Countless millions toil for it; commodities are manufactured and produced to secure it; trade and commerce are conducted to obtain it; the hidden mysteries of nature are explored for inventions and discoveries to be rewarded in money. The acquisition of money is the ruling motive for industry and progress. Nothing is wealth that can not be exchanged for money. If money is not wealth, it is better than wealth; it commands all things.

BRIEF SKETCH OF EARLY HISTORY OF MONEY.

Some medium of exchange has always existed in every tribe, community, or nation of which we have any knowledge. Many things have been used at different times as money. It is impossible to determine what was first used. The American Indians used wampum, the ancient Greeks cattle, the Carthaginians stamped leather, the Abyssinians salt, the Icelanders codfish, the Anglo-Saxons used living money—slaves and oxen—in payment of debts; the Chinese the bark of the mulberry tree stamped by the sovereign.

Silver and gold have from a very early period been regarded as best adapted for use as money. For many centuries they have been designated "the precious metals" and employed as legal tenders and measures of value. During all the period recorded in the Bible silver is constantly referred to as money. Abraham, two thousand years before the Christian era, "was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold." On the death of his wife he purchased a burying-place with "four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant." Joseph, his great grandson, was sold by his brethren into Egyptian slavery for twenty pieces of silver, and when he became minister of the king his brothers brought silver in their sacks' mouths to purchase corn. When making himself known to his brethren Joseph presented to his younger brother three hundred pieces of silver. After the Israelites returned to the promised land they used silver as money, which practice has continued in that country until the present day.

There is no record in the Bible of the use of gold as money, although it was extensively mined. The gold fields of Havilah are referred to in the second chapter of Genesis, and it is declared that "the gold of that land is good." Gold was used for ornaments of the person, like the onyx, sapphires, crystals, pearls, rubies, and other jewels, and also for the decoration of altars, temples, and palaces. King Solomon acquired it in great quantities from the land of Ophir, and used it with magnificent liberality in the construction of his temple in Jerusalem.

Silver for many centuries passed current by weight before the practice of coining was adopted. Herodotus tells us that the Lydians coined gold and silver nine hundred years before the commencement of the Christian era, and that Greece proper commenced coining some time in the eighth century before Christ. The Romans first coined silver 281 B. C., and gold 207 B. C.

Since that time both gold and silver coin have passed as legal-tender money in all civilized countries until a very recent period, but barbarous and semi-civilized people have from time to time used other material for money, and some of them do so at the present day. England ceased to coin silver as legal-tender money in 1815. Holland during most of her history used the single silver standard. Belgium adopted the silver standard in 1857 and restored the double standard in 1861. Austria and Germany suspended the coinage of gold in 1857, and Germany restored it in 1871, and at the same time demonetized silver by excluding it from her mints. The United States omitted the silver dollar from its list of coins in 1873. The demonetization of silver by Germany and the United States induced France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, and other European countries to first limit the coinage of that metal and afterwards to cease to coin legal-tender silver.

At the end of the year 1876 every mint in Europe was closed against silver and most disastrous results followed, as I shall hereafter show. In 1878 Congress provided by law for the purchase and coinage of not less than two nor more than four million dollars' worth of silver bullion per month, and although the Secretary of the Treasury has never purchased in excess of the minimum, about $300,000,000 of silver and silver certificates are now in circulation, without which this would be an era of universal bankruptcy. But the United States does not, as heretofore, recognize silver bullion as a money metal interchangeable for coin at its mints at a fixed ratio, but treats it as a commodity to be purchased at the lowest market price.

THE EXTENT TO WHICH GOLD AND SILVER ARE NOW USED AS MONEY.

Gold is the standard measure of legal-tender money in Europe, the United States, Australia, and Canada, with an aggregate population of about 400,000,000.

Asia, the islands of the Pacific, Mexico, and South America, with an aggregate population of not less than 800,000,000, adhere to silver, and from the habits of the people and the state of civilization in those countries they must continue to do so for an indefinite period. Africa, with an estimated population of 268,000,000, still uses in many sections a variety of trinkets as money; in other places silver, but very little gold coin is in circulation. In the progress of civilization in that country silver must be the principal money in use. Gold is too valuable to be used by the barbarous and semi-barbarous people of the dark continent. If the United States, with Europe, adheres to the gold standard less than one-third of the inhabitants of the earth will recognize gold as the measure of value, while two-thirds will use only silver.

No inconvenience resulted from the use of gold in some countries and silver in others as long as the double standard was maintained in the United States and Europe. The fixed ratio between the two metals prevented material fluctuation in their relative value and preserved uniformity of exchange throughout the world. The value of each metal was easily estimated in the other. Great obstructions to commerce now exist between Europe and America and the balance of the world by reason of the constant fluctuations in the relative value of the two metals. In all commercial contracts between countries having the gold standard and those having the silver standard this fluctuation is taken into consideration, and one party or the other must necessarily suffer a loss.

If the United States ever secures a valuable foreign market for its manufactured commodities it must be in Mexico, South America, Asia, or the islands of the Pacific, where the silver standard prevails. When the United States withdraws from the gold-standard combination and unites with the silver-standard countries, less than one-fourth of the inhabitants of the world will have the gold standard. Europe must then remonetize silver or the United States will have superior advantages in her commercial intercourse with those countries having the silver standard.

One of the principal objections to the use of paper money is that it has no fixed commercial value in foreign countries and can not in any sense be a money of universal use. The same is true to a certain extent of gold. It never can be universal money. It may have a commodity value in every part of the world, but two-thirds of the inhabitants of the globe will continue to use the white metal as money.

The only practicable way to again attain a common measure of value throughout the world is to return to the double standard. By such action the relative value of the two metals would be fixed, and by the use of silver as well as gold the volume of the circulating medium would be largely increased. Recent discoveries of gold and silver mines and improved methods of mining give reasonable assurance of a sufficient supply, if both metals are used as money, to increase the volume of currency to correspond with the increase of population and the necessity for the use of money. No such prospect was ever before presented to man. In all previous ages the want of means of travel and transportation and the crude methods of mining limited, with few exceptions, the supply of the precious metals to less than the necessities of the people required. Every country which has had the good fortune to be an exception to the general money famine of the world has exhibited wonderful progress in civilization and a marvelous increase in the enjoyment of the comforts and luxuries of life.

HOW MONEY AFFECTS CIVILIZATION.

The researches of Jacob and other historians into the production of the precious metals disclose the fact that the Israelites, at the zenith of their glory, were abundantly supplied with gold and silver; that their prosperous neighbors, the Phœnicians, gathered the precious metals from India, Africa, Arabia, Spain, and the islands of the Mediterranean; that Egypt, at the time of the Pharaohs, possessed large accumulations of gold and silver from the mines of Nubia. At this time the inhabitants of Greece and Rome were semi-barbarians, but in the eighth century before Christ the Greeks commenced to accumulate and coin money.

From that time forward the circulating medium increased with the development of civilization. When architecture, sculpture, painting, and literature reached their greatest perfection in that country Greece was abundantly supplied with gold and silver coin. The history of the rise of the Roman Empire is a history of conquest and accumulation of gold and silver. All the mines of these metals then known to exist were gradually turned over to the dominion of Rome by the conquest of Carthage, Spain, Germany, Greece, Western Asia, and Egypt, and all accumulations of the precious metals which could be found in those countries were taken and appropriated by the Romans.

At the time of Augustus the mineral wealth of the world was concentrated in his dominion. The nations of ancient times decayed and their civilization was destroyed when their gold and silver disappeared. The decay and ruin of the Roman Empire followed or kept pace with the loss of her stores of precious metals. Jacob estimates the coined money of the empire at the time of Augustus at about eighteen hundred millions. The value of the accumulations of gold and silver used as ornaments or uncoined can not be ascertained, but it was probably several hundred millions.

Following the reign of Augustus internal dissensions, domestic and foreign wars, abandonment of mining, and wear and loss of gold and silver occasioned a rapid decrease of the stock of precious metals, and during eight hundred years after his reign Jacob estimates that the gold and silver money of the countries composing the Roman Empire was reduced to about one hundred and sixty millions. In the seven centuries between 800 and 1500 very little mining was prosecuted. Jacob tells us that—

> The art of separating the precious metals from the ores and from the inferior metals with which they were mingled had been lost since the time of the Roman operations and were recovered by the same slow and gradual steps by which the ancients had proceeded.

This was a period of extreme poverty, feudal slavery, and barbarism. There was no power in the people to resist oppression, for they had no money.

The want of money extracts the courage and ambition from both individuals and nations. The constant efforts of nations to acquire money by conquest and the devices to provide money for defense show that the necessity for money to national existence has been universally recognized. When a supply of the precious metals has been exhausted it has been customary, especially in times of war, to substitute paper or some other device for money. These experiments have been more or less successful, depending upon the stability of the government resorting to them and the safeguards limiting the amount of the improvised money.

Many times in the history of each of the great powers of Europe the issue of paper money was necessary to maintain national existence. By this means, it is claimed by many, the independence of the United States was achieved in the war of the Revolution and the union of the States preserved in the war of the Rebellion. However that may be, it must be conceded that a nation without money and without credit is destitute of the means of securing the comforts and luxuries of peace and is defenseless in war. We witness in daily life the marvelous effects of money upon the character of individuals. The haughty capitalist becomes a cringing and cowardly suppliant by the loss of his money, while the beggar who inherits a fortune is transformed into an aggressive and domineering aristocrat. Two hundred dollars in the pocket of a tramp will make him walk erect and assert his manhood.

Fifteen hundred years of contraction by the wear and loss of the precious metals between the reign of Augustus and the discovery of America nearly extinguished the civilization of the ancients and reduced the people of Europe to feudal slavery.

The discovery of gold and silver in Mexico and South America revived mining for the precious metals in the Old World as well as the New. The despairing serfs and slaves of poverty-stricken Europe were inspired with courage, enterprise, manhood, and independence by the gold and silver produced by the revival of mining. A new civilization was created which soon rivaled, and now surpasses, the glory of antiquity.

For more than three hundred and fifty years the flow of the precious metals from the New World has been added to the product of the mines of the Old, and gradually, but constantly, distributed among the people. Fluctuations in production have at times occasioned scarcity of money; but the want of money and the distress caused thereby, since the discovery of America, have mainly resulted from unwise legislation and combinations and conspiracies among the rich to deprive the people of their just share of the rewards of labor and enterprise.

Sir Archibald Alison, in his old age, after having contributed eight large volumes to the discussion of the new civilization in Europe which resulted from the discovery of gold in America, significantly remarked that—

This history has been written with little purpose if it is not apparent that in an ancient, opulent, and commercial nation—

the monetary measures which the holders of realized wealth, for their own sake, are prompted to pursue, are the source of such unbounded industrial distress and frequent recurrence of monetary and commercial crises as perhaps more than any other cause impels the industrious part of the nation into distant lands.

We would not complain of the monetary measures of Europe which banished millions of its best population to America if the holders of realized wealth in money, bonds, and securities in Europe and America were not now engaged in a conspiracy to impoverish and oppress the people of this country by robbing them of the glorious opportunity afforded for wealth and prosperity by the discovery and development of the gold and silver mines of our own favored land.

Money famines, occasioned by failure in the production of the precious metals, have been rare since the discovery of gold and silver in the New World. The most disastrous and prolonged interruption in mining which has occurred in the last three hundred and fifty years happened in the present century. In speaking of the reduced production of gold and silver from the beginning of the year 1810 to the end of the year 1829, occasioned by the Spanish-American wars, Jacob says:

We are now arrived at a period when a great and sudden change took place in the production of the mines of gold and silver. After a space of more than three centuries, during the whole of which there had been a constant increase of the quantities obtained, and each succeeding decennial period yielding a larger portion than the similar number of years that preceded it, the whole of the mines in every part of the western continent declined greatly in their produce; and though they have in some measure been restored, it has been by slow degrees, and they are yet very far from having the copious produce which they yielded before their general abruption from European government.

Jacob estimates the average annual production of gold and silver in the world during the period above referred to as not exceeding $25,000,000. There was some increase of production of the precious metals between 1830 and 1850 from the mines of Russia. This did not raise the average annual production from 1809 to 1850, exclusive of the gold produced in California, above $40,000,000. It has been contended that this supply did not exceed wear, loss, and consumption in the arts. At all events the addition to the stock of coin on hand during the forty years preceding 1850 was wholly inadequate to meet the demands of an increasing population. Prices declined until they reached a lower point in 1850 than at any time within the previous century.

In 1810, when the effects of a failing supply of gold and silver were first felt, the tide of prosperity was at full flow, but the power that impelled it was withdrawn. Reaction, stagnation, and depression followed the inadequate supply of money in every part of the civilized world. The rich and virgin lands of the United States mitigated but did not exempt the people from the evils of stagnation and depression.

The compromise tariff of 1833, which scaled down the duties on imports from year to year to reach a horizontal ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. in 1843, occasioned a glut of foreign commodities, arrested home manufactures, and sent the meager supply of coin in the United States to Europe in payment of foreign imports. Universal bankruptcy in 1837 was the necessary consequence of the decline in the production of the precious metals and the unwise legislation of Congress which forced the people to purchase the necessaries of life in the Old World, which ought to have been produced at home.

The protective tariff of 1842, by enabling the people to do their own work and supply themselves with the necessaries of life, checked the outflow of the precious metals and partially relieved the distress which resulted from the scarcity of money. Strange as it appears, in 1846 another reduction was made in the duty on imports in utter disregard of the lesson of the disaster of 1837. Two unanticipated events happened which counteracted for a time the injurious consequences of this legislation—famine in Ireland and short crops in England and other parts of Europe in 1847, and the discovery of gold in California in 1848. Imports of merchandise in 1847 increased $6,000,000 over 1846, but our exports increased over $48,000,000 during the same year. This increase of exports consisted chiefly of breadstuffs, the amount of breadstuffs exported in 1847 being $37,000,000 more than was exported in the previous year.

Famine reversed the trade relations between the United States and Europe from an adverse balance of $9,000,000 in 1846 to a balance in our favor of $34,000,000 in 1847. Our people were relieved from the necessity of sending the precious metals abroad to pay for manufactures, and Europe was compelled to send to this country in that year over $22,000,000 of gold and silver to buy food. The advocates of free trade attributed the beneficial results of this extraordinary market in Europe for our breadstuffs to the tariff of 1846 and ignored the fact that the increase of importations resulting from the reduction of duties would have required the export of our gold and silver if the failure of crops in Europe had not produced an extraordinary demand for food. The demand for breadstuffs in Europe in 1848 fell off by reason of better crops, and the legitimate consequences of the reduced tariff of 1846 were shown in an adverse balance of trade in merchandise of over $10,000,000.

Gold came from California at this critical juncture to rescue the United States from many of the evils which must have resulted from the purchase of foreign commodities with our current coin. This discovery, followed by a like discovery in Australia in 1852, not only furnished the United States with money to buy foreign products, but infused new life into industry, progress, and development throughout the world. It came at a time when civilization was at a standstill and the wheels of progress were clogged for want of money. A new era of mining was inaugurated. The aggregate product of gold and silver from the mines of the world has gradually increased from 1850 until the present time, the average annual product being nearly $200,000,000, which is five times greater than the average annual production in the preceding forty years. The increase of wealth, civilization, and progress fully kept pace with the increase in the production of the precious metals. Since 1875 the annual production of the two metals has continued to increase.

WHY MONEY IS DEAR AND PROPERTY CHEAP.

But the financial legislation in Europe and the United States, secured by the holders of accumulated wealth in money and securities, has diminished the supply of money during the last fourteen years fully one-half by the demonetization of silver. The production of gold and silver since 1875 has been about equal, but silver has been excluded from the mints and treated as a commodity. The progress of the world is again checked. Stagnation and depression have returned. Industry and enterprise are languishing, not by reason of failure of the mines, but by the measures adopted by the holders of fixed capital to enhance the value of the money and securities they hold by contracting the circulating medium of the world.

The volume of money now in the United States is altogether inadequate to the necessities of the people. It is at least one-third less per capita than it was in 1865. I employed a learned accountant last spring to examine the reports of the Treasury Department for the purpose of determining whether the amount of money in the United States of all kinds had been increased or diminished since 1865, and after several months of careful examination he reported to me that the amount of circulation outside of the Treasury on June 30, 1865, was $1,112,044,114; and at the time of making the computation (May 1, 1888) there was in circulation among the people, exclusive of the amount locked up in the Treasury, only $1,071,653,057, a decrease of $40,391,057, and a decrease per capita from $46.37 in 1865 to $17.29 in 1888. Other accountants might arrive at different results. There is nothing positive in the estimates of the Treasury Department; but it is immaterial whether Dr. Michels, who made the computation for me, was right or wrong. The condition of the money market corroborates his report so far as to establish the fact that money is scarce and dear. The price of commodities also furnishes abundant evidence tending to the same conclusion.

From 1850 to 1875, while the world enjoyed the benefits of the product of both gold and silver, yielding annually nearly $200,000,000, prices rose about 33⅓ per cent. Since one-half of the world's product of gold and silver has been cut off by the demonetization of silver, prices have fallen in the brief period of fourteen years to a lower point than they reached in 1850. Volumes of testimony have been recently taken by the royal commission on gold and silver in England to determine the cause of this alarming decline in the general range of prices of commodities, and although the gold-standard contractionists, representing the bondholding interest of the principal creditor nation of the world, labored hard to find other reasons than the demonetization of silver for the decline of prices, the whole testimony establishes beyond controversy that the action of Germany, the Latin Union, and the United States in excluding silver from their mints was the principal cause of the decline. There was no difference of opinion among the commission in summing up the testimony as to the cause of the fall in the gold price of silver. On page 76 of their final report they say:

We have all of us come to the conclusion that the dissolution of the tie between silver and gold created by the bimetallic system of France and the Latin Union distinguishes the period subsequent to 1873 from former times, and has left other causes of demand for and supply of gold and silver free to act.

So long as the ratio between gold and silver remained approximately stable the two metals might practically be considered one; and the relations of exchange between a country with a gold standard, such as England, and a country with a silver standard, such as India, did not differ in any essential particular from the relations of exchange between two countries with a gold standard, such as England and the United States, or England and Australia. A quasi par of exchange was established between the sovereign and the rupee, which, though not absolute, as in the case of coins of the same metal, fluctuated within narrow limits. * * *

Now, on the assumption that we are right in our view of the operation of the bimetallic tie, the relations of England and India in regard to exchange were, during the operation of that tie, substantially the same as those of England and the United States, or of England and Australia.

LOW RATE OF INTEREST MEANS DEAR MONEY.

The fact that United States 4 per cent. bonds, having eighteen years to run, are selling in the market at 28½ per cent. premium establishes beyond controversy that money is scarce and dear. The Secretary of the Treasury reports the purchase of $101,705,500 of bonds since April last at prices which saved to the Government less than 2 per cent. annually between the date of purchase and the maturity of the bonds. The Secretary bought these bonds at the market price, which proves that the rate of interest in the United States for a long term on perfect security is less than 2 per cent. Superficial thinkers have suggested that a low rate of interest indicated abundance of money, but a moment's reflection will satisfy any man of sense that a low rate of interest indicates depression of business, want of security, and few responsible borrowers. To borrow money and go in debt is analogous to a "short" sale of stock. It is an agreement to deliver at a future day what the promisor does not possess at the date of the contract. A wise operator will never sell stock "short" unless he is confident it will decline in price at the date of delivery. In like manner a prudent business man will decline to borrow money to invest in property when money is growing dearer and property cheaper.

Enterprising business men who use money in the development of the resources of the country are cautious and will not borrow money at any rate of interest to invest in property while prices are declining, as they have been for the last fourteen years. The royal commission of England investigated this question of interest and came to the conclusion that a low rate of interest indicated a scarcity of money. They said (page 19):

The rate of interest on permanent investments is also declining for reasons, it is urged, similar to those which have been described above as affecting the rate of discount. When gold is scarce and commercial activity is checked by the resulting fall of prices, the demand for permanent investments increases and the price of such securities rises. Owing either to the actual or the apprehended scarcity of gold there is a tendency to invest in securities bearing a fixed interest payable in gold, which raises their price and reduces the net return obtainable from them.

Occasional fluctuations in prices resulting from an increased production of a particular article have very little significance as indicating the supply of money, but a general decline of prices for a period of fourteen years was never known to occur when there was an inadequate supply of money. When business is active and the price of commodities is advancing, furnishing a reasonable prospect of profitable investments, men of enterprise borrow money and pay a fair rate of interest with firm confidence that they can return the money with interest and make a profit for themselves. But in times of stagnation and depression safe borrowers are few. Money-lenders are then forced to seek investments in Government bonds or let their money lie idle. The obscure, tangled, and uncertain reports as to an increasing volume of the circulating medium have no tendency to satisfy the public that money is plenty when prices are falling, business stagnant, and prudent men preparing for a crisis.

COIN TOO SCARCE TO BUY FOREIGN GOODS.

A proposition to reduce the tariff at this time, of all others, is most unreasonable. The balance of trade is now against the United States. The immediate effect of a reduction of duties would be more importations and more money sent abroad to pay for them. It would be the bitter experiences of 1837 and 1857 over again on a larger scale. It is unsafe to anticipate an immediate famine in Europe, as in 1847, to increase our exports, and an increase of our exports without famine, war, or some other great calamity in the Old World is improbable. England will only buy of us such breadstuffs as she can not produce at home or obtain from India with cheap silver. Her vast manufacturing establishments, which have a permanent market for their products among more than two hundred and fifty millions of people, from which all other nations are practically excluded, will supply her people at home at a price which will exclude us and all other nations.

The policy of Great Britain of breaking up the manufacturing establishments of other countries by the surplus of her vast establishments has forced every nation of continental Europe to establish high protective tariffs to enable them to manufacture at home. Those tariffs exclude our products as well as those of Great Britain. I have examined with care and diligence the tariffs of other nations in connection with their efforts to force foreign trade by low prices, financial accommodations, and subsidized steam-ships, and it is impossible for me to indicate a country to which any considerable increase of our exports can be sent.

There is no doubt that free and reciprocal intercourse between the United States, Mexico, and South America would be advantageous to all the countries concerned, but the tariffs of those countries are such as practically to exclude our products, and until those tariffs are modified by legislation or treaty it would be folly, and worse than folly, to reduce our tariff, destroy the market for the manufactures already established, prevent the investment in new establishments, and waste our circulating medium in the purchase of foreign commodities.

The Government of the United States has no right to grant privileges or bounties to foreigners at the expense of our people without securing equal benefits in return. To surrender our home market to all the world without reciprocity anywhere will not be tolerated by the people. Trade with foreign countries is business to be engaged in to make money, and the question to be determined in prescribing the terms and conditions upon which such business shall be conducted is whether the people of the United States will make or lose money by the venture. If any country will exchange commodities with us on equal and fair terms and pay us as much cash as we pay it the question of reciprocal free trade with such country is then worthy of consideration. But no such case is presented. No foreign country is proposing to enter into any trade arrangement with us unless it can obtain an undue advantage.

England, which is most clamorous for free access to our markets, does not propose to pay us cash, but to send us her surplus manufactures, which overflow from her vast establishments, maintained by a permanent market among more than two hundred and fifty million people in countries where our products are denied access. In free trade with England the contest would be for our markets and none other, and we would be similarly situated to an infant telegraph company attempting to compete with the Western Union. The former would struggle against bankruptcy while the latter would do business at a loss on competing lines and continue to make dividends from its lines where no competition existed. We will not enter into such an arrangement with England and sacrifice our manufactures and allow her to rob us of our coin.

The argument that free trade will make the necessaries of life cheaper would be sound if such necessaries would remain cheaper and the people would have plenty of money to pay for them. Such would not be the case. England would follow the example of the Western Union, and when she had destroyed our manufactures and removed competition she would put up prices, as she always does where she has a monopoly. What benefit could our people derive from cheap foreign products without money to buy them, which would soon be the case if we should send our money abroad to pay foreign workmen and leave our people without employment? Any citizen of the United States, or any person who has declared his intention to become such, is at liberty to leave and go where commodities produced by slave labor are cheaper than the free labor of this country can provide them, and he should do so at once if he is unwilling to pay the necessary cost of production by free labor in the United States.

It seems to me that it is the part of wisdom and statesmanship to remonetize silver and increase our stock of the precious metals, do our own work and keep our money at home by protecting our manufacturing industries.

WHY SILVER SHOULD BE REMONETIZED.

What objection can there be to the remonetization of silver? Why was silver demonetized? It had been used as money for more than four thousand years and was universally considered previous to 1873 better suited for that purpose than gold, and more than two-thirds of mankind are still of the same opinion. If the supply of gold and silver had been exhausted and a necessity had arisen to substitute some other material for money, a good reason for doing so would have existed.

If in the ninth century, when society was practically dissolved for want of money, it had been possible to have substituted some other medium of exchange for gold and silver, civilization might have been revived before the discovery of the mines of the New World; or if, in 1830, when progress was paralyzed by a money famine, the world could have agreed upon a universal currency, there might have been some reason for discarding metallic money altogether. But who could have anticipated that in 1873, when the world was in the full tide of prosperity from an abundant supply of gold and silver, and all civilized nations were realizing more of the comforts and luxuries of life than the fondest dreams of philanthropists had ever contemplated, that any combination of men would conspire with a view of enhancing their own fortunes to rob the world of the only agency by which that prosperity could be continued? Strange as it may appear, so it was.

As soon as prosperity became universal by the flow of gold from California and Australia, Chevalier and others advocated the demonetization of that metal for the purpose of limiting the supply to silver alone, and thereby enhance the value of bonds and other obligations for the payment of money. Germany, Austria, Belgium, and other countries engaged in that conspiracy and demonetized gold.

Failing in that, in 1871 Germany led the scheme to demonetize silver, for the avowed purpose of enhancing the value of securities. The United States and the countries of the Latin Union followed blindfold the lead of the bondholding conspirators. Before the world knew what was proposed the work was accomplished. The yield of the mines for the purposes of money was reduced one-half, and the glorious prospect of an adequate supply of money for many future generations was cut off.

The United States was the most stupid victim lured into the conspiracy. She was at the time most emphatically a debtor nation. She owed more than $2,000,000,000, and produced more silver than all the rest of the world combined.

Nearly all the States and municipal corporations in the Union were also large borrowers of money. Enterprising citizens had borrowed vast sums of money to build railroads and develop the resources of the country. All these debts were payable by the terms of the contracts by which they were created in either gold or silver. The right to pay them in silver was surrendered without consideration. Many hundred millions were extorted from the people to pay obligations in gold which, of right, should have been paid in silver. This manipulation of currency has done more to make the rich richer and the poor poorer than all other causes combined. The end is not yet. The prices of wheat, cotton, and all the products of labor in this country are fast being reduced below the cost of production. Still the holders of accumulated capital resist every measure of relief and demand the last pound of flesh.

We are coolly informed by the representatives of the gold-standard contractionists that the United States is powerless to mitigate or redress the great wrong without the consent of the conspirators who demonetized silver, and who are constantly devising measures to transfer the wealth of the many to the few and monopolize the fruits of labor and enterprise. They assert with the arrogance of wealth that an agreement with the leading powers of Europe must be obtained before the United States can resume the free use of silver as money and provide the people of this country with a constant and sufficient supply of that circulating medium which has been regarded as best suited for use as money through all ages since man emerged from barbarism. They know full well that Europe is controlled by an aristocracy of accumulated capital, and that the people have no voice in determining what financial schemes shall be devised and carried into execution for their oppression, and assume from the success of their financial measures in this country for the last twenty years that the people of the United States have no more knowledge of their rights or capacity to protect them than the people of the Old World.

Subsidized newspapers and hired political economists have done much to keep the people ignorant of the wrongs they suffer, but outside of the money centers in this country, where free speech does not impair financial standing and endanger success in business, the people are fast being educated on the money question, and will soon assert their rights in the most effective manner.

The great mass of the people view with alarm and indignation the power exercised by the money-changers of New York over the Treasury Department. The number of clerks, servants, and agents of the gold-standard contractionists and money manipulators of New York who have held and now hold high places in that Department, and the brazen effrontery with which they use the funds of the Government for their favorites without interest has shocked the moral sense of the nation, and tame submission to Wall street rule is at an end. The people of the United States will be represented in the great financial department of the Government or they will know the reason why. President Cleveland has already received some slight intimation of the views of the people with regard to the management of the Treasury Department.

An examination of the evidence taken before the English royal commission on gold and silver and the report of that commission will furnish much valuable information for consideration in this country. Although the commission was equally divided as to the advisability of inviting the United States, Germany, and the countries forming the Latin Union to join in consultation with Great Britain and her colonies to discuss the expediency of fixing a ratio at which the coins of either metal shall be available for the payment of all debts at the option of the debtor, it is morally certain that England will take no action in that direction. The hesitation with which six of the twelve commissioners suggest such a consultation and the many reasons they assign against it show that they are overawed by the holders of accumulated capital and have no courage to pursue the right as they seem to see it, "through a glass darkly." The following extract from their report indicates the power of the influences which will compel the people of England to submit to the single standard and continued contraction:

We need hardly dwell upon the fact that the financial position which this country occupies is a matter of immense importance; that the risk even of interfering with it, or of taking any course which could reasonably be expected to affect it, is not to be lightly encountered; and even those who do not entertain grave apprehensions of a disturbance of existing financial conditions, if we were to depart from monometallism and accept the bimetallic standard, can not dispute the fact that the existence of such apprehensions is not to be treated as a trivial circumstance or one to be lightly regarded.

The danger may be enhanced by the circumstance that the mere fact of one change having been made would lead to the apprehension that others might follow. (Page 87.)

The following, from this timid report of those commissioners, who longingly but doubtfully look towards bimetallism, is the key-note of the situation in Great Britain:

It must be remembered, too, that this country is largely a creditor country of debts payable in gold, and any change which entailed a rise in the price of commodities generally, that is to say, a diminution of the purchasing power of gold, would be to our disadvantage. (Page 90.)

It was impossible for the witnesses before the commission to conceal their contempt for the stupidity of the people of the United States in submitting to the gold standard. The following is an illustration of English opinion with regard to the action of the United States in demonetizing silver. Mr. Daniel Watney, while under examination as a witness, used the following significant language:

I can not suppose that everybody is wise. Just think of the folly of the United States when they were a debtor nation in adopting a gold coinage. They knew nothing about currency matters; they did not know that it was going to increase their debt enormously. (Second report, page 210.)

Justice and self-respect require the United States to ignore the action of Europe with regard to silver and join with the rest of mankind in the establishment of a common ratio between the two metals. The power of the United States to remonetize silver independent of Europe can not be questioned. If she identifies herself with the silver-standard countries three-fourths of the human race will be in accord, and it will be easy to establish between them a uniform medium of exchange, to which Europe must conform or be subjected to great inconvenience in her commercial intercourse with Asia and the western hemisphere. Free coinage of silver, or, what is better, the acceptance by the United States of all gold and silver offered in exchange for coin, or coin certificates redeemable in the coin of either metal is the legislation required.

The objection urged by the gold-standard contractionists to such legislation consists of a suggestion that the United States would be flooded with silver and its financial credit destroyed. There is no foundation for this suggestion. All the silver produced is now used in the arts or converted into money by the silver-standard countries. There is no surplus bullion in Europe or America or elsewhere. There is less than one thousand millions of legal-tender silver money in all Europe. This money is a necessary part of the circulation in the countries where it was coined, and is on a par with gold at the rate of 15½ to 1. If any part of it could be dispensed with without financial distress, which is denied, it could not be purchased and exported to this country without great loss.

It would require an ounce of gold to buy 15½ ounces of this legal-tender silver money, which in this country could not be sold at our mints at par, but would be at a discount of about 3½ per cent. The established ratio in the United States being 16 to 1, the importer of European silver would be required to add one-half an ounce of silver to the 15½ ounces which he bought with an ounce of gold in Europe to obtain in return an ounce of gold in the United States. There is no possible danger of acquiring under any circumstances too much of either gold or silver. No country has ever succeeded in procuring more of either gold or silver than was beneficial and useful.

If from any unknown source more silver should be offered than is necessary to relieve the present stringency of the money market and keep pace with our growing population, it is easy to make room for all that can possibly be produced by retiring a portion of our paper circulation. The paper money of the United States amounts to about $630,000,000, and consists of State-bank notes, demand notes, one and two year notes, compound-interest notes, fractional currency, national-bank notes, United States notes, and certificates of deposit. All this paper rests upon the credit of the United States. Coin certificates representing bullion on deposit would at least be equally safe and satisfactory to the public. It would cost the Government nothing and save wear and loss of the precious metals. The Government would have the benefit of the certificates that were destroyed or lost, instead of the national banks, and would save the interest on bonds securing national-bank currency, which is a gratuitous subsidy to the banks. The power of Wall street to expand and contract the currency for speculative purposes will cease. If a sufficient amount of silver could be obtained to retire all this paper except the greenbacks, our financial system would be simplified and strengthened and a large saving made for the people of the United States who now pay interest on bonds held for security for national-bank notes. Whether any of this money can be retired after a law is passed providing for the exchange of both gold and silver bullion for coin certificates the future will determine.

Now is the opportunity for the United States to accumulate sufficient of the precious metals to reach a metallic basis, dollar for dollar, without loss, and to be placed in accord with more than two-thirds of the people of the world. Such a policy would make this country the clearing-house for all nations, with a currency that would circulate at par among all the people with whom it is profitable for us to trade. Our mines produce fully half of the precious metals annually turned into the channels of commerce, and are as yet comparatively untouched. Improved processes and cheaper transportation will continue this supply through many generations to come. There ought to be no hesitation in the enactment of a law requiring the receipt by the Treasury Department of all gold or silver offered in exchange for coin certificates redeemable in either gold or silver.

Immediately following such legislation an invitation should be extended to all silver-standard countries to unite on a fixed ratio between the two metals. The money of the United States would then circulate at par among three-fourths of the inhabitants of the world, and whether the gold-money contractionists of Europe conformed to our standard or not would be immaterial. It would, perhaps, be better for us if they would not. Negotiations with them should never have been entertained, and should now be abandoned. We must be independent of Europe financially as well as politically if the interests of our own people are to be regarded and our commercial standing as a nation to be respected.

I do not wish to be understood as contending that the mines will during all time to come furnish an adequate supply of money, or that it may not be necessary under some circumstances to increase our circulation beyond the amount of gold and silver it is possible for us to obtain. Civilization is advancing throughout the world. The number of people who require money is increasing beyond computation. When the United States has made use of all the gold and silver attainable, and a deficiency of money should still exist, it would be the duty of the Government to issue more greenbacks or some other non-interest-bearing paper to circulate as money, but it will be time enough to consider that question when silver is restored and the precious metals prove to be insufficient.

Our Government can hardly be preserved if it fails to perform its most important function—to provide the people with an adequate circulating medium, without which civilization must languish or decay.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], during the speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], after the latter had read the testimony of a witness, disposed of that witness by charging that he was a mere "floor-walker," a "labor agitator," a "professional office-seeker," applying other like opprobrious epithets to him. I happened to have had my attention called to the fourth volume of the same testimony from which the Senator from Missouri read, and I remembered the testimony of a citizen of Georgia who I thought perhaps might escape being classed as a "floor-walker" or as a politician. However, he may be a Democrat, and it may be that there is something else so ugly in his record as to make him unworthy of belief. But he made some statements before that committee which I think are worthy of attention, and while they do not relate to the particular item of this bill now under consideration, but to one which will be reached in the course of a few minutes more of the reading of the bill, I think it not improper to call the attention of the Senate to a few statements he made. I refer to the testimony of Mr. William H. Young. I shall read only a few points. He stated among other things, in answer to a question, as follows:

Well, we were burned all up, as I have told you, but in a year after we had a new company organized, and started the Eagle and Phœnix Mill No. 1. In two years we found the demand so great that we doubled our capacity and built No. 2, and in 1876 we began No. 3, and put it in operation in 1879. We now run 46,620 spindles, 1,485 looms. We consume yearly of cotton, in round numbers, 14,500 bales. We employ 1,883 hands, of whom 1,829 are employed inside the mills and 54 outside the mills. All the labor inside the mills is white. All outside the mills is colored, the yard hands, laborers, etc. Of the operatives, 832 are males and 739 are females; 312 are children. The average pay-roll weekly is $8,070. We produce daily, in round numbers, 50,000 yards of cloth, 25,000 pounds of rope, 1,000 pounds of sewing-thread, and 400 pounds of yarns for sale to people in the country for them to weave themselves. Our mill is now mainly a colored mill, making colored goods—not entirely, but mainly so. We do our own dyeing. We do everything connected with it. In explanation of that I may say that many mills of the North send their goods to a dyer and have them dyed, but we have to do all that ourselves. Our capital is $1,250,000, but out of the earnings we have built No. 3, and our really employed capital is about $2,200,000. Our daily average outlay in money for cotton, wool, and other materials and for labor is about $4,500.

I have read this much of the statement of this witness to attempt to establish the fact that he at least is not liable to the charge of being a "floor-walker" or a mere "labor agitator." He seems to belong to what gentlemen on the other side consider a higher class of individuals, the owner of a mill. This ought certainly to give very great weight to the remainder of his testimony, to certain points of which I desire now to call the attention of the Senate. Upon the question of dividends he made this statement:

Q. What have been your annual dividends?
A. They have averaged from 6 to 10 per cent. When we built No. 3 we built it without any extra investment, out of the earnings, and during that period we reduced our dividends to 6 per cent. We never paid less than 6 nor more than 10 per cent. dividends, but we accumulated a surplus fund. Our average earnings since 1870 up to the end of the last year (which is the last for which we have any data) have been 17 per cent.; though for a time we declared a dividend of only 6 per cent., but we now pay 8 per cent.

I shall not detain the Senate by reading at any very great length from the testimony of this witness, but on another point, as it bears directly on this question, I shall read an answer to another question:

Q. Senator PUGH suggests that I ought to ask your views in regard to the tariff, its general effect on the manufacturing business, and its importance with reference to your industry.
A. I am an anti-tariff man dyed in the wool. I never did believe in the tariff, on principle. In the first place I did not believe it was right to make people pay for the business advantages of anybody else. That was the principle. Now, so far as it concerns us, if I were to imitate the English goods and make goods in the style that they make theirs, I could sell those goods in England at a profit. I have had the English prices and samples sent over to me, and I am satisfied that I could make the goods and sell them at the prices named, and pay expenses there and make a good profit—perhaps a better profit than I am making at home on the style that I do make here—these heavy goods. Oh, no, I have no use at all for a tariff.

Yet in the class of goods that this man manufactures, where there has been heretofore a tariff of 3 cents, I believe, per square yard, the committee propose to reduce the tariff only to 2½ cents, and this, too, after this mill-owner had stated upon oath that he had made from 1870 down to the year before this testimony was taken an average of 17 per cent.; that the mill had paid a dividend of from 6 to 10 per cent., and besides that, out of the profits had been built an additional mill; that they were consuming this vast amount of cotton and employing this great number of hands, and they do not want any protection at all. Yet the committee propose to give it to them anyway. I do not know very well how to account for that unless it is done on the principle that seemed to animate a citizen who appeared before the Finance Committee in its recent examination——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator whether he reads that statement which he has just read as being himself satisfied with its conclusions, believing that they are true?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I read the statement, believing that this gentleman believed it was true, for he stated it on oath.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the Senator would hardly do that if he himself disbelieved it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Does the Senator wish to know my own opinion about it?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I believe it is the truth.

Mr. HOAR. Then I wish to ask the Senator if it does not utterly refute the opinion which he and other Senators on his side of the Chamber have advanced, that the tariff is putting great profits into the pockets of the manufacturers. As I understand the Senator, this witness says, and the Senator himself believes, that the tariff has nothing whatever to do with the question of the profit of that business, and that the man could carry it on at a profit if there were no tariff and undersell England in her own market. If that be true, what becomes of the claim which has been preached in the last twenty years, that the tarift is putting enormous profits into the pockets of cotton manufacturers?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is a difficult matter to make the average protectionist understand that one swallow does not make a summer. That there are some articles, a very few, from which the protectionists do not get any benefit by reason of protection there is no question, yet it is also true in almost, though in not quite, every protected article that by reason of increased prices the manufacturers of this country do make enormous and unreasonable profits. I read the statement of this man to show that you propose to keep up a tariff, a semblance, a pretense of protection, upon one class of goods when it is clearly not needed and not wanted by those interested, and I had begun to state the reason why I supposed that was done. I had begun to say that I could not account for the committee insisting on putting a tariff of 2½ cents upon these goods while the manufacturers themselves here testify that they do not need any protection, except upon the principle that had appeared in the testimony of a gentleman who went before the committee in a recent session, who testified that he was a manufacturer of grain-bags——

Mr. HOAR. Of what class of goods is the Senator speaking now?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Of the coarser cotton goods.

Mr. HOAR. Then, if the Senator will allow me to get at the fact, we can talk about the folly or confusion of mind of the protectionist afterwards. I understand the Senator from Arkansas gives us his high authority to the effect that it is not true that the tariff puts enormous profits into the pockets of manufacturers of coarse cotton in this country. We have got so far. That is what I want to get at.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not know what the Senator from Massachusetts understands. I had begun to try to say what I thought, and if the Senator will allow me to finish the statement I have twice begun, I will try to make myself understood by the Senate.

I said just now that upon this class of goods the protection did no good in my opinion. It is of no benefit to the manufacturer, certainly not to this class of manufacturers, because they desire to get rid of it; and I do not understand why the committee should endeavor to compel these people to submit to having their interests protected by a high tariff, except upon the principle that seemed to animate a gentleman who appeared before the committee a short time ago, who stated that he was a manufacturer of grain-bags; that the raw material of his manufacture was burlaps; that he wanted a certain tariff fixed on burlaps, a tariff lower than has heretofore prevailed.

A member of the committee said, "You are a manufacturer of grain-bags?" He answered, "Yes." "And the burlaps are your raw materials?" He said, "Certainly." He asked, then, "Why do you not ask for free burlaps so as to have your raw material without any duty?" He said, "If I were to ask for free burlaps I might get free bags." The trouble with these gentlemen is that if they allow this class of coarser, heavier cotton goods which are manufactured to come free into the country some other goods might come free that they want to have protection upon.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. With pleasure.

Mr. VANCE. I should say that the bill before us is a sufficient explanation of the reason why they reduce the duties on these coarse goods manufactured in Southern mills. It is done to give countenance to the increase on the finer goods with which they have to compete with English manufacturers. If the Senator will look forward he will see that in the paragraph or two next ensuing they have largely increased the duties on all that class of cotton goods which come in competition with English goods, and they very generously reduce the duties on those goods manufactured by the Southern mills that do nobody any harm or any good. It is merely used as a stalking-horse for their own increase.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. And that reduction is a mere piece of masquerade in itself?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Another witness, testifying before this committee at the same time, made some statements to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. This witness too, I think, may safely be said not to be a "floor-walker," not to be a mere "labor agitator," not to be a mere Democratic candidate, as he testifies he has been engaged in manufacturing for a great many years. This is Mr. Phinizy, who says on the subject of profits:

* * * We paid 20 per cent. dividends, commencing in 1865, up to 1873. Then we reduced the dividends to 12 per cent., and paid quarterly dividends of 3 per cent. from 1873 until 1878. We then reduced the dividends to 8 per cent., and paid at that rate until about three years ago, when we went back to 10 per cent.; but last January the board, as a matter of abundant caution, although they made some 12 per cent., foreseeing the present state of things, reduced the dividend again to 8 per cent., 2 per cent. a quarter, and events have justified their foresight. The reason we reduced the dividends, I think, was the fact that although we paid 20 per cent. we had accumulated a considerable surplus in addition to that 20 per cent., and our board determined to enlarge the mill, and the estimate of the cost of the enlargement which we received from experts was about $175,000, but when the work was completed it cost us $350,000. That, I think, was the immediate cause of the reduction.

Q. Was that enlargement paid for from your surplus?

A. It was paid for from the surplus. We had $170,000 of bonds, but in addition to those bonds we have a surplus of about $90,000.

Q. Are you adding to that surplus from year to year?

A. We have been doing so heretofore, but I think we shall add little, if anything, this year. It is a singular fact that we sell more goods in Boston than in any other part of the United States.

In speaking of their ability to sell these goods abroad, he said:

Q. To which do you send most, to China or to Africa?

A. We send most to China. I am shipping goods there now, as Mr. Estes told you; I have sold 400 bales recently to go to China, and I am now shipping the goods.

Q. What will be the value of that 400 bales?

A. Well, that 400 bales will be worth about $20,000. Our bales are very large; we put 1,200 yards in a bale.

Q. Can you make an approximate statement of the value of the goods that you ship to China and to Africa annually?

A. I suppose it would be about from $100,000 to $150,000 a year in money value. We have done it in the past, and we hope to increase our shipments in the future.

Q. Do you find the demand in that quarter increasing rather than diminishing?

A. Yes, sir; we could have shipped more than ever before in the last six months if we had accepted the prices that were offered. They were, of course, disposed to take advantage of the depression. They generally make a bargain with me, say to-day, for 1,000 bales of goods, which I deliver at the rate of so many per week, but I do not have the goods on hand when I make the sales. If I had had the goods on hand I would probably have sold more than I have sold, but I was unwilling, in the depressed condition of the market, to sell my product ahead. I would rather take the chances when I get the goods made of getting better prices. Now, we sell a great many goods to bleacheries near Boston, and also to the shoe-men.

Upon the question of tariff, this witness, who controlled a mill worth $1,250,000, said:

Q. Do you want the tariff reduced?

A. Upon the subject of the tariff I am in theory an absolute free-trade man; but the Government has to be supported, and I do not see how it can be supported without a tariff, unless you resort to a land tax or a direct tax, and everybody says that the people will not stand either of those. Then, as a matter of course, where the Government is driven to have a tariff, I believe in having as low a one as will serve to support the Government on an economical basis, and in having that tariff so adjusted as to protect our industries. In other words, I want a tariff for revenue.

Q. Rather for revenue than for protection?

A. Well, the protection follows as a matter of course.

Q. Do you want the tariff primarily for the benefit of the Government, or for the benefit of our industries?

A. I want it as a necessity for the Government.

Q. Do you want it arranged so that it will afford any protection to the manufacturing industries of the country?

A. Well, I think if it protects anything we have a right to be protected as well as anybody else, but I think we can live without protection.

Q. You think your cotton industries can live here without any protection?

A. I think that what I have told you shows that we can go to China in competition with other countries.

Q. Then, so far as you are concerned, you are willing that the tariff should be removed?

A. I am, so far as I am concerned.

Q. The line of goods that you manufacture is one in which you can get on without any tariff at all?

A. I think so; that is my opinion. I may be mistaken, however. Others differ with me.

Q. If that be so, that you can get along in your line of manufacture without a tariff, and if we are bound to have a tariff for revenue, don't you think it should be adjusted so as protect other industries that require protection, and not yours which requires no protection?

A. Well, I think they ought to give us a little, too.

Q. The manufacturers up North say they need protection, and therefore don't you think it would be a proper thing under the circumstances to adjust the tariff so as to give them the protection they need, but to leave you unprotected, as you may require no protection?

A. Well, in principle it is a mighty hard thing that I should pay 100 per cent. more for an article than I can buy it for in the markets of the world—that I should pay that money to be put into somebody else's pocket; but I suppose that it is a matter of necessity to some extent. I would like to see trade as free all over the world as it is between South Carolina, Georgia, and New York, but when that comes to pass the millennium will come. I believe really that in adjusting the tariff you ought to give all our industries a little protection, but give most to those that can not live without it. But I think they all make a mistake on that point. I think we would all be better off if we had no protection, even the iron interest. Let me give you an instance of the operation of the tariff. When I was president of this railroad company, one year I bought 7,000 tons of steel rails, and the duty on them was about as much as I paid for the rails in England. I paid $28 a ton duty on the rails and they cost me in England about $28 a ton. Now, that seemed mighty hard that I had to pay $28 a ton more for those steel rails than I could have bought them for in the markets of the world, just for the benefit of some iron manufacturers in Pennsylvania.

To show the spirit with which our friends on the other side look at all these questions, I will read a question asked by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], who was chairman of this committee. He said:

From what I have seen of these working people, and what I have seen of these industries I do not believe they are making money, and I do not believe they can afford to pay more than they do pay and build up and maintain these factories. I believe that protection is as necessary to them as it is to the New England manufacturers, and I believe these gentlemen give utterance to sentiments which, if they were carried out, would ruin their own industries here. There is no profit now in any of the great manufacturing industries in this country to-day.

To a man who had not listened to the assertions made upon this floor that the levying of a tax upon foreign goods introduced into this country does not raise the price to the consumer, to a man who had not listened to the sophistries that we hear on the other side when endeavoring to persuade the American people that the only way to make them rich is to tax themselves higher and higher, it would seem utterly absurd to suggest that any Senator, a chairman of a committee sent out to ascertain facts, would have the audacity, in the face of the sworn testimony of men who state that they have paid a dividend of 20 per cent. for almost twenty years and at the same time saved a surplus out of which they built mills that cost $350,000, to say that they were not making money and that they did not understand their own business.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to suggest that possibly the fact that the mills in the South engaged in the manufacture of cotton pay larger dividends than those in New England engaged in the same industry is owing to the circumstance that in some of the Southern States not more than one-half and in all the other Southern States not more than two-thirds as much is paid to the operatives for their labor.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The testimony of these people was that there had never been a strike known in any of these factories in all their history. If in the Northern States you pay so liberally and generously to your operatives, why in the name of common sense is it that they are all the time undertaking to compel you by force to pay them higher wages than you are willing to give them?

Mr. ALDRICH. My State is as largely engaged in cotton manufactures as any State in the United States in proportion to its population, and I have not known a strike in Rhode Island for five years at least; and but very few for the last generation.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The testimony of operatives taken by this committee in these mills was that they were satisfied and content with their wages. These people were paying them a fair compensation for what they did, and they were satisfied with the results. But the astonishing thing to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is that the chairman of this committee should state, and it should be put in print in his report to Congress, that he did not believe these people were making money when the sworn testimony of the managers of these mills showed that for almost twenty years together they had been paying dividends of 20 per cent. and saving a surplus besides. There are none so blind as those who will not see.

It will not do to say that these people are "floor-walkers." It will not do to say that they are "mere labor agitators" or that they are Democrats. They were upon oath before that committee, and I take it that they were as honorable and as honest men as were to be found anywhere in the country. They were born in the North. I think both these from whom I read, and quite a number of others, testified that they went from Ohio, from New York, and from New England. They were practical operatives in New England mills in some instances who went South and built up these industries, and I imagine that when they speak about their own experience in their own business they are entitled to some sort of consideration.

We are constantly being told that the one purpose of all this tariff tax is to enable the manufacturers to pay high wages to their operatives. I am not an expert in that business. I know but little about manufacturing of any sort, and of course I can not pretend personally to say whether or not these pretenses are true; but I have given some attention to the subject. I have endeavored to find out the facts. I have no selfish purpose to serve in this matter. If it was honestly and fairly necessary, to pay fair compensation to operatives in this country, to have a tariff tax, and if when paid the laborers got it, if I could be made to understand that, I would be willing to vote all the protection that was necessary to accomplish that purpose, which would not bear unjustly on other callings. But the more I look into it, the more

I understand the facts, the better satisfied I am that the whole of that claim is a barefaced fraud, a false pretense from the beginning to the end, and that it is not founded in fact.

The United States consul at Tunstall, England, Mr. Schoenhof, is, I suppose, a doctrinaire. Of course a doctrinaire is as bad as a "floor-walker." One of these people who dares to consider general principles and to follow out arguments to rational conclusions on this great question is not to be trusted. Nobody can be believed except one of those who own a manufactory, and they can not be believed if they go before a committee and state frankly that they have been making profits of more than 20 per cent. a year for twenty years together.

This American consul, however, in a special report which he made to the State Department in July last, presented some facts which it occurs to me will give the members of the committee some trouble to get around. He made a careful investigation of the labor cost of the production of certain classes of goods in Massachusetts, in England, and in Switzerland. Knowing well the difficulties about making these comparisons, and knowing that the charge would be made, whenever a report came in, that he had looked at one class of goods in one country and at another class in another, he states in his report that he took samples of goods from Massachusetts mills and that he talked with the managers and posted himself fully about their expenses, taking statements from the books of the mills showing the output and cost in detail.

He made a report that has been to me wonderfully interesting. He gives the statement, for instance, of one quarter's output in a Lancashire mill, in which he states every item of expense, thus ascertaining the exact labor cost in detail of each operative in the manufacture of a yard of goods.

Of course I shall not detain the Senate by reading at any great length from this report. I hope that every member of the Senate has looked at it as carefully as I have, as I know Senators would derive very great benefit from doing so. I call attention, however, to a statement made by him. Comparing the English expense as classified above, the statement which I will read here is the comparative cost in Lancashire and Lowell of the cost per pound of yarn.

Items.	Lancashire.	Lowell.
Total wages	1.708	1.995
Power and taxes	.418	.298
Supplies	.240	.240
Repairs and depreciation	.6	.475
Interest on loan, etc	.3	.6
Carriage	.18
Expense, etc		.150
Addition		.090
Total	3.506	3.205

Showing that it actually cost the Massachusetts mill .301 of 1 cent less to manufacture 1 pound of yarn than it did the Lancashire mill.

On the whole it will be seen—

He says in another place—

even making allowance for the fact that some mills in Switzerland may work under more disadvantageous circumstances, that, view as we may, in these counts at least they have no great advantage in their cheaper labor, but, on the contrary, work at higher cost. Under all conditions, taking the most profitably worked mill in England as a basis for comparison with our mills in America, it will be seen that in the cost of spinning medium numbers our cost is almost on a par, and that we pay no more for our labor than is paid in cotton-spinning in England and considerably less than is paid on the Continent, if we take the wages by the pound or product, and not by the day wages earned by the spinner in the different countries. In fact, the latter is an illusory measure of cost, and the former the only true one.

* * * * * * * *

In throstle spinning in England one girl attends four sides of 144 spindles, or 576 spindles; in America, as many as eight sides. The average, as given to me, in the print-mill of Lowell is 960 spindles per spinner (girls and women). In other words, 50 per cent. of higher earnings are balanced by 66⅔ per cent. more work turned out or spindles attended to. The speed in England is about 5,300 in throstle spinning and about 8,000 in mule spinning. While the cost of spinning in England and America is about the same, the wages are also nearly the same. When higher in America, the difference is balanced by higher exertion and output, while in Switzerland earnings are considerably lower, with a disproportionately greater cost of production.

There are a number of other points that I had noted here to which I would like to call the attention of the Senate, but I do not wish to occupy much time. Here is a comparison between Lowell and Burnley, however, which I will present. Compared with England, for the same length, we have in labor cost:

Items.	Lowell.	Burnley.
	Cents.	Cents.
Weavers' wages	2.8	3.57
Dressing or sizing	.469	.479
Beaming, twisting, winding, etc	.428	.753
Extra board	.039
	3.736	4.802

The sizing or dressing costs about the same as in America. The extra board paid in American mills, as stated in the American account, is paid by the mill to the boarding-house keepers for all female employés boarding in the mills boarding-houses, and of course is not an expense in the cost of manufacture in Lancashire. It must, however, be taken as an additional cost of manufacture in America, and in a comparison of the cost is to be counted. We have, therefore, a total labor cost in weaving 1 pound of print cloth in England as 4.802 and in America as 3.736, or 1.066 cents higher labor cost in England than in America for an equal amount of work turned out in number of yards.

* * * It appears, therefore, that in the general expense of manufacture in the weaving department the difference is not very great between America and England, and that the only difference existing consists in the lower rate of wages paid to American operatives compared with England.

Actually showing that while we make a pretense of paying high wages to workingmen, in point of fact we, while claiming protection on their account, pay them lower wages than are paid in England.

I shall not detain the Senate by reading these details, but quote as follows:

We have, therefore, 8.551, 9.685, and 10.12 cents (reducing the cost in Switzerland to the standard in America) as the total cost of manufacturing in America, England, and Switzerland.

The nominally lower wages paid makes the greater labor cost in English fabrics and in Switzerland, for the still lower wages paid the still higher labor cost of the goods, clearly showing that the superior efficiency of American labor, while nominally higher, really yields to its employers a larger quantity of goods for each dollar invested than any other country.

This is further shown by the following quotation:

The relative working capacity of and wages paid to weavers in America are, according to information from one of the leading mills, an average of six and three-quarters looms to the weaver. I have recently been informed that in England four looms is the highest rate of single weavers making this class of cloth. Some run six looms, but they invariably have a helper to assist them, who is paid by the weaver out of his wages. These are men; the four-loom weavers are mostly women. For single weavers no more than four looms are taken. The general average, taking all weavers, poor and good, is given by competent judges to be not more than three and a half looms. The average earnings per loom are given as 5*s.* 3*d.*, or say $1.25 per loom, or averaging earnings for finished weavers of $5 per week. A guinea per week, as I was told at Burnley, is a fair average for good single weavers. At the rate at which weaving is paid this would indicate for four looms a weekly output of 980 yards; but if we take the three-and-a-half loom average, of only 857 yards.

I have statements from two mills, both in Lowell, one giving the earnings per loom at 81 cents. This would indicate a weekly earning of $5.08, and at the rate of 40 cents per 100 yards be an output of 1,270 yards per week. At another mill, running a fairly equal percentage of looms per weaver, it was stated at the time of my visit that 4½ cuts of 50 yards was the output of one loom per week, which, taking an average of six looms only, would be a little over 27 cuts of 50 yards, or 1,350 yards, and at the rate of 40 cents per 100 yards would be $5.40 as the weekly earnings.

It will therefore be seen that the earnings of English weavers at the present time in these cotton mills are nearly the same as the American. The labor cost, however, by the piece, cut, or yard is considerably above. The American earnings can only be brought up to the English earnings by a considerably greater output by the American operatives.

This "doctrinaire," Democrat as he is, unreliable perhaps as he would necessarily be from being liable to both those charges, when he goes to the mills and takes the facts from their books, when he takes the statement from their book-keepers showing the yards they manufacture and the amounts paid for wages and the amounts paid for material, it seems to me, demonstrates without any sort of doubt that the labor cost of the goods produced in England is just as high or higher than that of those produced in this country. Although we pay higher wages by the day, we do not pay any more by the piece; and when you go further and compare the American product with the product of continental Europe you find that we get a still greater difference between their production and ours. If this is true, then what becomes of this claim that the intention of levying a tariff is to enable American manufacturers to pay higher wages to their working people? There is no foundation for it; there is no truth to sustain it, and it ought not to be any longer tolerated by an intelligent American Congress.

There is a little more, Mr. President, that at the risk of boring the Senate I shall ask your patience to hear:

The agent of an American print-works mill, with whom I exchanged views on the subject at the time of my late visit, told me that he knew that he did the spinning cheaper than they did it in England, but he had not known that the weaving was done at a lower price in America than in England; that if this were so they would be able to export print cloth to England, which they were, however, not able to do.

Then he goes into an analysis of the reasons why they were not able to enter into it, plainly showing the difficulties by which we are encumbered and hampered and the reasons why this is not done. I shall not detain the Senate by reading from this report any longer.

The course of the committee in the construction of this bill and in the management of it has been remarkable in a good many respects. On the last day that we were in session the junior Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] made use of the following language as expressive of his opinion of what ought to be done by tariff legislation:

As I said a little while ago, it may well be argued that the policy of Germany is the wisest. I think it has done as much to reduce the price of her products in the markets of the world as anything that has occurred. Take sugar to illustrate it. With her high protective tariff and with her bounty, her sugar manufacturers holding the German market and selling the surplus abroad, she has forced that necessity down to a point heretofore unknown in the history of the markets of that empire; and it may well be argued that it is the true policy for any nation and for every nation to hold her markets for her own people. They may depend upon them thoroughly for their support to employ their own labor in and about them and their own capital in and about them and send their surplus into the commerce of the world.

While there is no doubt that the tendency of this system leads directly down to this result, I did not believe there was a protectionist living who would have the face to stand up in the Senate of the United States and assert that that was the purpose for which he was striving. Has it come to this, that the American people are to be told by distinguished advocates of a system of tariff taxation that the purpose is to compel American consumers to buy everything they buy from American manufacturers; that they are to absolutely control the market of this country, to hold it for all time; and that when they have a surplus it is to be taken to the markets of the world and sold for a lower price than the American consumer is allowed to have it at? When you pretend that the purpose of the tariff system is to enable you to pay high wages to workingmen, I ask you, in the name of all that is good and holy, how can you deny to the American consumer the right to have the product he consumes at the same price at which the rest of the world is to have it? You are to-day discriminating against the consumers of the country in your levy of taxes.

American sugar, refined sugar, is to-day sold cheaper in London than the American consumer is allowed to have it. Two dollars and sixty cents on the hundred I believe is refunded upon your tariff tax upon reshipment abroad, and that difference marks the difference between the sugar consumed by the American citizen and the sugar consumed by the pauper labor of Europe against whom you pretend every day and hour of your lives you are intending to protect the American laborer! Was there ever a more shameless outrage?

But there are some other things in connection with this bill that ought not to be overlooked or forgotten. It seems to me if the committee had declared that their purpose was to discriminate against every man who, following the avocation of Cain, was trying to make his living out of the soil, it could not have been more plainly stated than it has been in the pages of this bill. When we had under consideration the question of taxing the cotton-ties I called attention to the discrimination between wool and cotton, that wool had less of human labor than any other agricultural product, while cotton had more; and yet while giving wool high protection and increasing the protection higher and higher, still you were looking about for every scheme and excuse by which to levy more taxes on the cotton-grower.

When we asked that we might be allowed to have cotton-ties to come in on the same tax that the same committee fixed in 1883, you refused it. When the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] made the motion that the tax be allowed to remain as you yourselves fixed it, you refused. There was a difference in cotton-ties and tin-plates. It is a somewhat singular circumstance that in the millions of dollars' worth of tin-plates introduced into this country, the millions of dollars of revenue that are collected, there is no industry established in this country for manufacturing tin-plates, but all are imported here. We have a tax of 1 cent a pound on tin-plates, and we had a tax of 35 per cent. ad valorem on cotton-ties under a revenue tariff.

The gentlemen of this committee tell us there was no such thing as building up a cotton-tie industry upon this tariff. This was also true of tin-plates; they were situated just alike. Then why did they not treat both these articles alike? Why did you propose to raise the tax on cotton-ties more than 200 per cent. for the purpose of building up an industry, and not propose to increase the tariff on tin-plates for a similar reason? They were standing exactly in the same position. They were both being imported, and none of either were manufactured here. The total amount consumed in the country is imported. There was no difference in the circumstances that entered into the two; but yet, as I think must have been the case, because one is an article that enters into every home and fireside in the great North, you did not dare to raise the tax upon it, while you did raise it outrageously upon the other, because it was consumed in the South, and by farmers. I believe, Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. If I do not interrupt the Senator from Arkansas on this question of tin-plates——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to say that when this bill was reported the committee expressly stated that they intended at a later day to make some provision respecting tin-plates, and I think the committee will be able to present something in a very brief time upon that subject.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have not the slightest doubt of the ability of the committee to present something on that subject within a very few days. They have brought a bill into the Senate in which they propose to leave the tax on tin-plates exactly where it was under the law of 1883, and in that same bill they propose to raise the tax on cotton-ties more than 200 per cent., neither being produced in this country. If it was good policy to raise the tax on one in order to build up an industry here, why not increase the tax on the other for the same reason?

The Senator says that in a very few days they will be able to bring something here. You may do it in the course of a few days. I have not a doubt that your committee can change the bill so as to increase the tax on tin-plates 200 per cent. Do it if you dare. Do it if you believe that the people who live in the cabins all over this great land do not care anything about the increase on an article that every single one of them is bound to consume.

Tell them, if you choose, that you intend to increase that tax upon them so as to swell the fortunes of some favored individual who is going to engage in the manufacture of tin-plates. When you do, you will set a class of people to thinking about the injustice and about the inequality of this thing that you will probably prefer not to stir up, and one that you may consider more formidable than the cotton-growers of the South.

You will then have the tin-plate manufacturers to stand up and declare that we are having a "commercial Elysium," but you will at the same time incur the danger of having a much larger number of that class of people whose silver is made of tin to tell you that they will not be robbed to make a "commercial Elysium" for a few of your pets.

I was not surprised to hear the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] the other day in his place, in talking about the glories of this system in which everybody in this country is compelled to contribute to the fortunes of private individuals, this system, not a tax for public revenue but a tax for private tribute—I was not surprised to hear him, coming from the section of country he does, exclaim in the fullness of his heart that for the last twenty-five years we have had a perfect "commercial Elysium," an absolute heaven from the tariff. And yet when you gentlemen come here and the Senator from Missouri reads to you the enormous profits you have been making you deny all of it and say you have made no profits, and one would think from your statements that only your laborers prosper and your poor mill-owners make nothing. You have had no Elysium, then. You ought to be more consistent in your assertions. One of you ought not to assert that you have been having a genuine heaven commercially and another deny that you have made any profits.

If any one of you says that the manufacturers have been getting large profits by reason of the tariff, and that for twenty-five years you have had a "commercial Elysium," we understand that you have had a glorious time financially, and you have certainly made profits.

One of the difficulties with this country is that it has grown to be so large and there are so many people in it that a great many people in one portion of the nation have no correct idea about the facts that enter into the daily lives of others. If every man in this land could know and understand what the truth is pervading all the business of this country, I should have no doubt about the solution of any question of this sort fairly, honestly, and rightly.

I do not believe that the laboring men of the country, North or South, are willing to do any act of injustice for the purpose of building up their own business at the expense of other people situated in a like way; but I know from my own personal observation that for twenty-five years past, ever since the close of the war, the people of the State in which I live have worked as hard, as earnestly, and as honestly as I believe any people on the face of the earth ever did or could. They are sober, they are honest, they are industrious. They have not fooled away their time in nonsense and dissipation. They have worked all the days of their lives. No eight-hour law was ever thought of by them. They arise as soon as they can see how to strike a lick of work in the morning and stick at it industriously all the day long. The climate is such that there is hardly a day in the year in which they can not labor out of doors.

The farmers of that State have honestly labored themselves, and their wives and their children have helped them in an endeavor to improve their condition, but it has not come about. I should like you to show the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island that you have had twenty-five years of a commercial Elysium to those men, and they will tell you that if what they have experienced for twenty-five years is heaven, they would prefer a little taste of the other place for a change; they would take a little of the infernal regions in preference.

Those people have been barely able to make a living, many of them not able to keep out of debt. I was talking last fall while at home to a man I have known well for years; he is a man of fine sense, and a close observer, a farmer who makes his living at the plow-handle, and he told me that in looking around him, in a country of fine soil, in a splendidly watered district, filled up with excellent men, in ten years past that country had scarcely changed at all and could not be said to have improved above the financial condition they were in ten years ago. While having this commercial Elysium you are playing destruction with us and with our interests. I think the time has come when there should be a little bit of letting up of this system or the time will come when an outraged people will compel a recognition of their rights.

But, Mr. President, I began what I have been saying simply to call attention to the fact that it was not only "floor-walkers" who believed this tariff tax is outrageous and iniquitous, that it was not only "labor agitators" who believed this, but that there are honest manufacturers in this country who frankly state upon their oaths that such is the case—stating the profits they had made and that they did not believe there ought to be any tariff tax at all—and I commend their example to those who are now endeavoring to fleece the farmers and consumers of "free America" to enrich themselves.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION CORRESPONDENCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

On or about the 25th day of September, 1888, I received a copy of a resolution adopted on that day by the Senate in executive session, requesting the transmission to that body by the President "of all communications and correspondence not heretofore sent to the Senate and under his control, on the subject of the proposed convention with China, transmitted by him to the Senate by message dated 16th March, 1888, and on the subject of the reported failure of the Government of China to finally agree to the same."

A few days after a copy of this resolution was received by me, on the 1st day of October, 1888——

Mr. SHERMAN. From the reading of that paper I infer that it should be presented in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The transactions have all been made public.

Mr. SHERMAN. The message is in response to an executive resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie on the table for further examination.

Subsequently,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore said: The message transmitted by the President was sent to the Senate in legislative session, not marked "Executive." It will lie on the table, however, for examination by the Senators desiring to look at it.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: Mr. President, the Chair laid before the Senate a little while ago a message from the President of the United States in answer to a resolution adopted in executive session. I am informed by the Chair that the proceedings upon that resolution were afterwards, on the 10th of October, made public, the injunction of secrecy being removed by a vote. On looking at the message itself, I find that the President simply answers the resolution in a large part and he merely gives to the Senate the full text of one communication, an abstract of which was in his other message. In order that the communication may be complete, all the other matter contained in his answer having been printed as an ordinary Senate document at the last session, it seems to me there is no reason why the message should not be taken from the table and communicated to the Senate as usual and printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4982) prohibiting the allowance of fee in any claim for increase of pension on account of the increase of disability for which the pension was allowed was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 6172) providing for additional leave of absence for employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 11794) to amend the postal laws of the United States in reference to letters bearing special-delivery stamps was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in pursuance of the requirements of the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, a report of the Director of the Geological Survey on the organization and prosecution of the survey of the arid lands for purposes of irrigation; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have been amused for a considerable time by hearing the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. It is the old straw thrashed over again, and I do not propose to reply to his argument, particularly because I rose to give some statistics to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. But when one hears that in England the operatives are paid as much as they are here, he wonders why they insist upon coming here and complain of their sufferings abroad, and indulge in strikes there, and exhibit there an increase of pauperism, the old country having a rate of pauperism greater than that of our New England States. The birds of the air know where to go for comfortable weather and food, and the human race has something of the same instinct without reading lectures on political economy, and it is one of the studies of the American statesman now to see how we can keep from our being absolutely flooded by the people who are coming from places where they get higher wages and better food, according to what we have heard here to-day.

The Senator from Arkansas took pleasure in showing us that there is a cotton-mill somewhere—I did not hear where—down South, I believe, making very coarse goods, where they had made, I think, an average of 17 per cent. profit for several years, and made money in spite of the tariff. The inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts was quite apropos, if that be so, how much did the tariff help or hurt those people? They are doing well enough exactly as they are, and if under this tariff they are making that per cent., it does not appear to be hurting anybody specially.

But the difficulty is that there is no use of arguing from any one exceptional case. I see no reason in the world why a cotton establishment should not be put up in Georgia, or South Carolina, or Mississippi, and make money. There is no reason but the inaptitude of the people and their lack of previous educational preparation—none in the world—for the people down there, families there, are accustomed to live in such circumstances and with surroundings such as would not be submitted to for a week in New England among our oppressed operatives. The climate is such that they do not need the quantity of fuel and they do not need the heavy clothing. Their expenses of living need not be over two-thirds of what they are in Connecticut or Massachusetts with our long, cold winter seasons. Therefore they can afford to work more cheaply; but it is only exceptional.

I have no doubt their manufacturers will increase, and they will have an influence in adjusting wages throughout the country; but as to profits of 15 or 20 per cent. being common, or being an average, or being anything typical of the manufacturing industries of this country, it is a monstrous mistake.

Every man familiar with the subject knows that, and some of the Senators know a thousand times more about it than I do. Every man familiar with the condition of capital, with the condition of the money market, knows that there are tens and hundreds of millions of dollars lying about idle, glad to get 4, 3, or even 2 per cent. temporarily. Every man knows perfectly well that if there be anything approaching a guaranty of 6 per cent. regular profit, a thousand million dollars would answer to the demand within three months; it would come on the wings of the wind from all portions of the world to that Elysium where 6 per cent. was a certain thing. So when the Senator has found a manufacturer that makes 17 per cent., let that manufacturer thank God, but let him not suppose that other people are making anything like it.

I could not understand all that the Senator from Missouri said, because unfortunately I was interrupted and did not hear it all, so that perhaps what I did hear I did not get in proper connection; but I understood his argument to be in general that the savings-banks statements of the Northern and Eastern States, or more properly the manufacturing States, were illusory and deceptive; that it is not a fact that they represent the increment of earnings of the average and poorer laboring people at all, but that they are rather the surplus moneys of the rich put in there for temporary uses and in order that they may get a dividend easier, etc.

The difficulty with the argument of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas is that they do not go and see the untruth of their statements. I do not care what that consul in Tunstall wrote; I do not care about the argument that the operative in New England does not save money and get him a home. I beg those gentlemen to come with me in the next long vacation, and I count in my mind on my fingers village after village by the score that are manufacturing villages, and some of them in my own prosperous State, that were woods and fields and rocky streams ten, fifteen, twenty, or thirty years ago. No capitalist went into them. I bear one in mind now. I do not think the man had $5,000. He went into that little valley because the hillsides were surrounded with woods that he could cut for charcoal for his ax factory; and now there is a population of from 2,000 to 3,000 there. There is nobody in that town now worth $100,000, and never has been such a person there. I think the estate of the chief promoter of that enterprise, who worked at it forty or fifty years, is not worth more than $100,000. All along that beautiful hillside and along the banks of that stream are the neat little cottages, and some of the superior class—higher grade and lower grade—comfortable homes and prosperous savings-banks and churches and school-houses; and every dollar, so far as I know, is directly traceable to the one man with a few thousand dollars who started a little bit of an ax factory there.

Tell me that these operatives do not save! I speak of the town of Winsted. I am old enough to know how it looked in 1837. I can go there and drive the Senator for hours along streams and roads there and in Plymouth and in the vicinity of Waterbury and the town of Stonington and all around there, riding by house after house and place after place that has been got from the earnings of the families who worked in the factories. The father worked and likely the wife worked when she was young, before she was married. They got acquainted there and married there, and the children grew up, and the increment of all these earnings made a home where the old people live now.

I do not care what your books say; I know the people, and when the Senator tells me that these savings-banks deposits do not represent earnings I ask him whether he supposes that there are 219,993 rich people in Connecticut who have got $500 each lying in our savings-banks?

Mr. ALLISON. How many?

Mr. HAWLEY. Two hundred and nineteen thousand nine hundred and ninety-three people in my State have money in sums of less than $500 each in the savings-banks. The population of Connecticut in 1880 was 622,700. Judging by previous decades, I think it fair to say that we are just about 660,000 people now. The total number of depositors in the savings-banks is 278,415. I have taken the trouble to cipher a little, and that is 42.6 per cent., nearly 43 per cent., of all our people, men, women, children, old men, babies, and all—about 43 per cent. of them have money in the savings-banks.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Connecticut state how many persons there are in Connecticut engaged in useful occupations?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not the census statistics. I know there are very few indeed who are not doing something for a living.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no doubt the number of depositors in the savings-banks is almost precisely identical with the number of persons engaged in gainful occupations, the wage-earners of the State.

Mr. HAWLEY. Really those who have money in the banks are 42.6 per cent. and those who have not are 57.4 per cent.; and those who have $500 and less, the aforesaid 219,993, are within a few of one-quarter of the people of the State; just about one-fourth of all the people of the State.

Now, sir, I can say with regard to this matter that I know better than any man who theorizes outside, and I can prove it to those gentlemen if they will come with me, and I will open to them the books of the saving-banks that have from a half million dollars up to $10,000,000 on deposit. They may go into Bridgeport, a town of 25,000 inhabitants that has grown up by manufactures, and they will find some eight or nine thousand depositors in that city. Some come from across the river in Stratford or down in Fairfield. Perhaps that is a sample of the factory population, with eight or ten thousand depositors in that saving-bank.

Do not tell me this is not money saved by the operatives. Where does it come from? You count upon your fingers the men who are worth $100,000 in the country; and you will find a great many when you begin to go further down, some with $50,000, some with $25,000, and some with twenty, fifteen, ten, and five thousand dollars; these latter begin to be large, and that is the result of our system of industry. I do not care for theories as against these indisputable facts.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I will not use the word "fair," but it is not a legitimate mode of discussion for a Senator to state that he puts his individual knowledge into a debate here against public and official statements.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mark, if the Senator please, that I do that in this one thing as to people who work in factories having saved money. I do not care who says they have not. I know them by the thousand.

Mr. VEST. Of course, that settles it.

Mr. HAWLEY. It does settle it as to our region of country.

Mr. VEST. That makes an issue which by no sort of reasoning can be met.

Mr. HAWLEY. Ispe ak officially in that matter as well as any clerk in a Department. I am a Senator, and I know the people.

Mr. VEST. Of course. That as a matter of course makes no issue which is possible of solution in a logical way in a body like this.

I am not responsible for these statements. I have never arrogated to myself any personal knowledge about the operatives in New England. I have never belonged to that school of philanthropists who find themselves called upon to go into any localities other than those where their legitimate business is, to investigate the condition of the people. I find public, authoritative publications made by regularly organized and legal bodies established for that purpose, with reports from savings-banks' officers under oath, with statements as to where the deposits come from; and if the Senator from Connecticut wants to put his personal knowledge against these statements, that is a question of taste with which I have nothing to do.

Mr. HAWLEY. I put against those statements the sworn reports of our savings-banks in Connecticut, and the report of the bank commissioners of that State—my State's official documents on that subject.

Mr. VEST. I have not examined them.

Mr. HAWLEY. Here they are.

Mr. VEST. And I had nothing to say this morning about the reports of any statistics of the bureau of labor or statistics in the State of Connecticut. I have not done that, but I have put here in evidence the reports of the bureau of statistics of labor for the State of Massachusetts for what they are worth.

Mr. HAWLEY. Fifteen years old.

Mr. HOAR. Seventeen years old.

Mr. VEST. One report was made in 1873, and that is the last I could obtain from the Librarian of the Congressional Library.

Mr. HOAR. They were for the period of 1872—seventeen years ago.

Mr. VEST. There were the reports for 1871, 1872, and 1873, and they were all I could get. If any Senator has later reports I shall be obliged to him if he will return them to the Library so that I may investigate them. I use the material that is furnished me.

As a matter of course that argument is just as good fifteen years ago as it is in regard to last year's condition of the operatives in New England, because the same system was in operation as this year, the protective tariff was as much in force then as to-day; and if gentlemen's rose-colored statements in regard to the condition of the operatives under the high protective tariff are true they were true in 1871, 1872, and 1873 as much so as to-day. I am not responsible for these statements. They were furnished by legislative authority, and that is the only way in which I can arrive at a proper understanding. I am not going to make any personal issue with the Senator from Connecticut that is not susceptible of solution.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no necessity for any personal issue. I am putting a document against his, and I have a little personal knowledge too.

Mr. VEST. I made no statement about the State of Connecticut. I read here the testimony of a Mr. Howard, I believe, who said he was acquainted with the condition of the operatives in all the New England States. I read that, and if there is any issue as to Connecticut it was made by him under that general language.

Mr. HAWLEY. The difficulty with the Senator's argument is that if it be true there ought to be an enormous pauper population in my State and in Rhode Island and Massachusetts, and there is no such thing. The pauperism is very small.

Mr. VEST. The Senator has the document in his hand. I have not examined it. Does that document undertake to show the proportion or any approximate proportion of the deposits made by workingmen and by others?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; it does not state how many there are from outside of the State, but I know the great majority of them are Connecticut people, because they do not come from the extreme Western States. They can do better with their money there than to bring it to our State and get 4 per cent. Eighty million dollars of this $102,000,000 in this little State is content to receive 4 per cent. dividends; a very few pay something over that, but the body of them stands at 4 per cent., some at 3½, some at 4¼, and some at 4½. Men do not come from Massachusetts to put money in our banks to get that; they do not come from Rhode Island to do it; they do not come over from New York to do it, because as you move westward from the Hudson River, as a general rule, money gets higher returns invested in land or invested in manufactures than it gets in the older States. That is the uniform rule. Our people lend their money West, and in the West get 4, 5, 6, 7, or 8 per cent. for it. They used to get more than that, but as the country has settled up and the people there have saved money they will not pay so much. They do not need to pay it for improvements of the farms, because the improvements are made.

The Senator has not told me how he would get along with 219,000 people in our State who are rich who make these deposits. It is impossible to suppose they are other than this great body of working people. And the increase in the number of small depositors he will find from $150 to $200 in the year 1887 was 8,734, and the increase in the total depositors during the year 1887—this report is just one year old, and the other is coming in to-morrow to the Connecticut Legislature—was $4,756,113.87, a total of $102,189,934.72 of deposits, and the interest on hand not paid, and a reasonable surplus, bring the total in those banks that belongs to the people to $107,000,000.

You find that all around us it is the same way. It is impossible to find that without being compelled to believe that industry, and pretty steady industry, and good habits characterize the majority of the people, saving their wages with a view to a better future and a hopeful future before them. There is the stimulus all around New England. Take the Irish servant girls in the towns and I venture to say that 80 per cent. of them have got their little savings-bank book, and the joke in my town is that the Irish girls own the town, because our merchants, capitalists, and speculators will go to the savings-banks and borrow money, formerly at 6 and now at 5 per cent., because they can make more with it, and the savings of the poorer people are in that way utilized.

These are the results not alone of a protective tariff. I do not pretend to claim that they are. These are the results of more than two centuries of common schools and the gospel of the Lord. That is what they are largely deducible from. But the tariff has not kept our people from saving money; it has not robbed them. There are manufacturing concerns there, by the way, that do appear to divide 8, 10, and 12 per cent. on their capital. I have one of these in my mind, a large one, that manages to get out something like 12 per cent. now. But what is the fact? I remember, about twenty-five years ago, when that concern failed and the whole outfit sold for $200,000 that had cost a million and a half; and as they got more money together they had to call in some money to run it, to build it up, and it went up to a capital of $1,000,000 and owning property that could not be replaced for $4,800,000 or $5,000,000.

This 12 per cent. is paid upon sunken and buried money. It is not 4 per cent. on the actual cost of what these buildings and properties are worth, or 4 per cent. on what it would cost to replace them. By and by New England will all be dotted over with buried foundations of industries like those monstrous piers that are below the great bridges. Owner after owner, corporation after corporation has gone down in the distress of our fluctuating industries and the ruins sold for a trifle, and the next man of course can divide 12 per cent. after awhile.

I have just one word more. Those gentlemen who made these arguments do not know how soon a business is found out to be profitable. The secret leaks out, no matter with how much zeal it may be covered up, and other capital rushes into it, and I wish I could tell gentlemen with what satisfaction millions of dollars have been let loose in New England, New York, and Pennsylvania since the 6th day of November. In our State the foundations are being laid for shop after shop, and millions have rushed down below Mason and Dixon's line to bless the men who fight the tariff.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask if some of that money was not let loose before the 6th of November, and let loose in "blocks of five" and in "fried fat," as it was called?

Mr. HAWLEY. That opens up a large question. My impression is that there is a fearful amount of corruption, something which has struck me with dismay as to the illegitimate use of money in the United States; but if it be any satisfaction to the Senator, my best information from the people who know about those things is that we should not have lost my State if it had not been for the superabundant corruption fund among the Democracy. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, so far as I am aware, and I have given some investigation to this subject, no statistics have ever been printed in any State which undertook to show the proportion of the savings-bank depositors who were wage-earners or workingmen or workingwomen. Certain general facts have been stated, such as were stated in the report read from by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and from those facts certain deductions have been made; but the savings-banks managers of the country have never undertaken to investigate in any sense, so far as my knowledge goes, the exact proportion of their depositors who were workingmen and the proportion who were capitalists; and you can only reach any sort of conclusion by an examination of certain facts. For instance, in my own State the savings-banks deposits of Rhode Island amount to more than $800 to every family in the State, and the number of depositors is a little greater than the total number of persons engaged in all gainful occupations in the State—men, women, and children—and more than 50 per cent. of our entire population, as the Senator from Connecticut well says. From those facts we can conclude, I think, that a large proportion of the working people of that State are depositors in the savings-banks. Superadded to that is the personal knowledge of every man who has given the subject any investigation that the operatives in the various establishments in the different villages and cities are depositors and deposit in large numbers in the savings-banks.

There is another fact. It was undoubtedly true in 1873, when the report from which the Senator from Missouri has read was made, that there were persons who were in a certain sense capitalists, who did deposit money in savings-banks because of the amount of dividends paid by the savings-banks in New England, which then amounted to some 6 or 7 or 8 per cent. At the present moment the dividends of the savings-banks have been reduced to 4 and 4½ per cent., and that class of depositors, such of them as were in existence, have been very largely, if not entirely, eliminated from our savings-banks depositors.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] very well suggests to me that in almost all these savings-banks there is a limit as to the amount they will receive from any one depositor. That limit in some cases is as low as $300.

Mr. PLATT. Five hundred dollars in Connecticut.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is $500 in Connecticut. So that it is impossible for any man to use these banks for the purpose of making investments on which he is to receive large dividends.

There is another fact which has some bearing on the condition of the workingmen in New England. I can take the Senator from Missouri to fifty villages in my State, and almost a limitless number in surrounding States, where every fifth house is owned by operatives, owned by men who have earned them by their own labor—labor in the cotton factories and other manufacturing industries.

It is useless for Senators on the other side to think that they can delude the people of New England by reading from the testimony of men like Mr. Howard and Mr. O'Donnell. They understand this question quite as well as the Senators on the other side of the Chamber as to their own condition and that of the people who are engaged with them in our various industries.

I say to the Senator from Missouri that I know that these statements are not true. I know that from living with these people, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has already said, and there is not a Senator on this floor representing a New England State but what knows they are untrue. You might read testimony here for three months from the character of witnesses of these men and it would make no difference in the facts. It is simply a matter of opinion on their part. There are no statistics of the nature which the Senator alludes to, and we place our opinion side by side with that of Mr. Howard and Mr. O'Donnell.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into any discussion of the merits or demerits of this bill, but I have no objection to the discussion, and I have listened with pleasure to the description of the prosperous condition of the people of New England, not only of the capitalists, but to the glowing description of comfort which surrounds the homes of the operatives in New England. I shall not enter into any question as between the statistics read by the Senator from Missouri and the personal statements of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Rhode Island, but if their personal statements are true that New England is rich, that not only her capitalists are dividing large dividends, but that the operatives in her mills are becoming rich and depositing their surplus in the savings-banks of the country, let me ask what kind of argument that is why the people of the other sections of this country should be taxed to fill the coffers of the capitalists and to make comfortable homes for the operatives of New England?

Why should the farmers in Delaware and in the West, why should the people who plant cotton and work the year round in the South, who are living in abject poverty, be taxed in order that the capitalist and the operatives in New England mills may deposit in the savings-banks their untold millions of wealth? Is it not an argument addressed to the people of this whole country that they are being taxed for the benefit of a limited number of persons?

There are not exceeding 3,000,000 people who are operating in the mills of this country to-day, and yet there are more than 8,000,000 people who are working in the corn-fields and the cotton-fields of this country. Why should they be taxed? They derive no protection from your policy. They are not benefited by heavy taxation upon the necessaries of life, and why should they be longer subjected to this onerous burden of taxation in order that the people of New England, the capitalists of New England, and the operatives in their mills, may be able to pile up their untold millions in the savings institutions of the country?

Why, Senators, you are furnishing one of the very strongest arguments against the justice of your system. Are the farmers of the West, are the farmers of the Middle States, men who go out at early dawn and work in the sun with their families, to be taxed on all they buy, on the clothes they wear, on every particle of machinery that they use in their employments, for all that is subject to the taxation which your Senate bill provides to-day? You propose to keep up this onerous system of taxation upon that class of men in order that your capitalists may put their hundreds of thousands of dollars into the banks and take it out West and put it into mortgages upon Western lands, and carry it down South, as was intimated by the Senator from Connecticut, and put it there, and with your wives living comfortably in their homes which you say they have provided you may put in an average of $800 per family into the savings institutions of New England.

You are furnishing a strong argument why the people of this country should not be taxed longer for the benefit of this favored class. Why should the women who live by hard labor——

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Delaware permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware whether in considering the state of prosperity of the New England States he is not aware that the census every time it has been taken for the last twenty or thirty years has shown that the people of Illinois, of Kansas, of Iowa, of Missouri, of Florida, of Alabama, and of Georgia are exceeding in the amount of their annual increase of wealth far beyond anything that has ever been witnessed in New Ehgland.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I know from personal observation of the people whom I meet in the rural and agricultural sections of this country that there is no people on earth who labor harder than the farmers of this country. I have seen the farmer myself sometimes after his head has grown gray, working day after day at least ten or twelve hours a day, his wife doing the drudgery of the household, and his children at work, and yet all he could do was to make a comfortable and sometimes not a comfortable living for his family——

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I trust the Senator will allow me to proceed.

The farmer often is not able to make a comfortable living, and at the end of the year is scarcely able to pay the bills that have accumulated, notwithstanding the economy he has been compelled to practice; and yet we tax him upon all he wears, upon the dress that his wife wears, upon the flannel that wraps his child, upon the socks upon his baby's feet, and upon everything that enters into his household, upon his implements of industry used in the occupation in which he is engaged; we tax him and tax all his, and yet you say that as the result of that taxation the capitalists of New England are accumulating immense fortunes and putting four or five million dollars in a manufacturing plant, as was said by the Senator from Connecticut, and that the operatives in those mills are putting their vast and untold thousands and millions in the savings-banks of New England.

You have furnished by your statements to-day, Senators, one of the very strongest arguments why the people of this country should wake up to the injustice that is being done by the taxation of a large portion of this country for the benefit of a certain class of men engaged in the manufacturing interests.

Mr. STEWART. Now will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly, but it is unpleasant to be interrupted in the middle of a sentence.

Mr. STEWART. Does not the Senator think it would be cruel to drive all the people into farming, after the description of their suffering which he has given?

Mr. SAULSBURY. You can not drive the New England people into farming. I saw a statement this morning in answer to this question of a home market; a statement was made in one of the leading papers of the country that a few years ago the rural population, that is, the population living in the country and small towns, was about 60 per cent. of the entire population of the State of Massachusetts, and that a change has been brought about so that to-day there is not exceeding 43 per cent. of the people of Massachusetts who live in cities and towns with a population of less than four and five thousand. Why is it, if this home market is to build up the agricultural States, that the agriculturists of Massachusetts have abandoned their farms and gone into the manufacturing business in order to accumulate fortunes?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware refers to the downtrodden farmers of the West. Every time that this question has been discussed they have found a champion on that side of the Chamber, a champion who always exhibits his entire ignorance of their sentiments and of their condition before he sits down. They are as ignorant of the condition of the Western people as they are of the Eastern. They have lost sight of the fact that manufactures have moved West.

They have lost sight of the fact also that there is not any portion of the United States where intelligence is greater than it is in the West. They have lost sight of the fact also that when the people met this question in November it was the farmers in the West who settled it. They have lost sight of the fact that the magnificent majority of eighty-odd thousand in Kansas was from a farming community. They have lost sight of the fact that the majority in the State of Illinois for the doctrine of protection came from the rural districts, from the farms and not from the cities. They have lost sight of the fact that the State of Illinois is the fourth State in the list in manufactures. They have lost sight of the fact that Indiana to-day manufactures almost if not quite as much as Connecticut, and that it was the farmers of Indiana who carried Indiana for Harrison and protection. They have lost sight of the fact that everywhere in the West where the intelligence of the country was appealed to, where men read and where men write, and where men are better informed than in the section they represent, there was a decided vote for the American system of protection.

I want to say to them that there are no people in the West or in the Northwest who are appealing to them to relieve them from the weight of the protective system. The people of Minnesota, when they said they would have a Democratic majority on the question of protection, turned up a bigger majority than they had given in years; and so it may be said of all the Northwest and the West, including the State that I have the honor in part to represent, a non-manufacturing State, but we know enough in the West to know that what is good for New England is good for us if we have got the brains and the courage to take advantage of the system, and that is what we are proposing to do in the West; and that is what, if the South will do, they will have less talk of poverty, and it is that which they can do. Why do they not manufacture? They say New England manufactures. The Senator from Missouri says New England manufactures a fine grade of goods. Does he mean to say they can not manufacture a fine grade of cotton goods in the South? Why not? Every advantage that a New England manufacturer has they have got in the South, and in many portions of it fourfold more advantages than they have in New England. If they lack anything it is the sturdy enterprise, the manual industry of the New England men. The State that the Senator represents is richer in natural wealth than all the States of New England, and why is it not a manufacturing State? Is it for lack of money?

Mr. President, if there is so much money made in New England, as was said here the other day, why do not the people of Missouri borrow that money when they can borrow it at 4 per cent. or at 5 per cent.—6 per cent. is considered a large interest—and put it in manufactures which return, as was stated here to-day, 25 per cent.? Everybody knows that there is nothing in that. There are to-day more than two hundred kinds of railroad bonds in the United States bearing interest at less than 8 per cent., many of them not to exceed 5 per cent., that are selling far above par. There are plenty of railroad bonds in the United States that pay 7 per cent. interest which are selling at from 25 to 45 per cent. premium.

Why do the people put their money in those things if the New Englanders are making such extraordinary and extravagant profits? They are not. The difference between those people and some other people is that the New England people have economy, they have industry, and they have enterprise, and when they have earned a dollar they put it out, and it is a disposition that they have to become the owners of the houses in which they live. And if the South and Southwest want to participate in the great prosperity that comes from this system, nobody is preventing them, nobody denies them the opportunity. Arkansas could be a manufacturing State that would exceed any State in New England if her people would so choose. They have the opportunity and all they lack is the will, the enterprise, the industry, and the courage to take hold of it.

And yet the Senators from all this section of country insist that this is a monopoly. The Senator from Missouri to-day said it was a monopoly. What is to prevent the capitalists of Missouri from being engaged in this monopoly? What is to prevent the capitalists of any section of the country from engaging in manufactures? There can be no monopoly in the manufacture of anything in this country when every single section of the country has an equal advantage with the others so far as the law is concerned, only to be changed by the conditions and the natural advantages; and whenever any section of the country has more natural advantages than New England, I repeat that all this talk about the poverty of New England comes because the men who repeat it on this floor are ignorant of the condition of labor in the East and in the West and in the Northwest.

They have not seen the industries, they have not seen the cozy little homes of New England, they have not seen the honest laborer that has, year after year, added, it may not be a great sum, but yet a sum, until he has accumulated in the savings-banks of this country more money than all the other savings-banks in the world combined, and to-day, making a fair estimate for the money that may be put into such banks by capitalists, there are more than a thousand million dollars in the United States that belong to the men who labor day by day for daily or monthly wages. In the State of New York last year the laboring people put $25,000,000, in addition to what they already had, into the savings-banks of that State.

The Senator may find some man who comes here and talks about the poverty of New England or the poverty of a manufacturing country, and yet he can not find in this country any considerable degree of pauperism. I repeat, with a full knowledge of what I say, that no civilized land under the sun presents so few paupers in proportion to its numbers as the United States, and no land presents so few as that section of country where the protective system is in full force.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate by any protracted observations, but it seems to me while the Senator from Colorado is pointing out the ignorance of persons who do not agree with him in opinion on the subjects which he has discussed, he might have recognized a fact which I think will be recognized by most persons, that under the operation of a protective tariff we are transferring in this country annually more than five hundred and probably more than six hundred millions of dollars from the consumers of manufactured products to the makers of the manufactured products. This fact of itself will account, I think, for a good deal of the wealth of which gentlemen have boasted this evening; and when it is remembered that these five or six hundred millions of dollars are transferred substantially from the West and South, the agricultural portions of the country, to the manufacturing States of the Northeast, we understand another reason why the people of that portion of the country should be prosperous and why the people of other portions of the country should be less prosperous.

I was surprised to hear the Senator from Colorado speak of the prosperity of the West as compared with that of the Northeast. It is true that nature has spread her bounties there; a soil unequaled in its fertility, productions valuable, yet with all the advantage of nature which the great West has, statistics have been shown here that hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of farms in the West are mortgaged to capital, secured to the manufacturers of the East by that process of transfer of capital to which I have referred, from the consumers to the manufacturers. And the fact has been shown here—I shall not go into it now, but Senators will remember it—that relatively the agricultural States have not increased in wealth as the Senator from Colorado supposes, while the manufacturing States have increased enormously in wealth. While they own in the manufacturing States their own property, they own hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of the property of the people of the West and South, and hold mortgages upon their farms to pay for it, which, if enforced, would bankrupt the West to-day.

Mr. President, it is not simply that the people of the manufacturing States are a different people, more thrifty, more industrious than the people elsewhere. We are all of the same race and the same lineage. Give us equal chances and we will all prosper alike or suffer alike. But change the legislation, if you will, so as to tax the manufacturing States 47 per cent. on their purchases of all such articles as are taxed as imports, and transfer that annually to the West and South for ten years, and you will find the West and South teeming with wealth; you will find there the beautiful cottages, the ornamented grounds, the pleasant homes that Senators have described as being in New England, and our friends of New England would come to the conclusion that they were a pretty lazy and lousy set after they had stood that tax for ten years. Senators ought to understand that they may make such speeches as they please, but there stands the great monumental question unanswered and unanswerable, that hundreds of millions of dollars are being transferred by operation of law, without price and without consideration, annually from the consumers of manufactured products to the manufacturers themselves.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Texas would study the statistics of the Government he would find out that the poverty-stricken country of which he speaks has increased faster in wealth since 1860 than the New England section of which he speaks. He would find, Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I would like to ask the Senator a question at a convenient time, if he will permit me. He can state the answer very much better than I can. I will ask him whether the mortgages which the Western people give to the Eastern people are, as a rule, an indication of embarrassment or poverty, or whether they are not simply a young community, young men getting the advantages of credit in developing their farms, buying their farms, borrowing the money to pay for them, and then paying off the mortgages; whether, in other words, the Western mortgages are not put on by men who are prosperous and thriving?

Mr. TELLER. I will say in reply to that, before I touch another subject, that the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, who sent out special examiners for the purpose of determining what was the condition of the farmers of the United States, shows that in nearly all the States, if not all, the farm indebtedness has been decreasing for a number of years. It is less to-day in proportion than it was ten years ago. It is less than it was twenty years ago.

Now, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, in a new community a man starting a new farm, with no money, after he has gone on and made his home, if it is a homestead, wants money for improvements, he wants money for stock, and he borrows all the way from a few dollars up to a few thousand upon his farm. I deny (and the statistics of the Government will show that it is not true) that the farmers of this country are weighed down with debt. It is a fancy that certain Senators indulge in. Not long ago a St. Louis paper, the Republican, published what purported to be the indebtedness of the farmers of the United States, and actually took the census report of 1880 of the valuation of the farms in the United States and palmed it off on the people of the United States as a true statement of the farm mortgages; and so credulous are some people that in the House of Representatives that was read as a fact, and it has been repeated in the Senate. It was stated that there was more than a thousand millions of indebtedness on the farms in Illinois, while the entire valuation as shown was a little over $1,000,000,000.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator seriously state that the St. Louis Republican took the whole valuation of farm lands in the United States and said that was the amount of mortgage debt in the West?

Mr. TELLER. I stated that it was published in the St. Louis Republican. They stated, they did not know whether truthfully or not, that a Missouri member of Congress in the other House presented it as a fact to the House.

Mr. VEST. The Senator is certainly mistaken.

Mr. TELLER. I am not. The State of Michigan was put down at what the valuation of its land was. The State of Kansas was so put down. The State of Illinois was put down within $9,000,000 of its real valuation. That statement has gone abroad, and has appeared in so respectable a paper as the Bankers' Magazine, of the city of Chicago, as a fact.

Mr. VEST. All this can be very easily ascertained by reference to the paper on file. I recollect that statement, and I recollect distinctly that the St. Louis Republican said at the time that this was an estimate based upon reports to the different granges, the local granges, who had taken an estimate of the amount of mortgages upon the farm lands in the State of Illinois.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I have the statement here.

Mr. VEST. Very good; read it and let us see.

Mr. TELLER. Wait a moment.

Mr. VEST. Will not the Senator from Colorado allow the statement to be read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. I will yield in a moment. Before that is read I wish to say that it has been repeatedly changed in its figures. There have been very trifling changes as a general rule, but as it was read in Mr. BLAND'S speech in the other House it is verbatim as to several particular States.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me, I will read the statement.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. It is as follows:

It would be instructive to have the exact figures showing farm mortgages in the United States. There is no Federal law nor general law in the States for collecting the statistics, and they can therefore only be estimated. A correspondent of the New York Times, writing from Gypsum City, Kans., taking for a basis the recent statement that one-half the farms in Michigan are mortgaged, makes the following estimate for the ten leading Western States:

In Ohio	$701,000,000
In Indiana	398,000,000
In Illinois	620,000,000
In Wisconsin	250,000,000
In Michigan	350,000,000
In Minnesota	175,000,000
In Iowa	351,000,000
In Nebraska	140,000,000
In Kansas	200,000,000
In Missouri	237,000,000
Total farm mortgages in the ten States	3,422,000,000

Mr. TELLER. What does it say of Illinois?

Mr. COKE. Illinois is put down at $620,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. I am not mistaken at all. Kansas was given at $235,000,000. A member from Illinois denounced it on the floor of the House when it was made, and said it would be equivalent to a mortgage of $30 an acre on every acre of land in the State. Yet it has been practically repeated when everybody knows that there can be no statement made definitely of the mortgages on the farms in this country.

Mr. VEST. The Senator has Spofford's Almanac?

Mr. TELLER. I have Spofford's Almanac.

Mr. VEST. Is the statement as to the value of farm lands in the United States identical with the amounts read by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TELLER. That is not the statement that was published in the St. Louis paper. It is not the statement published in the House debates. It has been modified, for I distinctly recollect that the State of Illinois was put down at one thousand million dollars, which is within $9,000,000 of the total valuation of all the farm lands in that State.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that the statement I have just read was taken from the Republican, and the comments of the Republican are given with the statement.

Mr. TELLER. When was the statement taken from the Republican?

Mr. COKE. I suppose six or eight months ago.

Mr. TELLER. I am not mistaken about it, because I recollect it very well. To say that there is a mortgage of $17 or $18 an acre on every farm in Illinois is a slander upon the whole State of Illinois. That all the farming land in Kansas is mortgaged except $35,000,000 is another slander. That is just in keeping with many other statements that have been made. It is not true.

Mr. President, I know something about the Western country. I know something about the State of Illinois. The population is greater, but there are not anything like as many men suffering under mortgages in the State of Illinois as there were thirty years ago. There may be as many mortgages in the State, but the mortgagors are able to pay. They are getting better prices for their crops than they got thirty years ago under the semi-free-trade system.

I wish to go back to what I started to say. The only thing I intended to say was with reference to the increase of wealth. The State of Missouri, represented by the Senator who has talked to-day about this monopoly, has increased faster in wealth than the State of Massachusetts. So you may take State after State in the West, and the increase has been greater than it has been in any of the New England States. All this attempt to make it appear that one section of the country had by some hocus pocus or other got control of a system that inures to its benefit and to the destruction of all other portions of the country is hardly up to the intelligence of the people of this nation.

I wish to repeat that the farmers of New York met this question when they sent down to Harlem bridge that magnificent majority in favor of protection. In the farming counties of that State we increased our vote, and, as I said before, the vote of the farming counties, where the intelligence of the State is, overcame the great city of New York, with its ignorance and vice. Do the Senators think they can persuade the people of New York, or of Illinois, or of Indiana that the protective system is not good when they have realized its benefits, when they have seen manufactures grow up by their side and increase not only the price of their commodities but increase the price of their lands? To-day just in proportion as a State manufactures, so is the value of its farms. Where they manufacture, there the land brings a high price, there labor is well compensated and remunerated.

The lowest labor and the poorest labor and the most degraded labor in the United States is in those States that decline to manufacture, that decline to take advantage of this American system. The best paid labor, the most independent labor, the most powerful labor, that which makes itself felt on society, is the labor of the manufacturing regions of the United States. New England is not the whole center of manufacturing. I repeat that Illinois is the fourth manufacturing State in the United States. Indiana is nearly up to Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. Quite.

Mr. TELLER. Quite, I have no doubt, by this time, and the next census will show that Indiana manufactures are of more value than those of the State of Connecticut. They manufacture, and their farms by the side of the manufactories have a market. It was the rural districts of that State, too, that determined the electoral vote of that State in the recent election.

The Senator who sits before me [Mr. PLATT] suggests that South Dakota has $100,000,000 of assessed value of property. That is not a manufacturing Territory. They have grown rich. The truth is the whole country has grown rich; and the great high-priest of free trade in the city of Boston, Mr. Atkinson, declared that there never had been a time in the history of this country when the distribution of wealth was so uniform as it is to-day. It is a fact that every man who keeps close to the people and who keeps abreast of the condition of affairs in this country knows that there never was a time when so many men lived in their own houses, when so many men who labor have all the comforts of life, as they have in this country now. It is a notorious fact that just in proportion as the people have seized upon the advantages of this system and applied it, just so they have prospered and grown rich and happy and comfortable.

I suggest that it would be a good deal better for those regions that have not taken advantage of it to turn their attention to seeing how they can get some of this prosperity than to stand here growling at the prosperity of other sections of the country.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, one word as respects the growth of Western States, and in response to the Senator from Texas, who thinks that we are growing poorer for the benefit of New England. I do not wish to enter into that discussion, but I take this interesting volume called the American Almanac——

Mr. GEORGE. For what year?

Mr. ALLISON. It is for the year 1888, the latest. I believe that of 1889 is not yet printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not out yet.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe a table showing that Iowa in 1860 had an estimated valuation of $366 per capita. Ten years later she had an estimated valuation of $601 per capita, and in 1880, $871 per capita, showing a reasonably vigorous and healthy increase in the State of Iowa, which is an agricultural State, during these three decades.

Mr. HAWLEY. There has been an enormous increase in population as well as an increase in per capita wealth.

Mr. VEST. What is the per capita of Massachusetts and Rhode Island?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not on that point just at this moment. In twenty years the State of Iowa more than doubled its per capita valuation, and as a matter of fact its population substantially increased more than double during those twenty years. The population of Iowa in 1880, as I remember (it is not given here), was 1,624,000 in round numbers. In 1860 it was about 660,000, increasing 1,000,000 between 1860 and 1880, and passing through some distressing periods during that time, which I shall not stop to relate.

I would not have said a word but for the fact that the Senator from Texas has taken occasion to put into the RECORD a statement that the farmers of Iowa owe $350,000,000. We have in Iowa 33,000,000 acres of land, and I think I can say that it is nearly all arable land. Certainly ninety-nine one-hundredths of those acres are acres fit for cultivation. According to that statement, published of course in a newspaper, reiterated in the House of Representatives, and now resurrected by the Senator from Texas, it would disclose a mortgage of $10 per acre upon each acre of land in the State of Iowa, and a fraction besides. Is there any man of sense or any man who has any knowledge on the subject who believes that?

When that statement was first made a member of the House of Representatives telegraphed to the governor of Iowa to ascertain as nearly as could be ascertained from the State census of 1885 and other documents in the capitol of the State the actual indebtedness of the people of the State of Iowa, including indebtedness of every name and nature. The answer was that it was less than $70,000,000, and I venture the statement now, in the presence of the Senate, that all the subsisting mortgages upon the farms of Iowa do not reach $70,000,000.

I wish to say another thing, because I do not intend that Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island shall run away with the idea that they are the only prosperous people in this country.

Mr. PLATT. We do not.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the Senator from Texas seemed to carry the idea that we were all in poverty and rags except New England. I live in a city of 30,000 people. We take a semi-decennial census in the State of Iowa. That was taken in 1885. The people of the city in which I live are all working people, because we have not so accumulated means there that we have a capitalistic, monopolistic, bondholding, or money-lending class. We are a people who are at work day by day, beginning in the morning as early as they do in Texas, and working as late as they do there at night.

Of all those people more than four-fifths live in houses which they own, and I venture the statement that a careful ascertainment of the population of the city in which I live will disclose that seven-eighths of the people of that city own the houses in which they dwell. I merely mention this for the purpose of showing that a great deal of this statement as respects the prosperity of different sections of our country must be taken cum grano.

I wish to say another thing, and I do not intend to say it as respects the tariff. Our system, whatever it is, whether it be our land system, our labor system, or our system of government, evolves in every State in this Union a condition of prosperity not found elsewhere; and I venture to say that in the State in which I live there is at this moment a high condition of prosperity among our agriculturists, among our laborers and producers whatever they may be engaged in producing. As respects our present condition, I must dissent, therefore, from the idea suggested by the Senator from Texas nearest to me [Mr. REAGAN] that we are making great contributions to other sections of this country at our own expense. They may be prospering more rapidly than we are.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just at that point? As to the increase of per capita wealth between 1870 and 1880 in the three New England States mentioned, it was $105 per capita in Massachusetts and $153 in Rhode Island, while in Connecticut there was a decrease of $73 per capita between 1870 and 1880. The increase in Iowa in the same decade was $270 per capita.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator for the interruption. It is only a confirmation of what seemed to me to be the condition of prosperity in my own State.

These are the conditions in the part of country in which I live and about which I have special knowledge. Whilst it is true, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] has stated, that there are mortgages upon farms in my State, it is also true that in the greater part these mortgages are in the newer portions of our State and have been put upon farms for the purpose of their rapid development; and in that sense probably you may account to a large degree for the great prosperity in Iowa between 1870 and 1880. When the census of 1870 was taken about one-sixth of the northwestern portion of the State in which I live and which I represent with my colleague on this floor, was practically an uninhabited section, that is to say, it contained a sparse population. Between 1870 and this moment that has become the most prosperous agricultural region in our State, and it is dotted over with prosperous farms. In every part of it railroads have threaded their pathway through it; and thus that is a prosperous region.

But the men who are engaged in developing these farms and opening up these new communities have been compelled to go to the East perhaps, or to certain agencies, to procure money with which to aid them rapidly to develop these farms. That is what they have done. Therefore, so far from these mortgages being an indication of poverty, they are in many cases, perhaps in nine-tenths of the cases, indications of rapid and successful development.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, if he will allow me to put a question on that subject, whether there is any considerable defalcation in the payment of interest or of installments of principal on those farm mortgages in his State to which he alludes?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no accurate information on that subject, but incidentally I have some knowledge, and that is that on the mortgages in my State there is scarcely a defalcation, and if a defalcation occurs it is only for a brief period. In other words, the occupation of the lawyer, the counselor, and the attorney is practically an occupation of the past in my State, as members of the profession complain, for the reason that there are no foreclosures of mortgages.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator one additional question, and that is whether as a general rule the annual payments of interest and installments of principal are not paid from the profits of the farms?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly they are. In the northwestern region of which I speak, and which goes far into the Territory of Dakota, I have known instances where farmers have made the cost of their lands in a single year on the product of a good farm.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I have learned a good deal in the course of this debate. I have learned among other things that the higher the tax imposed upon the goods the cheaper the goods. I have now learned from the Senator from Iowa that a heavy mortgage on the plantation is an evidence of the prosperity of the owner.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to interrupt the Senator long enough to say to him that he has not learned that fact from me, because I did not state it.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator stated that it was not an evidence of want of thrift or prosperity, but that, on the contrary, it was evidence of a high degree of prosperity. Did he not say that?

Mr. ALLISON. I stated, and I repeat, that the fact that a farmer or a merchant, if you please, or a manufacturer borrows money is not necessarily an indication of poverty, but it may be an indication, and in most cases in my own State it is an indication of prosperity.

Mr. VANCE. That is substantially what I said. That is a very important economic fact, Mr. President.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] did the section of country in which I live the honor to intimate that it was want of intelligence that caused the people there to think that they were not enriched by taxation, and he said that all the champions of the agricultural people who rose on this side displayed quite as much ignorance on the subject as they did. Colonel Ingersoll is once reported to have said concerning men who aver that mankind are superior to womankind that under the laws of evidence they could not put themselves in evidence of the fact. With the statement before me, I think I can say to the Senator from Colorado, with his claim of superior intelligence on the part of the representatives and people of Colorado, that he can not put himself in evidence of the fact. Neither can the Senator from Iowa.

I was going to say that having learned these very important politico-economic truths, and desiring to meditate over them during the quiet hours of the night, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would withdraw that motion for a moment. I wish to say one or two words only on this question.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will renew the motion when he is done, I will withdraw it.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. The Senator from Iowa has stated substantially what I tried to get the floor to say some time ago, and of course a great deal better than I could have said it; but I wish to say that both the Senators from Texas and the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from North Carolina, when they speak of the mortgages in the West as an evidence of want of prosperity, seem to me to overlook what is the history of all vigorous youth, whether it is the youth of an individual or the youth of a community. I suppose that almost every thriving and capable young man who starts in America starts in debt to some extent. He gets married or he wants to get married, and the first thing he does is to get a little piece of land and put up a house and mortgage it; and that transaction is the one thing which anchors him to the community where he lives and makes him a fixed, settled, thriving, steadfast citizen.

Now, that is the history of our Western States. What would have happened with one of our new Territories, with its mines, with its agricultural lands, with its railroads, if it were not for the credit system in this country? How many of the Western railroads which have opened those countries would you have had if the people had waited until they had laid up and saved the money which they paid for them? How many Western farms, how many Western farm-houses, or barns, or fences, or other improvements would you have had if you had waited until their owners wrung out of the soil, without credit, the means to make the payment?

These debts, as an almost universal rule, are the signs of thriving, vigorous life and of good credit. They are the things which have enabled these Western communities to be developed and to grow. Instead, therefore, of being, as the Senators state, a sign of dependence, it is a sign of thrift and growth and rapid life.

Mr. VANCE. I renew my motion.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me just to put in evidence one statement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; if he will renew the motion.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Colorado made the statement that the St. Louis Republican, a Democratic paper, had stated, and it had been repeated by a Democratic member of Congress in the other House, that the amount of mortgages on Western farm lands was equal to the whole amount of the estimated value of the lands.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no; I did not make any such statement.

Mr. VEST. What was the Senator's statement?

Mr. TELLER. I said that they published the statement of the amount of indebtedness, which I say was equal to the estimated value. They did not say it was equal. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. VEST. Very good. Now, I happen to have——

Mr. TELLER. I said they published Kansas as having $235,000,000 of farm mortgages, and that was the value of the farm lands in the State in 1880.

Mr. VEST. I happen to have in my scrap-book the identical article, which I thought I could not have forgotten, from the St. Louis Republican. It says:

They tell us the agricultural States have grown rich, too. They have also prospered under protection. See how farms have multiplied in the West and Northwest, and see how railroads have been built in Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and the States and Territories west of the Mississippi, even to the Pacific—and how this vast region has been subdued to settlement!

All true. But who owns these farms and railroads in the Western States? In one word, who owns the West? The people of the West, it might be answered, but the answer would not be true, as a few indisputable figures will sufficiently prove.

First, as to farms. In 1880 there were 138,500 farms in Kansas, 256,000 in Illinois, 194,000 in Indiana, 247,000 in Ohio, 185,300 in Iowa, 154,000 in Michigan, and 134,300 in Wisconsin, making a total of 1,309,100 in seven States named.

Now, it gives the statement as to the amount of indebtedness:

Recent statistics—

Just what I said this paper stated—collected by granger associations and printed in farm journals make the following exhibit of farm mortgages in these same States.

Mr. TELLER. Now, let the Senator read them.

Mr. VEST. Well. The table given is as follows:

Kansas	$235,000,000
Illinois	1,000,000,000
Indiana	635,000,000
Ohio	1,227,000,000
Iowa	567,000,000
Michigan	500,000,000
Wisconsin	357,000,000
Total	4,521,000,000

These figures—

Says the paper—

are so startling in their enormity as to seem incredible. We do not vouch for their accuracy.

Mr. TELLER. I did not say they did.

Mr. VEST. The paper continues:

They represent the 1,309,100 farms in seven Western States as incumbered, etc.

They do not pretend to vouch for their accuracy. This paper never pretended to vouch for it.

Mr. TELLER. I did not say that it did.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator to make the absolute statement that this had been repeated in the House of Representatives.

The Senator from Iowa, I may be permitted to say, speaks of the wealth in his State. I have here the statement of the railroad commissioners of Iowa as to the ownership of the railroads in Iowa, which is of course counted in the wealth of the State of Iowa:

The last report—

The official report—of the Iowa railroad commissioners states that only one out of forty stockholders in Iowa roads lives in the State, and only one-seventieth of the capital stock is held in the State. In Illinois a similar condition of things prevails.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to interrupt the Senator right there. In the estimate, as I understand it, in Spofford's Almanac, the railroads are not included. It includes the real and personal property. The railroads in my State as capitalized would be more than the whole statement of 1880 as to the wealth of Iowa.

Mr. VEST. I happen to have that right here.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, let us hear what it is.

Mr. VEST. Iowa, stocks and bonds, $105,000,000. That is, in railroads. Net earnings, $2,180,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will withdraw my remark. If it is only $105,000,000, it cuts a very small figure in the wealth of the State.

Mr. VEST. I happen to have those statistics. It gives also the railroads in the different States. In Kansas the stocks and bonds of railroads by the last report are $195,700,000, and their net earnings amount to $9,440,000; Illinois, stocks and bonds $640,000,000, and their earnings $16,000,000; Indiana, stocks and bonds $320,000,000, net earnings $5,700,000; Iowa, stocks and bonds $105,000,000, net earnings $2,180,000; Michigan, stocks and bonds $214,000,000, net earnings $5,000,000; Wisconsin, stocks and bonds $236,000,000, net earnings $6,900,000; Ohio, stocks and bonds $767,000,000, net earnings $12,300,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I wish to say a word about railroads. I may have been mistaken as to the inclusion of railways in the real and personal property in Iowa, but inasmuch as the total real and personal property of Iowa, as shown by the census of 1880, is $1,415,000,000, in round numbers, as I recollect, not having the book before me, it may possibly include railroad property. If it does, it only includes $105,000,000 in value, according to the statement of the Senator from Missouri; and that the indebtedness of the State is only 5 per cent. upon the wealth of the State, as shown by Spofford's Almanac.

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt that Iowa is a wealthy State.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to detain the Senate, but I wish to show that I was correct in my statement, and that the quotation of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is not correct.

In the report of which I spoke Kansas is put down at $235,000,000 of mortgages. That is the entire value of the farm lands of Kansas, lacking $178,936.

Mr. VEST. The assessed valuation of all States is given just below.

Mr. TELLER. That is what I am talking about. They took this list. It was not an accident. The farm lands of Illinois are put down as having $1,000,000,000 of mortgages. The value of the farm lands of Illinois is $1,009,000,000, so that it is within $9,000,000 of the amount. Ohio is put down as having $1,227,000,000 of farm mortgages, which is $100,000,000 more than the value of all the farms in the State in 1880. Michigan is put down at a little more than the value of all the farm lands in the State, just a trifle, it being $499,000,000, and they put the mortgages at $500,000,000.

So you may take the whole list through; there is not a word of truth in the statement. I admit the paper stated that it did not vouch for its accuracy, but it went out and was adopted, as I said, by a member of the other House, and has been repeated on the stump again and again all over the country. It is not true, and to-morrow when the Senate has time I shall put in the RECORD what the Agricultural Bureau said about the farm mortgages in the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 3, 1889, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 2, 1889.

The House met, pursuant to adjournment, at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of the 21st day of December last was read and approved.

PRINTING FOR DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting additional estimates from the Secretary of State of printing for that Department for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FEES AND EXPENSES UNITED STATES MARSHALS, SOUTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-

General, inclosing a letter from the United States marshal of South Carolina relative to the appropriation for fees and expenses of marshals for the fiscal year 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of fact and of law in certain spoliation claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

CHARTING THE SKY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of an appropriation for the purpose of photographic telescope and pointers, and for the construction of buildings for the same, for the proposed international project for charting the sky; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CARUTH, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. DALZELL, until January 7, on account of important business.

To Mr. DIBBLE, until January 8.

To Mr. LYMAN, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MOFFITT, indefinitely.

To Mr. O'DONNELL, for two days.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Ship-Canal Company of Nicaragua, with the amendments agreed to in the Committee of the Whole, should be printed in the RECORD for the information of members.

The bill and amendments are as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Frederick Billings, Charles P. Daly, Daniel Ammen, Francis A. Stout, Horace L. Hotchkiss, Edward F. Beale, Hiram Hitchcock, C. Ridgley Goodwin, A. C. Cheney, J. F. O'Shaughnessy, H. C. Taylor, J. W. Miller, A. S. Crowninshield, A. G. Menocal, Charles H. Stebbins, T. Harrison Garrett, Jules Aldige, R. A. Lancaster, Alfred E. Mills, Gustav E. Kissel, Horace Fairbanks, George H. Robinson, Alfred B. Darling, Joseph E. Macdonald, James Roosevelt, Christian Devries, Frederick F. Thompson, Henry A. Parr, and such other persons as may be associated with them and their successors are hereby constituted and created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law, by the name, style, and title of "The Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," for the construction, equipment, management, and operation of a ship-canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, either entirely through the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua or through Nicaragua and in part through the territory of the Republic of Costa Rica, with such collateral, connecting, or cross canals as may be necessary to connect therewith, and to exercise such other powers as have been conferred by the Government of Nicaragua, by the concession of that Republic to the Nicaragua Canal Association, through Mr. A. G. Menocal, its representative, and dated the 23d day of March, A. D. 1887, and finally approved by the legislative and executive authority of the Republic on the 20th, 23d, and 24th days of April, A. D. 1887, and such powers as the Republic of Costa Rica may confer of the same kind as those named in said concession; and the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, by that name shall have perpetual succession; may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended in all courts of law and equity within the United States; may make and have a common seal; and shall have and possess the rights, powers, and privileges usually possessed by similar companies. It may receive, purchase, hold, and convey such real and personal estate, property, and rights of property or concessionary rights as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act; may issue stock to the amount of the value thereof in payment therefor, and the stock so issued shall be declared and taken to be full-paid stock and not liable to any further calls or assessments; may do all lawful things to secure the full enjoyment of the powers, privileges, rights, benefits, and grants contained in any canal concession so made by the Republic of Nicaragua or to be made by the Republic of Costa Rica, as aforesaid; and to aid in the construction of said canal and to carry out the purposes of this act, the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua is hereby authorized to issue its bonds, and to secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, including its franchise to be a corporation. The principal office of said corporation shall be in the city of New York, and all legal process may be served upon the person who may at the time be in charge of said office or upon the attorney of said company, whose name and address shall be certified by the president of the company; and such certificate shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the United States.

The following amendments to section 1 are reported by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union:

By Mr. BAYNE:

In line 42, section 1, insert, just before the word "value," the words "fair and reasonable."

By Mr. HOLMAN:

Add at the end of the first section: "Provided, however, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to commit the United States to any liability whatever for or on account of said company, nor shall the United States be held in any wise liable or responsible in any form or by any implication for any debt or liability in any form which said company may incur, nor be held as guarantying any engagement or contract of said company, or as having assumed by virtue of this act, or otherwise, any responsibility for the acts or proceedings of said company in any foreign country, or contracts or engagements entered into in the United States.

"And this proviso shall be printed on every bond, contract, certificate of stock, or other obligation issued by said company."

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said company shall consist of not less than 1,000,000 shares of $100 each, with the right to increase the capital stock to 2,000,000 shares of $100 each, upon the vote of two-thirds of the stock of said company at any time outstanding, which shares shall in all respects be deemed personal property and shall be transferable in such a manner as the by-laws of said corporation may provide. Five incorporators, who shall be chosen by a majority of the number from those named in this act, shall have power to open books of subscription to the capital stock of said company in the city of New York, and at such other places in the United States, Nicaragua, or elsewhere, as they may designate, who shall receive all subscriptions for stock; and no stock shall be transferable except upon the books of the company provided for that purpose. The said incorporators shall give thirty days' notice of the time and place of the opening of said books, by publication in one daily newspaper in New York City, and one newspaper in Managua, Nicaragua, and one in San José, Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic. Sixty days' previous notice shall be given of the payment required, of the time and place of payment by publication in one daily newspaper in the city of New York, and in one newspaper in Managua, Nicaragua, and one in San José, Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic; and in case any stockholder shall neglect or refuse to pay, in pursuance of such notice, the stock held by him may be sold to the highest bidder for cash, according to the regulations to be made therefor in the by-laws of said company. The directors hereinafter provided for may adopt regulations and by-laws not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

By Mr. PAYSON:

Add to section 2: "All bonds, stocks, and certificates issued for or as part of the capital of the company shall be issued at the principal office in the city of New York."

And add to the above amendment the following:

"All shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities of this company shall be disposed of only for cash, to be paid into the company treasury and used for corporate purposes: Provided, That this shall not apply to bonds or securities issued under Article L of the concession of Nicaragua to the canal association."

By Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota:

After section 2 add the following words:

"SEC. 3. That no certificate for stock shall be issued till at least 10 per cent. of the same shall be fully paid for in money at the par value of said stock, and the money deposited in the treasury of said company, and said stock so subscribed shall not be assignable until the whole of the same shall be so paid in, and no payment on account of the capital of said company shall be made except in money, and said company is hereby prohibited from returning or repaying any part of the money so paid. No bonds in excess of the amount of capital paid and received shall be authorized or issued until such paid capital shall amount to the sum of $5,000,000. No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders, or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Every person violating or aiding in the violation of the foregoing provisions shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

SEC. 3. That the affairs of the said company shall be managed by a board of directors, fifteen in number, who shall hold their office for three years and until their successors are duly chosen and qualified, and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States. At the first election five shall be chosen by the stockholders for one year, five for two years, and five for three years, and at each annual election thereafter five shall be chosen by the stockholders for three years. The said board shall elect from its number a president, who shall be a citizen and resident of the United States, and one or more vice-presidents of the company, who shall hold office for such terms as the by-laws of said board may provide and until their successors are duly elected and shall have qualified.

By Mr. LANHAM:

In line 11, section 3, after the word "company," insert "who shall also be citizens and residents of the United States."

By Mr. HOLMAN:

Strike out in lines 4 and 5, section 3, "and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States," and insert "the directors shall be citizens of the United States or of Nicaragua, and a majority of such directors shall be citizens and residents of the United States."

SEC. 4. That for the management and disposition of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the said company the board of directors may make such by-laws, rules, and regulations as may conform to the authority granted in such canal concession or concessions, and not be inconsistent with this act or the laws of the United States or the existing treaty stipulations of the United States with the Government of Nicaragua or of Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic; and may fix the time for election of directors, and in case of vacancy in said board, caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, may fill the same. No person shall be a director who is not a stockholder, and any one ceasing to be a stockholder shall cease to be a director. All meetings of stockholders shall be held at the office of the company in the city of New York, and at least one such meeting shall be held in each year; but failure to elect directors on the day appointed by said by-laws shall not be deemed to dissolve said company, but such election may be holden on any day appointed thereafter by the directors first giving thirty days' notice thereof, in manner aforesaid. The directors, of whom eight, including the president, shall be a quorum, shall have full power touching the election or appointment of all officers of the company, and said officers shall hold office at the will and pleasure of said board.

By Mr. MACDONALD:

Add to section 4 the following:

"Provided, That no change of concessions heretofore or hereafter granted by the Nicaraguan and Costa Rica Governments for or in behalf of the construction of said canal which in any manner affects the rights of American citizens to the use of said canal, or which affects the right of the Government of the United States to have a voice in the governmental control of the use of same, shall be made until the consent of the Government of the United States to such change shall have been first given thereto."

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construed to in any wise restrict or impair any right of the United States under any treaty in force with the Republic of Nicaragua.

By Mr. BLAND:

Add to section 5:

"And nothing herein shall be construed to estop this Government from asserting at any time any rights or powers that may now exist by virtue of the laws of nations or that may be acquired through treaty stipulations with respect to the right of transportation of the citizens of the United States or their property over this canal or the country through which the same may be constructed, or to transport troops or munitions of war in time of peace or war."

By Mr. CULBERSON:

Add at the end of section 5 the following:

"And nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided for in this act."

By Mr. BAKER, of New York:

Add as new section:

"Said company shall make a report on the first Monday of December in each year to the Secretary of the Interior, which shall be duly verified by the president and secretary thereof, giving such detailed statement of its affairs and of its assets and liabilities as may be required by the Secretary of the Interior, and any false statement so made shall be deemed perjury and punishable as such. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to require such annual statement and to prescribe the form thereof and the particulars to be given thereby."

Make "section 5" read "section 6," and "section 6" read "section 7."

SEC. 6. That Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act, when in its judgment the public good may so require.

By Mr. MAISH:

Add to section 6:

"Provided, That the construction of said ship-canal shall be commenced in good faith within three years."

By Mr. BLAND:

Add to section 6:

"Congress hereby reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, and to regulate the toll or tariff rates for the transportation of persons or property by this company or its assigns."

By Mr. BAKER, of Illinois:

Add, as section 6, the following:

"SEC. 6. That at any time hereafter the Government of the United States shall have the right, at its own option, to acquire by purchase the entire property of said company in said canal and its appurtenances at a price equal to the actual cost thereof, with interest on such cost at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum."

Mr. PAYSON offered the following amendment, which was rejected in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but it was agreed a vote should be taken upon it in the House:

Strike out all after the word "act," line 41, page 3, to the word "may," in line 44, and insert:

"All shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities which the company may issue to raise the corporate capital shall be executed and issued at the principal office in the city of New York; and all such shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities shall be disposed of only for cash, to be paid into the company treasury and used for corporate purposes: Provided, That this shall not apply to bonds or securities issued under Article L (50) of the concession of Nicaragua to the canal association."

It was also agreed a separate vote in the House should be taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, printed above.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the Committee on Printing be allowed one hour for the consideration of its business by the House. Quite a number of bills which have been considered by that committee may never be reached unless an order of this kind be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, one hour be set apart for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Printing. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call the committees for reports. The call having been concluded,

The SPEAKER said: The hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees begins at 12 o'clock and 13 minutes. The call rests with the Committee on the Militia, if claimed by that committee. The bill called up by the committee was left unfinished at the conclusion of the hour, and it was agreed, on account of the absence of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], that the committee should be passed over without losing its right. If that committee does not desire to occupy the present morning hour the Committee on War Claims, which has also been passed over, is next entitled to present its business.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understood the Chair to call the Committee on the Militia. I understood the committee had the privilege of waiving its right for the time being.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Militia had an unfinished measure pending at the expiration of its hour, and on the subsequent day the committee was passed over because of the absence of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], who is also absent this morning.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask that the order with reference to the call of that committee be continued.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so regards it.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask that the Committee on War Claims be passed over this morning without losing its place.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

The SPEAKER proceeded with the call of committees.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania (when the Committee on the Library was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on the Library be passed over without losing its place.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE IN BUREAU OF ENGRAVING, ETC.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when the Committee on Printing was called). I am directed by the Committee on Printing to call up the bill (H. R. 6172) providing for additional leave of absence for employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this bill the employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall be granted in each year thirty days' leave of absence with pay, instead of fifteen days, as at present, so as to place said employés on an equal footing with other employés of the Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEES IN CLAIMS FOR INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. MATSON. The Committee on Invalid Pensions on a previous call was passed over with the understanding that it should not lose its place. I desire now, on behalf of that committee, to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4982) prohibiting the allowance of fee in any claim for increase of pension on account of the increase of disability for which the pension was allowed.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has reported what is substantially a substitute for this bill. Is it desired that the original bill as well as the substitute be read?

Mr. MATSON. Yes, sir.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act approved July 4, 1884, entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes," be amended by adding to the first proviso, after the word "nor," the following: "shall any fee be demanded, received, or allowed;" so that the section as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That section 4786 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4786. The agent or attorney of record in the prosecution of the case may cause to be filed with the Commissioner of Pensions duplicate articles of agreement, without additional cost to the claimant, setting forth the fee agreed upon by the parties, which agreement shall be executed in the presence of and certified by some officer competent to administer oaths. In all cases where application is made for pension or bounty land, and no agreement is filed with the Commissioner as herein provided, the fee shall be $10 and no more. And such articles of agreement as may hereafter be filed with the Commissioner of Pensions are not authorized, nor will they be recognized except in claims for original pensions, claims for increase of pension on account of a new disability, in claims for restoration where a pensioner's name has been or may hereafter be dropped from the pension-rolls, on testimony taken by a special examiner, showing that the disability or cause of death on account of which the pension was allowed did not originate in the line of duty, and in cases of dependent relatives whose names have been or may hereafter be dropped from the rolls on like testimony, upon the ground of non-dependence, and in such other cases of difficulty and trouble as the Commissioner of Pensions may see fit to recognize them: Provided, That no greater fee than $10 shall be demanded, received, or allowed in any claim for pension or bounty land granted by special act of Congress, nor shall any fee be demanded, received, or allowed in any claim for increase of pension on account of the increase of the disability for which the pension has been allowed: And provided further, That no fee shall be demanded, received, or allowed in any claim for arrears of pension or arrears of increase of pension allowed by any act of Congress passed subsequent to the date of the allowance of the original claims in which such arrears of pension or of increase of pension may be allowed.

"'The articles of agreement herein provided for shall be in substance as follows, to wit:

"'ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

"'Whereas I, —— ——, late a —— in Company ——, of the —— Regiment of —— Volunteers, war of 1861 (or if the service be different, here state the name), having made application for pension under the laws of the United States:

"'Now this agreement witnesseth that for and in consideration of the services done and to be done in the premises, I hereby agree to allow my attorney, —— ——, of ——, the fee of —— dollars, which shall include all amounts to be paid for any services in furtherance of said claim; and said fee shall not be demanded by or payable to my said attorney (or attorneys), in whole or in part, except in case of the granting of my pension by the Commissioner of Pensions; and then the same shall be paid to him (or them) in accordance with the provisions of sections 4768 and 4769 of the Revised Statutes.

"'(Claimant's signature.)

"'(Two witnesses' signatures.)

"'STATE OF ——, County of ——, ss:

"'Be it known that on this the —— day of ——, A. D. 188—, personally appeared the above-named —— ——, who, after having had read over to ——, in the hearing and presence of the two attesting witnesses, the contents of the foregoing articles of agreement, voluntarily signed and acknowledged the same to be —— free act and deed.

"'(Official signature.)

"'And now, to wit, this —— day of ——, anno Domini 188— I (or we) accept the provisions contained in the foregoing articles of agreement, and will, to the best of my (or our) ability, endeavor faithfully to represent the interest of the claimant in the premises.

"'Witness my (or our) hand, the day and year first above written.

"'(Signature of attorney.)

"'STATE OF ——, County of ——, ss:

"'Personally came —— ——, whom I know to be the person he represents himself to be, and who, having signed above acceptance of agreement, acknowledged the same to be —— free act and deed.

"'(Official signature.)

"'And if in the adjudication of any claim for pension in which such articles of agreement have been or may hereafter be filed it shall appear that the claimant had, prior to the execution thereof, paid to the attorney any sum for his services in such claim, and the amount so paid is not stipulated therein, then every such claim shall be adjudicated in the same manner as though no articles of agreement had been filed, deducting from the fee of $10 allowed by law such sum as claimant shall show that he has paid to his said attorney.

"'Any agent or attorney or other person instrumental in prosecuting any claim for pension or bounty land who shall directly or indirectly contract for, demand, or receive or retain any greater compensation for his services or instrumentality in prosecuting a claim for pension or bounty land than is herein provided, or for payment thereof at any other time or in any other manner than is herein provided, or who shall wrongfully withhold from a pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of the pension or claim allowed and due such pensioner or claimant, or the land warrant issued to any such claimant, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall for every such offense be fined not exceeding $500 or imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.'"

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That no agent or attorney shall demand, receive, or be allowed any compensation in any claim for increase of pension on account of the increase of the disability for which the pension has been allowed, or for services rendered in securing the passage of any special act of Congress granting a pension or an increase of pension in any case that has been presented at the Pension Office or is allowable under the general pension laws.

"SEC. 2. Any agent, attorney, or other person instrumental in prosecuting any claim for increase of pension on account of the increase of the disability for which pension was allowed, or who has rendered services in procuring the passage of any special act of Congress granting a pension or an increase of pension in any case that has been presented at the Pension Office or is allowable under the general laws, who shall directly or indirectly contract for, demand, receive, or retain any compensation for such services, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500, or imprisoned not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and the substitute has been reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The scope of this substitute is to provide that no fee shall be charged by any agent or attorney in any claim for the increase of a pension already allowed; that is to say, where a pension has been allowed for a certain disability, and an increase of pension is asked at the Pension Office, the agent or attorney who may present the claim shall charge no fee for his service. There is no need for the allowance of any fee in a case of this kind. All that ought to be required is for the claimant to inform the Pension Office that he desires a re-examination of the disability for which he is pensioned. The agent is required to do absolutely nothing, except perhaps fill in the form of a blank declaration; and the services of an agent are not necessary, I apprehend, for that purpose.

The substitute goes one step further than the original bill. It provides that there shall be no fee paid for securing the passage of any special act of Congress granting a pension or an increase of pension which is allowable under the general pension laws, or where an application has already been made at the Pension Office. The fee will still be allowed to any one who procures the passage in Congress of an original claim; but when a claim has gone through the Pension Office and been rejected, the papers on file showing the circumstances of the case are readily accessible; and certainly an agent ought not to be allowed to charge a fee of $25 or any other sum for prosecuting a claim which requires no service. That is the entire bill as I understand it. The second section provides penalties for the violation of the provisions of the bill.

I will now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not wish to discuss the bill further.

Mr. MATSON. Then I will yield to any other gentleman who may wish to be heard.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. MATSON. Very well, I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas to move his amendment.

Mr. PETERS. I offer the following amendment to section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the applicant may contract with any person in the State or Territory in which said applicant lives, to pay not exceeding $3 for services rendered should such increase be allowed.

Mr. PETERS. I should like to make an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. MATSON. How long?

Mr. PETERS. Five minutes probably.

Mr. MATSON. I yield for that length of time.

Mr. PETERS. The substitute as reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions precludes the contract for making up an application for increase if such increase has been granted. I think this would do injustice to a number of pensioners in the country who neither have the blanks nor are able themselves to fill out such application for increase of pension. Consequently the amendment I propose allows simply a fee not exceeding $3 to be given to attorneys at their homes who will furnish a blank and who will prepare the application for increase, so there will be some inducement for some one in each county-seat to keep on hand blanks and prepare applications for increase of pension. It is well known there are a great many pensioners who are themselves unable to prepare their applications in a proper manner, and therefore who must look to some one else to prepare their applications for increase for them, and it is also known there are no blanks kept on hand in these various places except by those who are interested in prosecuting claims for pensions or for increase of pensions. My amendment, therefore, allows any party to contract with an attorney at his home for the payment of a fee not to exceed $3 for furnishing the blank and filling out the application for increase, which will cover all expenses of the preparation and execution of application for increase. This amount will cover all these expenses fully and completely, and I doubt whether there is a single pensioner who makes application for increase but will be willing to allow a sum not exceeding $3 to any one who will furnish him with the blank and prepare the application and present the case properly to the Pension Office.

Mr. WEAVER. I understand the gentleman to say that his amendment provides the fee shall not exceed $3 in each case.

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir; not to exceed $3. It is well known in these applications for increase of pension there is nothing to be done except to furnish the blank and fill it in a proper manner. All the rest depends upon the medical examiners. The party is ordered before a medical board for examination, and if that board decides the disability for which the party has been pensioned has increased since his last examination, he is, of course, under the law, entitled to such increase of pension. The pension agent, therefore, in Washington or elsewhere can have no power in securing this increase, as it depends altogether on the medical examination. I think, however, it is only right and would be justice to the pensioner to allow the payment of a small fee of $3 to an attorney at his home, who will furnish the blank and prepare the application for increase of pension.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas whether his amendment does not go further than he intends. Will it not allow the payment of fees for Congressional applications for increase of pension?

Mr. PETERS. I think not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course the gentleman will agree with me no such fee should be allowed.

Mr. PETERS. I ask the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PETERS. I will modify my amendment, confining the payment of fees in preparing applications for increase of pension exclusively to such applications for increase made to the Pension Office.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have made the suggestion because it is well known to gentlemen these pension agents get $5 to $10 each for services performed by them in preparing special bills for presentation to Congress, when, in fact, they perform no service in securing increase of pension.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to cut off that class of claims on the part of these pension agents. They can accomplish nothing and should receive nothing. It is my intention to limit the payment of the fee under my amendment to those who furnish blanks and prepare the applications for increase of pension at the homes of the pensioners.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he will not consent to an amendment to his amendment; and that is, that this fee of $3 shall be paid only where it is necessary, for in most cases it is only necessary to apply for a medical examination, which can be done by letter on the part of the applicant as well as by letter on the part of the attorney. I will suggest the fee of $3 to the attorney or agent shall be allowed only where it is necessary, in order to secure increase of pension, that the attorney should prepare and file something additional in the nature of an application.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not think that is the case.

Mr. PETERS. I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that in all applications for an increase of pension there is a regular blank form prescribed, and which is furnished by the Pension Department to the applicant to fill out. The applicant can not obtain a medical examination by merely writing a letter, as suggested by the gentleman. He must obtain this blank, have it filled out, and make his application in the form prescribed by the department.

Mr. DOCKERY. Here is a copy of the form required.

Mr. PETERS. And this amendment is for the purpose of offering some encouragement to the local agents to keep these blanks on hand and fill them up for the applicants, and limit the fee to an amount not exceeding $3.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not understand, if the gentleman will pardon me, that that is a rule of the Pension Office.

Mr. PETERS. It is.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, yes.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have had considerable experience in the office, and I do not now recall any particular case where that rule was applied. I know, on the contrary, in my own experience and observation, that re-examinations have been had without even a letter on the part of the claimant where there was a report of the preceding medical examination wherein it was intimated that the disability might increase or that the pensioner might to some degree recover. They have periodical examinations in many cases where the disability is what is designated as "not fixed;" and I think in any event the claimant could by merely writing a letter to the office procure a blank himself wherein everything is indicated that is necessary for him to do, and if he can only write intelligently I think he might do the work himself. This amendment affords encouragement to certain people to take advantage of these applicants. In the event that there is a new application it might be necessary to employ some one to prepare the papers, that is, where there is a new disability, and I would not object to a case of that kind, but it should be provided that these fees are to be contracted for and paid only when it becomes necessary to file an additional declaration.

Mr. PETERS. In response to the gentleman, I think the amendment sufficiently explains away the objection he makes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MATSON. I have no objection personally to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas. It is perhaps a very proper amendment, and I do not know that the committee has any objection to it; but I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON], who is also a member of the committee.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas should prevail. This bill was reported unanimously by the committee.

I have no desire to say anything more than to merely state the position of the committee in regard to it, especially of the Republican membership. There is no necessity, in my judgment, for employing an attorney to prosecute an application for increase of pension. The Pension Office will, upon proper application, furnish a blank to any one who desires to have his pension increased, and the statement to be filed is quite a simple one. Instructions are given on the face of the blank which will enable anybody who can read and write to make out the application. Any one who may be unable to either read or write can go to the nearest justice of the peace, and I do not believe that there is a justice of the peace in the land who will not be able to fill up the blank necessary to prosecute the application.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information just at this point.

Under the first section of the bill if three disabilities, for instance, are applied for and the Pension Office allows upon one, does it preclude the applicant from employing an attorney to prosecute his claim for the other disabilities which the office may not have allowed? There are many cases in the office where they allow $2 a month for one disability, but where other disabilities also exist which would add largely to the pension if the claims were allowed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. The application for an increase must be based upon the evidence on file, supplemented by an examination by an examining board in the locality where the pensioner resides. If the result of the examination shows an increase of the disability since the last allowance, an increase will be granted in the office without any further steps. But if some new case is to be made out, or a new disability, or rerating, it will require additional evidence; and this law does not apply in such cases. In such event the applicant may employ his attorney and prosecute his claim as under existing laws. This refers simply to an application for an increase of pension for a disability already existing, and I undertake to say that there is no occasion for the services of an attorney, and if the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas prevails it opens the way for attorneys to procure, in their peculiar way, all cases for increases that may be pending throughout the country, and secure their $3 compensation in each individual case, where no substantial service to the applicant was or can be rendered.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me interrupt the gentleman to say that in the case of a bill which was passed by the House and went to the Senate I found it had been stopped there, and upon application ascertained that it had been stopped by an attorney because the applicant would not allow him the $10 which he claimed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I hope the amendment of the gentlemen from Kansas will not prevail.

Mr. MATSON. I yield now such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall only want a moment or two. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House at length in view of the fact that the members are now fully in possession of all the facts necessary to a proper understanding of this measure. The amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, in my opinion, should be adopted. It is offered out of abundant caution and involves but a small amount of money; it insures the preparation of the necessary papers for the pensioners throughout the country, who may be themselves unable to prepare them, and authorizes a sufficient amount for any service that can possibly be rendered by attorneys in such cases. For that reason I believe the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MATSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] if under the existing law the contract for attorneys' fees must be approved by the Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MATSON. As far as original cases are concerned they have.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Indiana says, as I understand him, that as to original claims the contract for the payment of fees must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. MATSON. Where it exceeds $10.

Mr. CANNON. Where it exceeds $10. I think the law might well be amended. I want to suggest an amendment here to this bill so as to allow all contracts for the payment of fees to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or rather to require that they be so approved. But this bill goes further. It absolutely prohibits the making of a contract for any fee whatever in increase cases or any fee whatever for attention to legislation and the presentation of the case of the party who desires special legislation. Of course I understand, with other gentlemen, that abuses have been committed by parties who are anxious to make a profit and who sometimes perhaps have but little conscience in dealing with their fellow-men, and I fear we are about to add to abuses by the proposed legislation. I can conceive of many cases, and no doubt many cases do exist, where men are either ignorant or poor and where they are absolutely entitled to an increase of their pension, but where, for want of proper knowledge and ability to attend to it themselves, they do not get it.

You propose to shut the door in the face of that class of people—the weakest and most defenseless people of the country—and say to them you shall not have the privilege of agreeing to pay a contingent fee of $10 to an attorney who will take the time and expend the money necessary to prepare your case for proper presentation at the Pension Office or by way of petition or affidavit to the Congress for consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult to furnish the applicant for pension the proper opportunities to present his claim, or that the parties should not be sufficiently remunerated for the services rendered in prosecuting those claims; but it seems to me the gentleman from Illinois wants to go beyond that, and give larger powers——

Mr. CANNON. Would the gentleman undertake by law to interfere with the power of a great block of citizens of the country to contract for the payment of a contingent fee; in other words, to become the guardian by law of every individual in the country who has a pension claim, running up perhaps to half a million? If you do, in many cases it is a grave question to my mind whether there will not be a much greater abuse than that which now exists under present legislation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me to get through with this sentence.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to put a question right here.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing to vote for a modification of the law, as follows: Say in line 6 of the proposed substitute you insert "unless the contract shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

No agent or attorney shall receive or be allowed any compensation in any claim for increase of pension on account of increase of the disability for which pension has been allowed unless the contract shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DOCKERY. That would leave the fee at $10.

Mr. CANNON. If approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DOCKERY. But that is exactly what the Committee on Invalid Pensions by unanimous voice declined to do. They think that in "straight increase cases" $10 is an unnecessary imposition on the applicant.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me I will state that I have no doubt in the majority of cases the payment of any fee in an increase claim is unnecessary; but I am of the opinion there is a large majority of cases where the payment of a contingent fee is proper; and if you deny an individual the right to contract for the payment of a contingent fee under any circumstances, you deny him that justice which he should receive from the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say, in conclusion, if you offer an amendment to the law that requires the approval of the Secretary of the Interior in each case before any contract will be recognized, it occurs to me you would do more good than would be accomplished if the bill were passed in its present condition.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] proposes to amend it so that any contract made for a fee in a case for increase shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, so that the contract might be made for $10, $100, or $1,000.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not exceeding $10.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman did not so state it.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman so meant.

Mr. MATSON. I accept, then, the meaning of the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. All I want to get is a proper amendment.

Mr. MATSON. This bill has been reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions for the express purpose of protecting the weak and unintelligent. That is the very proposition here. The fact is that these claimants who are weak and unintelligent are persuaded by claim agents that they need attorneys in cases where they make an application for an increase of pension. Where they are already pensioned they do not need an attorney, and all intelligent men know that an attorney can be of no service to them. All that is required is that the claim should be made out and sent to the office. The bill is intended to protect the weak and unintelligent, from whom millions of dollars have been taken under these fees for increase claims.

Mr. DOCKERY. In other words, as I understand the law and the practice, it is this: The rate of pension is determined by the opinion of the local medical examining board as reviewed by the medical referee in the Pension Department, and not influenced or in any wise affected by the fee that may be paid to the attorney. It is wholly a question of medical opinion, and the attorney can not render any substantial services. At least the amount of the Peters amendment will certainly fully compensate.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has not perhaps observed that this provision is confined exclusively to cases where the application is on account of a disability for which the claimant is already pensioned. It does not apply in any case where there is a new disability, but only to cases where the application is for an increase on account of a disability for which the applicant is already drawing a pension. Now, in such cases there is no need of an attorney, and he can not render any service of value to the applicant because the question is merely a medical one. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] insists that if an attorney writes out an application he ought to be entitled to a fee of $3. So far as I am concerned I have no personal objection to that, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON], who represents the committee as well as I do, says that he has. It seems to me, however, the underlying idea of refusing to give a fee where there is no need of the services of an attorney is certainly correct. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to offer my amendment?

Mr. MATSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether any fee should be allowed for services in passing a pension bill through Congress. If this substitute passes, then such fees may be allowed, and, as I understand it, the Pension Office will retain the pension in order to secure the payment of the fee in cases which have not been presented at the Pension Office or are not allowable under the general pension law. I believe that the passage of this substitute in its present form will give rise to controversy in numerous instances as to whether the particular case is one which is allowable under the general pension law, and if we forbid the payment of fees in cases which have been presented at the Pension Office, or which are allowable under the general pension law, I see no harm in forbidding them likewise in cases that have not been so presented and are not so allowable. Therefore I suggest that the words covering that point are unnecessary, and that the retention of them in the bill will give rise to a great deal of trouble hereafter, because pension agents will see to it that the claims are not presented, or will try to make out that they are not liable under the general pension laws. Therefore I shall move, if I am permitted, to strike out those words.

Mr. MATSON. As to that amendment I only desire to say that perhaps if the question had been left to me I would have been willing to go as far as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] indicates; but the committee thought there were some original cases that had not been presented at the Pension Office, and in which the services of an attorney might be needed to prosecute the claims before Congress, and therefore they modified the bill to that extent.

I now demand the previous question on the amendments, and upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I would like to be allowed to offer my amendment.

Mr. MATSON. It is understood that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] is pending, as well as the amendment of the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER. If the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is pending, then the other would not be in order.

Mr. MATSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that both amendments be considered as pending.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. PETERS; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 48, noes 20; so the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], which is to strike out, in section 1 of the substitute, the words "in any case that has been presented at the Pension Office or is allowable under the general pension law."

The amendment was rejected—ayes 28, noes 45.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I understood that it was agreed that my amendment should be considered as pending.

Mr. MATSON. I asked unanimous consent that the gentleman's amendment should be considered as pending.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. CANNON, as follows:

After the word "allowed," in line 6, section 1, insert "unless the contract therefor has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was rejected.

The substitute as amended was then agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON subsequently said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for an amendment in the second section of the bill (H. R. 4982) in regard to fees in claims for increase of pension. In order that the second section of the bill may harmonize with the first it is necessary, in view of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], to add the words "except as provided in section 1."

The SPEAKER. The bill has been sent out. The Chair will have it brought in in a few minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. There will be no objection to the amendment suggested.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to insert, in line 9, section 2, the words "except as provided in section 1."

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to an omission which ought to be remedied. I had intended to speak of it when the bill was under consideration, but was called out of the Hall. The language of the provision does not include the District of Columbia, but speaks only of the States and Territories.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman is referring now to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS]?

Mr. WHITE, of New York, Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON]? The Chair hears none.

FEES AND EXPENSES OF EXAMINING SURGEONS.

Mr. MATSON. On behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6651) establishing the fees and expenses of examining surgeons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fees of examining surgeons appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions under the provisions of section 4744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by chapter 349 of acts of the year 1882, shall be as follows:

For each examination and satisfactory certificate thereof, $2 to each member when made by a board, and $2 when made by one surgeon: Provided, That when a claimant is so disabled as not to be able to present himself to the board of surgeons for examination, the Commissioner may order a surgeon to make such examination at claimant's residence, and the fee for such examination shall be $2, in addition to the actual traveling expenses of the surgeon: Provided further, That no fee shall be allowed or paid to any member of said board of examining surgeons who does not actually participate in such examinations and sign the certificate thereof.

SEC. 2. That so much of the provisions of an act approved January 18, 1887, as is inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect on the first day of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 9, after the word "thereof," insert "hereafter made."

Strike out section 2, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

In section 3, after the word "effect," strike out "on the first day of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889," and insert "from and after its passage."

Mr. MATSON. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee are unanimously of the opinion that the provisions of the bill are just and right, and that the same ought to pass. We recommend the following amendments:

In line 9, after the word "thereof," insert "hereafter made."

Strike out section 2, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

In section 3, after the word "effect," strike out "on the first day of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889," and insert "from and after its passage."

And when so amended we recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my colleague [Mr. MATSON] will explain the effect of the bill and show to what extent it enlarges the fees of examining surgeons.

Mr. MATSON. The proposition of the bill is to pay examining surgeons $2 for each examination. The provision of the present law, adopted first upon an appropriation bill under the direction, perhaps, of my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN], allows a fee of $2 for each examination, not exceeding five, on a single day, and $1 for each subsequent examination on the same day.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that was recommended by the then Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MATSON. The Committee on Invalid Pensions, after considering this matter, thought that if these examinations were worth $2 apiece for the first five, the sixth or any subsequent examination was also worth $2. That was the conclusion of the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. And this bill proposes to relieve the present injustice.

Mr. MATSON. Yes, sir; it proposes to pay these officers a uniform fee for each examination, no matter how many.

Mr. DOCKERY. A very proper measure.

Mr. HOLMAN. These boards may examine as many as twenty cases at a single session of the board.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I want to warn the House that the adoption of this measure will add enormously to the expenses of the Government——

Mr. DOCKERY. But properly.

Mr. RANDALL. Without benefiting anybody except these examining surgeons. If my memory serves me right, these officers now get from $700 to $800 a year under the reduced fees fixed by Congress. The former fee was $2 for each case, but the Committee on Appropriations, after full examination, determined that a sufficient allowance would be $2 for the first five cases examined on any one day, and a dollar each for every case subsequently examined on the same day. I am very sorry to differ with the Committee on Invalid Pensions in this connection, but I feel it proper the House should have notice that a very large sum—as much, I fear, as $200,000 annually—will be added by this measure to the expenses of the Government. It is an increase of compensation not recommended by equity or justice. Of course the examining surgeons naturally want this increase; I do not blame them for asking it. But in my judgment there are two sides to this question.

Mr. MATSON. I am quite sorry indeed the gentleman from Pennsylvania disagrees with the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I have known of that gentleman's position for some time. I have never been able to agree with him as to the justice of this proposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is merely to do justice to these parties who are required to perform this service. As an abstract, elementary proposition, if it is true that it is worth $3 to examine one man it is certainly worth $3 to examine another.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can my colleague state to the House the average compensation now received by the examining surgeons?

Mr. MATSON. Perhaps at Philadelphia, from where the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes, where there are only two boards, it is much higher than it is elsewhere.

Mr. RANDALL. They seek this increase, but I am not their representative in that connection.

Mr. MATSON. In rural districts, like that from which my colleague comes, of course it is not so large.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand the present compensation has secured efficient and competent boards.

Mr. MATSON. I think the extravagant fee of $10 allowed attorneys has had the effect of stimulating men to present these cases who otherwise would not do so. I know large sums have been appropriated in the pension bill to pay examining surgeons, but the fee allowed attorneys has encouraged many claimants to file claims when they themselves knew they really had no basis for such claims.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired.

TREASURY EXPENDITURES.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I was not here when my committee was called, and I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ADMISSION OF ARIZONA AND IDAHO AS STATES.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11916) to enable the people of Arizona and Idaho to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT, ETC.

Mr. SPRINGER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 244) proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States and Representatives in Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President of the United States and Representatives in Congress, and ordered to be printed.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. SAYERS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 11917) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask, by unanimous consent, the report accompanying the bill may be submitted hereafter.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

SPECIAL-DELIVERY STAMPS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 11794) to amend the postal laws of the United States in reference to letters bearing special-delivery stamps.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will yield for that purpose, as the gentleman tells me it will consume but two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3, chapter 342, of the act of Congress approved March 3, A. D. 1885, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to said section the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That the omission by the sender to place the lawful postage upon a letter bearing such special-delivery stamp and otherwise entitled to immediate delivery under the provisions of this section shall not hinder or delay the transmission and delivery thereof as provided herein; but such lawful postage shall be collected upon its delivery, in the manner now provided by law for the collection of deficient postage resulting from the overweight of letters."

Mr. WHITE, of New York. That bill, introduced by myself, has been reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the unfinished business coming over from the last session of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11765) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on river and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the pending paragraph and the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a breakwater from Mount Desert to Porcupine Island, Maine: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

It is proposed to amend by striking out "thirty thousand" and inserting "ten thousand."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving New York Harbor, New York: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent that the lines just read by the Clerk be passed over informally and without prejudice, to be recurred to hereafter, because of the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the harbor of Philadelphia: For removal of Smith's Island and Windmill Island, in the State of Pennsylvania, and Petty's Island, in the State of New Jersey, or such parts of them and the shoals adjacent thereto as may be required, and for the improvement of the harbor between the cities of Philadelphia, Pa., and Camden, N. J., $200,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until the title to the lands forming said islands shall be acquired and vested in the United States without charge to the latter.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "latter," in line 5, insert "beyond the expenditure of $300,000, as provided for in the act of August 11, 1888, Statutes Fiftieth Congress, session 1, page 403."

Mr. BLANCHARD. There is a communication from the Chief of Engineers on that subject which explains the reason for offering this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Let that communication be printed in the RECORD.

The communication referred to by Mr. BLANCHARD is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 15, 1888.

MY DEAR MR. BLANCHARD: I see in proposed river and harbor bill 11765 the following in reference to improving harbor at Philadelphia (see lines 2 to 5, page 8):

"Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until the title to the lands forming these islands shall be acquired and vested in the United States without charge to the latter."

Would it not be well to add to this words something like these: "Beyond the expenditure of $300,000, as provided for in the act of August 11, 1888, Statutes Fiftieth Congress, session 1, page 403." Otherwise, I think, it may be apprehended that question will arise whether expenditure under the proposed bill can be made if the United States has been to any charge even under the appropriation already made.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. N. C. BLANCHARD,
House of Representatives.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Savannah, Ga.: Maintaining existing works, $20,000.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Georgia," in line 17, and insert "under new plans and estimates, $200,000."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, under an act of Congress new surveys have been made of the harbor of Savannah, with a view to getting deeper water, and the report of the engineer containing estimates will be found in Executive Document No. 1, part 2, second session Fiftieth Congress. That report contains an estimate of the cost of obtaining 28 feet of water in Savannah Harbor.

It is unnecessary, perhaps, for me to say anything here and now as to the importance of this harbor. I only want to say to the Committee of the Whole that I offer this amendment at the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. NORWOOD] who is not now in the city, and that we have an estimate from the engineers recommending a very much larger amount than is set forth in the proposed amendment.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors in considering this question have not entered upon or made an appropriation for the new plan of improvement. The amendment offered at the instance of my colleague is to authorize the engineers to enter upon the new plan of improving this harbor so that there may be no great lapse of time before we shall obtain what is so much desired—28 feet of water in the harbor.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the importance of the harbor of Savannah is fully admitted by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; but this condition of facts exists in reference to that harbor: In the bill passed at the last session of Congress we appropriated $180,000 to complete the existing project, which has been under process of construction for several years. That money is not yet expended, and the present project of improvement there has not yet been completed. The new plan, of which my friend from Georgia speaks, was submitted to the River and Harbor Committee at the first session of this Congress. Upon examining it we found it involved an expenditure, over and above the present project under which work is now progressing, of nearly $7,000,000.

The committee considered that it were better to complete the existing project before beginning with a new one which was so costly. The present plan is to deepen the harbor to 22 feet, and certainly it seems to me it would be wise to wait until that project is completed before entering upon so expensive a plan as that involved in the amendment of my friend from Georgia, which proposes to get a depth of 28 feet of water at an additional cost of nearly $7,000,000.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman from Louisiana permit me to ask if the plan referred to in the amendment proposed by my colleague contemplates 26 or 28 feet?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Twenty-eight feet.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman from Louisiana tell me whether or not the Chief of Engineers does not now recommend a project which will give a depth of 26 feet on the bar at Savannah?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Chief of Engineers makes no estimate or recommendation whatever for Savannah for the fiscal year 1890, except the sum of $50,000 for maintaining existing works at that point. Now, of that estimate of $50,000 for maintaining existing works this bill provides $20,000. There is no estimate from the Chief of Engineers or the War Department relating to the adoption of this new project.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. It is due to the gentleman from Georgia to say that my inquiry on this last point was actuated by reason of a conversation I had with the Chief of Engineers a few days ago relative to this proposed new project.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have no doubt the Chief of Engineers thinks that 22 feet of water in Savannah Harbor, as proposed in the present plan, is hardly sufficient, but he has not recommended to Congress——

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. You mean in any official report?

Mr. BLANCHARD. He has made no recommendation to increase the depth to 28 feet, at a cost of nearly $7,000,000. In view of the magnitude of the cost for this work, and in view of the fact that this bill provides merely for the continuation of projects already under way, the committee did not see their way clear to putting in the bill any provision for this new project, and I do not think the Committee of the Whole should adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. The bill provides for the simple maintenance of existing works, $20,000; not a dollar for the improvement of the harbor of Savannah. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen are not aware that this is the most important port on the Southern coast. Perhaps they are not aware of the extent of the commerce that enters and goes out of the harbor of Savannah. I have before me a report of the engineer which shows that since the Government began to improve the harbor there has been a steady increase made of the exports and imports. I will not take the time of the House to read it all, but I will ask permission to print some of it in the RECORD. The last report, made in June, I believe, states:

With the improvement of the harbor at Savannah the commerce of the port has increased at an extraordinarily rapid rate, amounting, at the present low prices of the principal articles of export, to more than $105,000,000 annually. The value of the exports alone of the port for the year 1887 was $68,301,909, an increase of more than $3,500,000 over that of the preceding year.

Following upon the improvements already executed in the harbor, and relying upon their extension so as to secure in the near future a still greater depth of water, lines of railway have been extended into the interior, opening up to those places markets for their products which before did not exist, and ships of large carrying capacity have been constructed and others are now building to ply between this and Northern ports. At the present time there is an average of one steamer per day clearing for Northern coastwise ports. In addition to this there is a large fleet of foreign steamers and coastwise and foreign sailing vessels, the foreign vessels, both sail and steam, being as a rule of great draught. The increased facilities for navigation afforded by the improvements already executed have resulted in largely reducing rates of marine freight and insurance. At the lowest estimates the annual saving in freight rates alone, due to this cause, amounts to more than the total sum of money expended by the United States upon the harbor since the close of the civil war, and there is no reason to believe that money expended in the further improvement of the harbor would yield a less valuable return.

Wharves are being continually pushed out into the navigable channel along the city front. A new bulkhead line should be established and wharf-owners compelled to conform to it. The works for the improvement of the Savannah River and Harbor extend from the Cross-Tides, above the city, to Tybee Roads, a distance of 20 miles. Future operations should be carried on simultaneously throughout the whole extent of the river, and to secure successful and permanent results dredging should be accompanied or promptly followed by contracting works. To secure the fullest benefits from the improvements already executed, and in order that the future growth of the port may not be seriously retarded, it should be enabled to furnish an outlet for the rapidly growing commerce brought from the interior. As the present depth of water is inadequate for this purpose it is very important that work upon the plan for obtaining 28 feet of water from Savannah to the sea, submitted in accordance with the instructions of Congress, should be begun at an early date. It is proposed to expend any funds which may become available during the year in the construction of training-walls and in dredging as provided for in the project mentioned. A vigorous and economical prosecution of the work will be possible only with regular and adequate appropriations. The insufficient and irregular appropriations of the past have rendered satisfactory progress impossible, and have increased the cost of the work in some instances as much as 100 per cent. The sum asked for during the next fiscal year is $2,500,000. The most desirable and satisfactory results can not be obtained with an expenditure during the year of a less amount.

What I desire to impress upon the committee is that the money expended on the harbor has been abundantly and amply returned in the increased commerce of the country. I simply ask that $200,000 be appropriated to enter upon the new project in the improvement of this harbor; and if a river and harbor bill is to be passed during this session I can see no reason why this important port of the Southern coast should be left absolutely without an appropriation. I repeat what I said before. There is an estimate of the engineers here which would justify ten times the amount mentioned in this amendment, so that there can be no question of there being no estimate. The simple idea and the only idea the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] offers in response is that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have not felt justified in entering upon new projects. The engineer's report would have fully justified them in doing it. And in view of the very great importance of this port, the most important on the Southern coast, I earnestly appeal to the Committee of the Whole to adopt the amendment which I have offered appropriating $200,000 for the improvement of the harbor of Savannah under the new project. I call attention to the cotton statistics of the port of Savannah, Ga., for the commercial year ending August 31, 1887, by E. F. Bryan, superintendent of the Savannah Cotton Exchange:

With the exception of 20,170 bales of cotton included in coastwise exports, which is transit to Charleston by rail, this port is solely dependent upon her water-way facilities for transporting the remainder of the above exports.

The number of steam-ships carrying cotton to foreign ports from Savannah during the cotton season of 1877-'78 amounted to 11; 1879-'80, increased to 39; 1882-'83, increased to 42; 1884-'85, increased to 63; 1886-'87, increased to 81.

Taking the freight rates to Liverpool as a basis, the prevailing rate for cotton by steam-vessel during the season of 1877-'78 was three-eighths to seven-sixteenths pence per pound; 1887-'88, was seventeen sixty-fourths to twenty-one sixty-fourths pence per pound.

The marked increase in the number of vessels is principally due to the offerings of the port in freights, but the lowering of the freight rate is almost entirely due to the facilities afforded vessels of larger capacity, by virtue of deeper water in our river, for reaching our wharves and cotton-presses as well as the railways terminating at this point. Ten to fifteen years ago a large number of heavy-draught vessels, steam and sail, could only load part cargo at our presses and wharves, taking in and completing cargo some 8 or 10 miles below the city at deep water; that portion of cargo taken at deep water was conveyed to the vessels on lighters propelled by tug-boats; this involved much expense to the vessel, which was necessarily added to the freight rate, the last analysis being smaller net returns to the producer. To-day, with what improvements have been made by the Government in the river and harbor, it is the exception when a vessel does not take in her entire cargo at the city wharves and presses.

The improvements have thus far been of material benefit to this port. With greater facilities for larger vessels will come lower rates of ocean freights. This means greater net returns to producers, and does not apply to cotton alone, but to every article for export, whether from the soil, the factory, or the furnace.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The estimates the gentleman refers to are those made by the local engineers, who, under an order of survey adopted by Congress a few years ago, made a survey of the harbor of Savannah for this project. There is no estimate before the House or before the committee from the Chief of Engineers or the War Department in regard to this new project. Indeed, I might say that it is not customary for the War Department or the Chief of Engineers to embody in their estimates any amount for a given project until Congress, acting upon the report of the local engineer, shall have formally adopted that project.

Now, I concede that the demands of Savannah Harbor for improvement are great; but I submit that this is a small bill, merely to provide money for the continuation of works already begun. The gentleman knows that this new plan of improvement is a costly project. It should not be grafted on this bill. It had better wait for a larger bill in another Congress. The present bill is made up entirely upon the idea of excluding all new projects. The one which the gentleman wishes to have adopted is a new project in the sense that it has never been adopted by Congress and never heretofore appropriated for, and I repeat what I said before, that it does seem wise to complete the old project, for 22 feet depth, before beginning a new one that is to yield 28 feet depth, at a cost of about $7,000,000.

Mr. CRISP. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. Is not the old project completed?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not yet.

Mr. CRISP. Have we not appropriated already a sufficient amount to complete the old project?

Mr. BLANCHARD. We have in the last bill; but that money is yet unexpended, and that old project is not yet completed.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will permit me a word I would state that he has not framed this bill upon the idea that it is to complete existing works. Under the provisions of this bill he has made an appropriation to maintain the works. That would seem to mean after completion.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The engineer estimates that $50,000 is required to maintain existing works. These works as they progress have to be maintained even before completion as well as after they have been completed. I do not think it wise for the Committee of the Whole to adopt this amendment. It would set a precedent for other new projects to be incorporated upon the bill.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment; when the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRISP. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 5, in order that I may offer an amendment in relation to the appropriation for the harbor of Charlotte.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The amendment which the gentleman from New York desires to offer is merely verbal, and I have no objection to it.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 20, page 5, after the word "dollars," add "which amount, with any unexpended moneys heretofore appropriated, shall be available for any necessary repairs or dredging."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Aransas Pass and Bay up to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex.: Continuing improvement, $65,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to strike out the last words of that paragraph, "$65,000."

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] complains that the appropriations carried by this bill are inadequate. He demands increased and still more extravagant appropriations. Let us see what the committee has done for his State, and whether he has any reason to complain.

This bill appropriates $65,000 for continuing the improvement of Aransas Pass and Bay up to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex., when there is an unexpended balance of $102,182.20 on hand now with which to prosecute this work.

It also appropriates $300,000 for continuing the improvement of the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, when there is an unexpended balance of $502,871.13 presently available for this purpose.

It also appropriates $150,000 to continue the improvement of Sabine Pass and Blue Buck Bar, Texas, when there is an unexpended balance of $251,804.23 for expenditure upon these works.

It also appropriates $35,000 for continuing the improvement of the ship-channel in Galveston Bay, in the State of Texas, from Morgan's Cut to Bolivar Channel, when there is an available fund on hand now for this improvement of $107,278.70.

The importance of these improvements I do not propose to underrate, but I do most sincerely doubt the propriety of this Congress making any more appropriations for them. Let the large sums of money already set apart for these purposes be first expended.

This bill also appropriates $16,500 to continue the improvement of Buffalo Bayou, Texas, when there is an unexpended balance available for it now of $26,087.80.

The improvement of this stream is of a very doubtful character. It has already cost this Government the immense sum of $117,602.20.

We are told by the engineers in charge of this work that the expenditure of this large sum of money "has resulted in cleaning the channel of the most prominent snags, stumps, and overhanging trees, in easing some of the bends, and in removing such shoals as obstructed a 7-foot navigation." These obstructions are renewed in greater or less degree each year, say they, and that the project is not capable of permanent completion. It would seem from this, therefore, that the Government is to have a perpetual job on hand in the improvement of the Buffalo Bayou. A grand and most extravagant contemplation.

This measure also appropriates $4,000 for the continuation of the improvement of Trinity River, Texas, when in the act of August 11, 1888, there is $12,500 appropriated for this work.

On July 1, 1888, there was an unexpended balance of $15,224.06 on hand and available for the continuation of the improvements which I have mentioned, and the act of August 11, 1888, adds to this balance $987,500, so that the immense sum of $1,002,724.06 is on hand and available now for the promotion of these improvements, while the bill under consideration proposes to make the additional appropriation of $670,500 therefor.

Whither are we drifting? Is there to be no limit to these expenditures? Had this matter not better be delayed until after the meeting of the next Congress? Why shall we make these wasteful and unnecessary appropriations? What imperative necessity is there for it? That the accumulating surplus in the Treasury is a constant menace and temptation to needless and extravagantly large appropriations and expenditures is clearly evidenced in the undue haste exhibited by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in presenting a second bill to this Congress appropriating $11,906,850, when in the act of August 11, 1888, nearly $23,000,000 were appropriated for the improvement of the same rivers and harbors provided for in this measure.

What I have just said applies with equal force to almost every item of appropriation contained in this bill. I have instanced but a few, and them only because of the very unique position assumed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] on this subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall be pleased to hear from "Buffalo Bayou." [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, it is a subject of congratulation for the country that the "Last of the Tribunes," representing here the district in Pennsylvania from which the gentleman who has just taken his seat comes, has experienced the salutary and chastening effect which defeat always brings with it. The country is to be congratulated that in delivering his valedictory to this House he has suddenly developed to an extraordinary degree the bump of economy, which did not characterize him when he asked this Congress to appropriate a hundred thousand dollars for a post-office in some little place in Pennsylvania, which led to his downfall.

Mr. SOWDEN. That is an old chestnut.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman is as ignorant of the modus operandi of the distribution of the appropriations by the engineers in charge of these improvements as he is of the geography of the great State of Texas, which I in part represent here. He actually, Mr. Chairman, does not know the difference between an ocean and a gulf, between a bayou and a bay. He says that he opposes an appropriation for Buffalo Bay and also for Buffalo Bayou. I trust that this House will not be influenced in its action on this amendment by the views of a gentleman who displays such gross ignorance of the very question that he discusses here.

There is no such place in Texas, my friend, as "Buffalo Bay," and if I had the time, and you had the money to pay me, I would take you out and show you on the map the difference between a bayou and a bay, and I would show you also that there is no such place in our State as "Buffalo Bay," against the alleged appropriation for which you have declaimed so eloquently.

Mr. SOWDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I never mentioned such a place as "Buffalo Bay." The gentleman seems to be a little mixed himself.

Mr. CRAIN. But, Mr. Chairman, since the first session of this Congress the gentleman from Pennsylvania has become a rampant reformer, and he has now become a staunch Democrat of the Holman-Randall type.

Mr. SOWDEN. That is a good type to belong to.

Mr. CRAIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as Buffalo Bayou is concerned, it is a stream of considerable magnitude and importance. It is the connecting link between Galveston Bay and Harbor and the city of Houston, which is represented upon this floor by my colleague [Mr. STEWART], who will doubtless address the House upon the subject of this appropriation. The city of Houston, as is well known, is one of the largest cities in the State of Texas. It is a very important railroad center; at least ten railroads run into it. Its population is between thirty and forty thousand, and it is also surrounded by a magnificent country. Ocean steamers are able to run up this bayou to within a few miles of the city of Houston, to a point where their cargoes are then transferred to the railroad, which carries them to the city. Now, the object of this appropriation is to improve this bayou over which this large commerce destined for the city of Houston passes after it crosses the bar at Galveston.

More than that, my friend, when you attack the appropriation for Aransas Pass and for Galveston and for Buffalo Bayou, when you assail all the appropriations proposed by this committee for those places and say that they ought not to be made because the appropriations of last year are still available, you state that which is inaccurate and is not borne out in the report of the engineer. It is not my fault when a gentleman hastily investigates a question for the purpose perhaps of making capital of some kind—cheap notoriety, perhaps, or for some other reason that I do not care to discuss, because I do not charge the gentleman with that; if I thought that was his object I would say so; but I do not say so; I will not say so. I have too much respect for him to make such a charge. I know that his motives are pure. I know that his desire is to save the surplus in the Treasury. I know this from the vote which he gave on the Mills bill, which was a proposition to reduce the surplus.

Certainly I will not impugn or assail the gentleman's motives. But I do say to him that when he states there will be unexpended, when this appropriation becomes available, over $30,000 for Aransas Pass or one dollar for Galveston, he states that which is incorrect and not borne out by the report of the engineers. On the contrary, if he had given this subject patient investigation and thorough examination he would have discovered from the letter of the Chief of Engineers published in the RECORD of December 22 that on the 1st of July next, when these appropriations become available, there will not be one dollar of the previous appropriations available for the improvement of Galveston bar. He would have discovered, moreover, that not more than $30,000 of last year's appropriations would remain expended at Aransas Pass on the 1st day of July, 1889. Does not the gentleman know that these appropriations do not become available until the beginning of the next fiscal year? If he does not know this, it is about time he should be learning the fact. It will not do for him to go home after delivering his economical valedictory and tell his people that he does not know these facts, because they will not send him back; and there is nothing in the world that I would appreciate more, next to a liberal appropriation for the ports on the Texas coast, than to shake the hand of my friend as a Representative in the Fifty-second Congress from the district which he now represents so well—except when he attacks Galveston and Aransas Pass.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] to have selected the particular point in this bill that he has attacked for the purpose rather of making a speech in the line of his former action against the river and harbor bill in general and as a whole than for the purpose of making any specific or effective attack upon the particular paragraph under consideration. I do not enter into the exchange of compliments between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not care anything about the question of what sort of a Democrat the one or the other is. It is enough for me to know that they are both Democrats, and that is bad for both of them. [Laughter.] It is only a question of degree and not of quality.

But I want to bring back the attention of the committee to the fact that these appropriations for the harbors of Texas have been made after as much care as it was possible for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to bestow upon them; and I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that while this bill was perhaps prepared rapidly, and presented here at an earlier day than seems to be in accord with his notion of what ought to have been done, yet in point of fact the study, the observation, and the experience of the committee in framing the river and harbor bill in the first session of this Congress were just as applicable to the wants and necessities of the country as sought to be provided for in this second bill. So that it was not necessary to spend so much time in the preparation of this bill as it was in the preparation of the former bill.

The gentleman has fallen into the same mistake so many have made looking at the balance of appropriation in the Treasury on the 15th of November, and overlooking the fact that contracts are existing for the expenditure long before the expiration of the current fiscal year. So that the appropriations carried by this bill will be the only appropriations available for the improvement of all public works at the time specified in the appropriations themselves.

Now a single other word, Mr. Chairman. These appropriations for the Texas coast have nothing of sectionalism, nothing of favoritism, nothing which can not be justified here and everywhere else by the commerce, present and prospective, and by the character of the works themselves to which these appropriations apply.

Everybody knows that the improvement of the harbor at Galveston has been a puzzle to the engineers of the country, and also of the necessity for that improvement. The great public demand, if it can be accomplished, has never been doubted by any fair-minded man, and because large appropriations have been made that is no indispensable criterion by which the fairness and justness of the projects themselves can be ascertained. The growing importance of Texas, lying in the position she does, and bearing the relation she does to the Republic of Mexico, the enormous growth of her agricultural products, the necessity there is to escape the transportation rates of the railroads from that far distant garden of the United States, compels the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of judicious discretion, to see to it that the natural disadvantage shall be overcome and the magnificent inlets to the commerce of Texas shall be provided for.

The committee has not made this bill, as far as these appropriations are concerned, by accident, and they will have to be assailed in a manner much more intelligent than they have been by the gentleman from Pennsylvania before they can be successfully defeated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in the remarks which he has submitted this morning on this river and harbor appropriation bill, avails himself of the opportunity to attack especially the appropriations made for the State of Texas. Now, I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], in the first place, that in making these appropriations we never consider them in regard to States. We regard each place appropriated for because of its commerce and the advantages which would necessarily result to the trade of the country from the proposed improvements. If we were to regard these matters in view of the States where they are located, let me say to the gentleman that Texas is six times larger than the State he has in part the honor to represent on this floor. It has a coast, line taking in the meanders, of more than 800 miles in length. In reference to this particular appropriation which the gentleman objects to, let me state that it is an outlet for a larger scope of country than the entire State the gentleman has the honor in part to represent. It is a region that is growing in commerce, in all its resources, as well as in population, so that the necessity for the opening of Aransas Pass is as great as that which exists in reference to any other place in the country.

The gentleman says we got $1,200,000 at the last session of Congress.

Mr. SOWDEN. Nine hundred and eighty-seven thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Nearly every dollar of it is now under contract. If we were to stop appropriating now, the result would be these works would deteriorate and the Government would lose largely by the lapse of time and the want of work being done on these various places along that coast. I hope the gentleman's amendment will not be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHEELER withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I exceedingly regret the coarse and unkind remarks that fell from the lips of the gentleman from Texas on my right. Especially do I regret the unkind cut which he administered in his thoughtless and inconsiderate remarks to my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and my equally distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], and he can only be excused for his unwarranted and indecent assault upon them and me on the ground that he is yet laboring under the serious effects which his New Year's calls had upon him. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment of Mr. SOWDEN was rejected.

Mr. CRAIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 7, 8, and 9, on page 10, and insert the following:

"For the completion of the improvement of Aransas Pass and Bay up to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex., $1,471,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. CRAIN. That amount is the amount of the estimate of the Chief of Engineers for the purpose of completing the work at Aransas Pass and Bay, as described in the bill. I ask the House to appropriate the entire amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to complete this work.

Mr. KERR. I would like to know something of the importance of this matter, whether this is a work of national importance, and whether the amount asked here to be expended is warranted by the bulk of the business transacted there.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I have not risen to oppose this amendment or occupy the time of the committee in discussing it simply because I expect the House to vote it down. I ask a vote.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAIN. I offer the further amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 7, 8, and 9, on page 10 of the bill, and insert: "Improving Aransas Pass and Bay up to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex.: Continuing improvement, $500,000."

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, in support of that amendment, I will call the attention of the committee to a paragraph contained in a letter received by me from the Chief of Engineers, in response to a communication addressed to him inquiring what amount, in his opinion, could be profitably expended during the ensuing fiscal year for improving Aransas Pass. He says:

The least amount that can be profitably expended at Aransas Pass during the same period—

That is during the next year—

is $200,000; but it would be far more beneficial to the work, both as regards ultimate cost and early completion, if this amount was increased to $500,000.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as a Representative of the State of Texas, and a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I desire to say in regard to the pending amendment that Aransas Pass has fared as well in the preparation of this bill as any other place which is a subject of appropriation in the river and harbor bill. I do not know of any reason why Aransas Pass should obtain the full amount recommended by the engineer more than any of the other places embodied in the bill; and if we gave all that the estimates of the engineers called for, this bill, in place of carrying the moderate amount that it does carry, would reach a sum of—I do not remember the precise amount——

Mr. BLANCHARD. Thirty-six millions of dollars.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Of $36,000,000, and for that reason I could not give my support to an amendment which gives largely more to this place than it gives to others which are equally important and meritorious.

Mr. SOWDEN. As I stated before, there is an unexpended balance for this work on hand now of $102,182.20. I understand full well that this bill goes into effect after the end of the present fiscal year. Upon this subject I need no instructions from the learned gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN]. While I do not underrate the importance of this improvement, I exceedingly regret that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] should display such an insatiable desire to absorb the surplus in the Treasury.

It seems to me that his position is not supported by the necessities of the case. Why, in the language of his colleague [Mr. STEWART], appropriate for this project more than its just share in the distribution made by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in its preparation of this bill? Is the $65,000 appropriation contained in this provision, in addition to the $102,182.20 balance on hand, not sufficient to keep up and maintain these works during the next fiscal year? Inside of another twelve months will convene the Fifty-first Congress, and if any appropriations are necessary for the furtherance of this improvement, that Congress, I take it, will be perfectly competent to take care of these public internal improvements. The great importance of some of these improvements is admitted.

I know territorially the extent and the vastness of the State of Texas and the great influence which her seaboard coast exercises upon the commerce of the country, and I particularly disclaimed all intention, in the few remarks already submitted, to underestimate her great importance as a seaboard State. I am sorry that the gentleman from Texas on my left [Mr. CRAIN] should manifest such frivolity and attempt to hold me up to public ridicule because I did not display the same anxiety that he did to be returned to the next Congress, and because of my opposition to this bill. He adds no strength to his position by pursuing such a course.

I want him to understand that I was not a candidate for renomination. I was not voted for by my constituents, and I leave this Congress because I voluntarily chose to do so, in order to resume my private business, not because I was left at the polls, as some of my unfortunate colleagues were. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRAIN. I am sorry, indeed, Mr. Chairman, that I made it necessary for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] to make two speeches in response to the pleasant remarks I made in reference to him. It was with no feeling on my part and no desire to hurt his feelings that I spoke of his being left. I am sorry he was left, sorry for the House and sorry for the country that he was left.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in response to his statement, I have to say it is erroneous; and I give the gentleman the credit of believing that he does not intend to mislead the committee in reference to his statement that there are $102,000 on hand for the improvement of Aransas Pass. I would refer this committee to the letter from the Chief of Engineers, in which he states that at the beginning of the next fiscal year there will be only $30,000 of the annual appropriation unexpended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 7, 8, and 9, and insert: "For the improvement of Aransas Pas and Bay up to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex.: Continuing the improvement, $200,000."

Mr. CRAIN. It was said by my colleague [Mr. STEWART], in discussing the other amendment which I offered and which has been voted down, that Aransas Pass got more than its share—or about its share, I believe, was his language.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. You referred to the estimate that was made by the engineer in charge of the work.

Mr. CRAIN. No, I did not. I referred to the estimate of the Chief of Engineers—$200,000.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. I understood you to say $500,000.

Mr. CRAIN. I referred to the estimate of the Chief of Engineers for $200,000. In your discussion of the other amendment offered by me you said Aransas Pass got its full share.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Based upon the estimate of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CRAIN. I thought, Mr. Chairman, in making these appropriations for internal improvements, the Congress of the United States was governed by the question of the national importance and commercial necessity for the improvements. I did not know that the question was dealt and shuffled. I did not know that it was a question of distributing upon a certain basis money to various ports, harbors, and rivers of the United States; and, Mr. Chairman, in answer to that proposition, I will ask my colleague to state the reason why the district represented by Mr. FITCH, of New York, gets for the improvement of the Harlem River $150,000 in this bill as against $70,000 in the last bill? I would like to ask my colleague why Black Warrior River, in Alabama, gets the same appropriation under this bill as it did under the last bill? Why did the committee make these discriminations?

So far as the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] are concerned, I will say to him that it is not only the State of Texas which is seeking an outlet by Aransas Pass and Galveston, but it is twenty States and Territories west of the Mississippi River, aggregating in their territorial limits two-thirds of the United States with the District of Columbia and all the Territories included, Alaska alone being excluded from the computation. I will state further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is not more than one Western State west of the Mississippi River that is not nearer the Gulf of Mexico than to the city of New York. It is not Texas alone that will be benefited if this improvement be carried out, but it affects the whole Western country, occupying an area greater than the thirteen original States. Therefore I ask from this committee and from the Congress simply what the Government engineer estimates ought to be expended during the next fiscal year for this improvement.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, the whole system of these public internal improvements is radically wrong, and should be thoroughly reformed, if not entirely abolished. Vast sums of the public moneys have been expended upon some of these improvements to no purpose. In many instances the engineer's preliminary examinations of the contemplated subjects for improvement have turned out to be wholly unreliable. A large number of these expensive schemes never should have been undertaken nor their improvement recommended. These undertakings should be most carefully and scientifically examined, and their feasibility ascertained and determined before the expenditure of any of the people's money for their improvement. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have already been squandered upon some of these projects, when it might have been saved to the Government had the preliminary examinations been reliable and absolutely certain.

In support of what I have said, I shall call the attention of the committee to but three projects, upon which $622,738.88 have been wasted and uselessly expended:

First. Take the harbor at Brazos Santiago, Tex. The Chief of Engineers, in his report upon this subject, says that—

The present project for the improvement of this locality was adopted in 1881, the object being to fix the position of the channel over the bar at the entrance and to deepen it. In its natural state the channel was shifting, and its depth varied from 6 feet to 8 feet. The amount expended during the year was $3,386.06. It was applied to a survey, recording commercial statistics, and reports. The total amount expended to June 30, 1888, is $188,590.23 (besides an appropriation of $6,000 in 1878, applied to removing a wreck). It has resulted in no useful effect upon the bar, and the works heretofore constructed have practically disappeared. It is proposed during the coming year to limit operations to merely keeping a record of commercial statistics.—Report of Secretary of War, second session Fiftieth Congress, volume 2, part 1, page 176.

It is certain, therefore, that $188,590.23 have been completely lost upon this harbor. "The works heretofore constructed have practically disappeared," and with them this large sum of money.

Let us look a little further into this matter. On July 1, 1887, the amount available for the continuation of this improvement was $37,295.83, and of which $3,386.06 was expended during the last fiscal year, leaving an unexpended balance of $33,909.77 on hand July 1, 1888; and notwithstanding this fact, and the non-feasibility of the project, this Congress by act of August 11, 1888, appropriated the additional sum of $25,000, thus increasing the available balance to $58,909.77 for the prosecution of an improvement that has practically disappeared and proved a perfect failure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. SOWDEN.

Mr. SOWDEN. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, what is to become of the $58,909.77? Is it to be wasted in keeping a record of commercial statistics at this point?

Second. Take the mouth of Brazos River, Texas.

The Chief Engineer, in his report upon this subject, says that—

The advisability of a further prosecution of this improvement under the project adopted in 1880 being questionable, the subject was submitted to Congress in a special report printed in House Executive Document No. 109, Fiftieth Congress, first session. The total amount expended to June 30, 1888, is $142,098.43.

It has not resulted in any useful effect upon the bar.—Report of Secretary of War, second session Fiftieth Congress, volume 2, part 1, page 175.

Think of the immense sum of money absolutely squandered upon this improvement, all of which might have been saved had the proper preliminary examination been made before this work was begun.

There is an unexpended balance of $16,651.57 remaining on hand and available for the continuation of this improvement. What is to be done with it? Can no scheme be devised by which it may also be made to disappear?

Third. Take Pass Cavallo Inlet to Matagorda Bay, Texas.

The Chief Engineer, in his report upon this work, says that—

The works heretofore constructed for the improvement of this locality have practically disappeared, and if resumed, must begin anew upon a new site at a largely increased estimate of cost. The total amount expended to June 30, 1888, is $292,050.22. It has not resulted in any useful effect upon the bar.—Report of Secretary of War, second session Fiftieth Congress, volume 2, part 1, page 175.

On July 1, 1888, there was an unexpended balance of $35,449.78 on hand and available for the continuation of this improvement. What is to be done with it? Is it to follow in the wake of the $292,050.22?

The unprecedentedly large sum of $622,738.88 absolutely squandered upon these three projects! How many more hundreds of thousands of dollars have been similarly thrown away upon the smaller rivers, harbors, and creeks of this country? How much money is appropriated continuously in these measures for purely local improvements in which the public have very little concern and no benefit? Will there ever be an end to this recklessly extravagant and injudicious legislation?

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there has certainly been time enough expended in the discussion of this section, but I desire before we take a vote to say a few words in reply to what has fallen from my colleague [Mr. CRAIN]. My colleague certainly understands that I am not opposed to getting as large appropriations for any port in our State as can be obtained, because I am a believer in river and harbor improvements. He asks me why it is that $100,000 was appropriated for the Black Warrior River. I will tell him that the estimate for the Black Warrior River was $300,000, and we have recommended only about one-third of the amount asked for by the Secretary of War. As to the Harlem River, I have not looked at that, but, as I stated the other day, although the committee attempted, as a general rule, to give about 33⅓ per cent. of the estimates, the rule was not inflexible. We adhered to it, however, as nearly as we could, and in doing so the ports of Texas got as large appropriations, relatively, as the other ports throughout the country, and in some cases larger.

Mr. CRAIN. Will my colleague be kind enough to tell me what port on the coast of Texas got more than 33⅓ per cent.?

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. None; and on the Atlantic coast, in other States, there are a great many ports that did not get it, either.

Mr. CRAIN. Aransas Pass does not even get one-third of the estimates.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Not quite; but the same is true of Charleston and of other places on the Atlantic coast. There was no injustice attempted to be done to Texas. We tried to give her a fair proportion of the money, and I asked for all that I felt that I could ask for under the rule which governed the action of the committee in making these appropriations.

Mr. CRAIN. I wish it to be understood that I was not reflecting on my colleague at all.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Oh, I understand that, but your colleague feels it necessary to say something in behalf of his course when you attack the appropriations that are recommended for the ports in our State.

Mr. CRAIN. Well, if the shoe pinches I can not help that, but I do not intend to make it pinch.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, in reply to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] I will say it is quite evident that of all his father's children he loves himself the best [laughter], and I should have enjoyed his argument much more if he had found it convenient to attack this bill when the appropriations for Pennsylvania were under consideration.

Mr. SOWDEN. He did.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Not to-day.

Mr. SOWDEN. I said what I had to say on that subject the other day.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. But to-day you have devoted your remarks to Texas, and you have attacked every appropriation that is made for any place in our State, and, I repeat, I would have enjoyed your argument much better if you had made it when the appropriations for your own State of Pennsylvania were under consideration.

Mr. SOWDEN. I attacked them, too.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. CRAIN; and there were—ayes 6, noes 33.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CHEADLE and Mr. BLANCHARD were appointed.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana (during the count by tellers). I ask that the tellers report. It is clear that there is no quorum in the House. Would it not be in order to move that the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be after the tellers have made their report. If there be no objection, the Chair will announce the result of the count so far as it has proceeded. On this question the ayes are 6, the noes 74.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

The tellers continued the count, and reported—ayes 8, noes 90.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the point of no quorum is withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it; and the amendment is not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improvement of entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas: Continuing improvement, $300,000.

Mr. CRAIN obtained the floor.

Mr. KERR. I move to strike out this appropriation. I want to know the reasons for including it in the bill. There is no light thrown on this subject in the report of the committee.

Mr. CRAIN. I did not understand the gentleman's remark.

Mr. KERR. I say the report of the committee states nothing in regard to this appropriation; and I would like to know why it is asked for.

Mr. CRAIN. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the lines just read, and insert:

"For the completion of the improvement of entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, $6,200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, the amount named in this amendment is that which has been suggested by the Chief of Engineers in the Book of Estimates for the completion of the project for the improvement of the bar and harbor at Galveston. I was asked, I believe, by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR], what is the necessity for this improvement? I do not think it necessary to answer that question for the benefit of the House, and the gentleman from Iowa will have abundant opportunity to ascertain the value of this work by reading something about the history and geography of the country.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas proposes that this appropriation be enlarged to the sum of $6,200,000. If these appropriations were enlarged in that ratio it would exhaust the entire surplus and we would not have enough money in the Treasury to carry on the improvements of our rivers and harbors, saying nothing about other expenses. While the report of the committee throws no light on this subject, the report of the engineer in relation to the item last under consideration goes to show how extravagant are the demands made upon the Treasury of the United States by these little towns all over the country. I understand that the appropriation for Aransas Pass was mainly in the interest of Corpus Christi. Now when you come to look at the freights from that port, you will find that they average only about 8 or 10 tons a day the year round; and the Government of the United States had better employ teams to haul the freight from that port than incur the expense of that improvement. The commerce there amounts to about 6,000 tons a year.

Mr. CRAIN. Is the gentleman referring to Galveston?

Mr. KERR. No; I am referring to the previous item.

Mr. CRAIN. That is passed.

Mr. KERR. I know it is; but I am calling attention to it to illustrate the extravagance of these appropriations. On the particular improvement now under consideration the report of the committee throws no light whatever.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman is mistaken. I will state, if he will permit me——

Mr. KERR. I will.

Mr. CRAIN. The local engineer in charge of the improvements at Galveston states that the commerce of that port last year amounted to $73,000,000.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman states that; and of course I am very glad he has had the opportunity to get the statement before the House, because it gives some reason why the appropriation should be made. But so far as the report of the committee is concerned it does not say a word about it.

Mr. CRAIN. The committee could not enlarge upon the work at every place.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman says the committee could not go into the reasons for the improvements at every place. Why, sir, if a town in our Western country asks an appropriation for a court-house we have to show all the facts and figures; we have to present the whole merits of the case in a separate report before the House will consent to act upon it.

But on these three hundred and sixty-one items in this bill there is not one particle of light given us unless in general recommendations made by the committee.

I hold that kind of legislation is not wise—is not just. It is unfair to the representatives of the American people and to the people themselves to have large appropriations involving millions and millions of dollars without having the special reasons for them presented in a report. In this single item of rivers and harbors we are asked to appropriate sums of money equal to what was sufficient to carry on the Government forty years ago in all its departments, and we are asked to do this without a single particle of light in regard to the appropriations which we are asked to make. It is not sufficient to say that these same improvements have been voted for in former bills. This Congress has no right to assume without investigation and without proof that all former improvements have been wisely made, and that if an improvement has been once put in the bill it must remain in it forever. Neither is it safe or wise to assume that the engineers' report is a sufficient warrant for an appropriation, for they are generally interested in the improvement on which they report, and their business and living depend on it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR], Mr. Chairman, almost every single item in this river and harbor bill has been appropriated for by Congress after Congress for a number of years. There is not a single item in the bill, I believe, which has not been appropriated for heretofore. Now, it would be utterly impossible for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in any report made to the House to give all the information in regard to these various improvements. If my friend would only examine the reports of the engineers he would find there are four volumes, and with many thousands of pages, giving the neccessary information as to the improvements for which appropriations are made in this bill.

Mr. KERR. I have had the reports of the engineers, but not for this session.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It is not the fault of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that the gentleman has not had the report of the Chief of Engineers for this session.

Mr. KERR. Whose fault is it, then?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It is the fault of the Public Printer, if anybody's; but the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have had these reports of the engineers and they have examined them, as they have examined former reports heretofore relating to the same improvements. We must rely on the information given to us by the engineers who have charge of these public works.

It is the misfortune of some gentlemen who have not been here a great while that they are finding fault with these appropriations for improvements like the Galveston Harbor, which have been discussed here nearly every year since I have been a member of the House. For years we have been discussing the improvement of the harbor of Galveston. Everybody knows and everybody concedes the importance of the improvement not only to the city of Galveston and the State of Texas, but to the country. It is certainly of interest to the State of Kansas, it is of interest to the State of Colorado, and it certainly is of interest to a great many portions of the United States, outside of Texas, that Galveston Harbor should, if possible, be improved.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How much has been appropriated heretofore for the improvement of Galveston Harbor?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Some two or three millions of dollars perhaps have been appropriated for that purpose. If the gentleman had waited only a moment I would have said the only doubt has been as to the probability of making a deep harbor at the city of Galveston.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That brings up the question I desire to suggest. After $3,000,000 have been expended for Galveston Harbor I wish to know——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I do not propose to give exact figures, but about $2,000,000.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I think it is more than that. But after that large appropriation of two or three millions of dollars has there been improvement in any perceptible degree of that harbor of Galveston?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. They think so. So the engineers report. It is the opinion of the Engineer Corps that it is practicable to improve the harbor at Galveston.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am putting these questions in the best faith. I have understood, whether correctly or not, that Galveston Harbor is merely quicksand, and that every effort heretofore made in this improvement is, on the system adopted by the Engineer Corps, abortive.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. That is not in accordance with the opinion of the engineers who have had charge of this work, and we must rely on the information of the engineers as to the practicability of making some of these improvements. But Galveston is an important harbor.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is no question about that.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Every one concedes that.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is no question about that.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It is worth the experiment to improve it, and it was for a long time, I believe, regarded merely as an experiment. But we must rely on the engineers having the work in charge.

We are constantly met by objections on the part of the members to works which have been considered by the House of Representatives from time to time for years. This is an appropriation the gentleman from Iowa should know something about, and the report of the engineers would give him all the information he desires. It would be utterly impossible for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or for the Committee of the Whole to examine all these reports during the discussion of the river and harbor bill unless we are to occupy the whole session in doing so.

So, Mr. Chairman, members ought to inform themselves as to these improvements by reading the reports, and then oppose measures which they know or believe have no merit after making an examination of such reports.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Iowa that the engineers' reports upon these various works of internal improvement are a part of the committee's report, and are referred to in the report, and, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois who has just taken his seat, it would be a physical impossibility, it would be useless as well as absolutely impracticable, for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to enter in their report into a detailed statement in reference to each work of improvement it considers when it formulates the river and harbor bill.

In reference to the question addressed to the gentleman from Illinois by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], I will state that the Chief of Engineers has reported that the effect of the work done at Galveston up to the present time has been to increase the depth of water on the inner bar about 7 or 8 feet; in other words, from 12 or 13 feet to about 20 or 21. But there has been no beneficial result, it is claimed, so far as the outer bar is concerned, because the work done up to the last two or three years has been purely tentative or experimental in its character. Several experiments have been tried. First the gabionade system was tried, but the first storm that occurred swept the gabions away and destroyed the work. Then the combined scheme of mattresses and rock was tried, but it was soon found that because of the ravages of the marine insect known as the teredo the mattresses were soon destroyed and the rock gradually disappeared.

A board of survey was then appointed by General Newton to examine into the question of the best and most practicable scheme for the improvement of the harbor. That board convened in the city of New York, and General Duane was the presiding officer. I think the present Chief of Engineers was a member of the board. They started out upon the work intrusted to them, and, after an examination, submitted a plan whereby, instead of having sunken jetties—that is, jetties beneath the surface of the water—they have recommended jetties that rise several feet above high-water mark, and instead of being constructed of mattresses and stone this new scheme or plan recommends the use of stone alone, so that they are impervious to the ravages of the teredo; and this is evidently the project which the Chief of Engineers in his report of last year, and his successor in the report of this year, had in mind when they stated that the effect of the improvement would be to give from 20 to 30 feet of water, according to the length of the jetties.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Do I understand that the scheme or system mentioned has been tested at all, or have any expenditures in that direction been made?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, sir. There have been expended about $300,000, and now under contract about $500,000, every dollar of which will be expended by the time this appropriation becomes effective.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Under the new system?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, sir.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CRAIN, it was rejected.

Mr. CRAIN. I have another amendment to this paragraph which I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 10 and 11, on page 10, and insert: "Improving the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas: Continuing improvement, $1,000,000."

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, the local engineer in charge of the work of improvement at Galveston Harbor has asked for an appropriation of two and a half millions of dollars for the ensuing fiscal year. He stated that this amount could be profitably expended and that it would finish the jetties out to the crest of the bar. The Chief of Engineers, however, asks Congress to appropriate $1,000,000, and says that this last amount can be profitably expended.

It has been conceded in this House on both sides, by the friends of the river and harbor bill and by its enemies, that the work of improving the bar and harbor of Galveston is one of national importance and necessity. If this be so—and, as I have already said, it is a conceded fact, conceded by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], who questioned me as to the work now going on, conceded even by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, upon whose headstone will be written the epitaph "Modesty killed him;" conceded by everybody—why is it that the Congress of the United States does not appropriate a sufficient amount to enable the engineers in charge of the work to carry out to a successful and rapid completion the project now on foot?

There are two essential factors in the improvement of such a harbor; one, the scientific knowledge and skill necessary, in the first place, to fabricate a scheme; and, in the second place, to carry it to completion; and the second factor is the money essential to enable science and skill combined to do its work. We hold the engineers of the Army responsible for the success or failure of the respective works committed to their charge, while at the same time we dole out the money necessary for the work with a niggardly hand.

Why, Mr. Chairman, improving the harbor of Cherbourg, or rather the building of the harbor of Cherbourg, in France, cost more money than the entire appropriation asked for by the River and Harbor Committee for the improvement of all the rivers and harbors in the United States. We can not accomplish the work, we can not have these improvements, unless the money necessary to enable the engineers to carry them out is appropriated. As I said before, and I appeal to the committee to be logical, everybody concedes the importance of the improvement, and that being a conceded fact, why, then, I repeat, does not the committee, acting as the representative of the House, give to the engineers in charge of the works enough money to enable them to give to this Congress some tangible evidence in response to the questions asked by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], as to the effect or practical results of the expenditures on the schemes which havs been adopted for the improvement of the harbor and bar of Galveston?

Mr. BLANCHARD. At the first session of this Congress Galveston Harbor was given an appropriation of half a million dollars. Very little of that money has been expended. The bill under consideration provides a further appropriation of $300,000 to continue the work at that point during the coming fiscal year. Notwithstanding what the Chief of Engineers says in reference to the amount that can be profitably expended there, the committee believes that the $300,000 provided for in this bill and the half million of the bill of the first session is about all the money that can be profitably expended there during the present fiscal year and next fiscal year. Galveston has fared in this bill just about as the other three hundred and fifty projects throughout the United States have fared, and I do not see any good reason why an exception should be made in favor of that harbor over other projected improvements going on of equal importance which only get one-third of the engineer's estimate. The amount estimated for Galveston is $1,000,000, and we have given $300,000, which approximates 33⅓ per cent. of that amount. I believe in the small bill of this session that amount is sufficient. With these remarks I ask for a vote.

Mr. CRAIN. I will take but a moment to respond to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is true that there is a large amount of the last appropriation unexpended; but the chairman of the committee well knows that every dollar of that amount is subject to contract, and that every dollar of it will have been expended at the time this appropriation becomes available. The Chief of Engineers, in a letter which I read to the committee when we were discussing this bill during the general debate, states that on the first day of July—the beginning of the next fiscal year—there will not be one dollar of the last appropriation for the improvement of Galveston Harbor remaining unexpended; and if half a million, Mr. Chairman, were necessary for that work during the last year, why is it the same amount should not be necessary the next year? Why is it that the committee cut the appropriation down to $300,000?

Mr. HERMANN. Would the gentleman give the amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers in his estimates?

Mr. CRAIN. I certainly would give to every place the amount asked by the Chief of Engineers in his estimates for two good reasons: First, I am opposed to this driblet system of appropriations, which really involves a waste of money in a great many instances; and, as another reason, I have great confidence in the skill and honesty of the gentleman who is at the head of the engineer department of the Army. It is his business, and the duty of the local engineers under his supervision, to consider these questions, to examine into them, investigate them, and give to their consideration all their skill and scientific knowledge upon the questions propounded and submitted. We are in a state of comparative ignorance on the matters. I presume there are very few gentlemen on this floor who are engineers; and, even admitting that there are some, they would be incompetent to grapple with these problems, because they would not have had the opportunity to examine the various places, plans for the improvement of which were submitted to them for consideration.

We are compelled in the nature of events to be governed and guided by the reports of the local engineers and by the analysis of those reports submitted to us annually by the Chief of Engineers. Having, therefore, confidence in his honesty and ability, and governed by those considerations as well as the national and commercial importance of Galveston, I ask at the hands of this committee a vote in favor of this amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out lines 10 and 11, on page 10, and insert: "For the completion of the improvement of the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, $333,333."

Mr. CRAIN. I desire to correct that amendment. It should be "continue the improvement" instead of "completion of the improvement."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will make the correction.

Mr. CRAIN. I call the attention of this committee to this fact which has been stated by the chairman, and also by my colleague on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. STEWART], that every place, or nearly all of those at least, embraced within the river and harbor bill now under consideration have received about one-third of the estimates submitted by the Chief of Engineers.

Now, the Chief of Engineers in his estimate tells Congress that he can profitably expend $1,000,000 at Galveston. Thirty-three and one-third per cent. of that would be $333,333.33. Why is it that you do not give to Galveston one-third? Why cut her down to $300,000? I am seriously in earnest about this amendment, because it is a line suggested by my colleague.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The committee laid down no absolute rule by which these appropriations were formulated. There are other points of equal importance with Galveston which received less than 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. CRAIN. Will you please name one?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, the improvement of the mouth of Columbia River, Oregon. That is an improvement the importance of which compares favorably with Galveston, a statement which I think the gentleman who sits behind you [Mr. HERMANN] will confirm.

Mr. HERMANN. I think the gentleman from Texas will concede that.

Mr. CRAIN. That is always the way. They appeal to gentlemen in whose cases they have acted favorably.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not yield to the gentleman from Texas. The committee have allowed Galveston nearly one-third of the estimate. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas asks for $333,000.

Mr. CRAIN. That is about one-third.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The bill proposes to give $300,000. The difference is not great, and against the proposition of the gentleman I invoke the rule "de minimis non curat lex."

Mr. CRAIN. I do not think that is one of the rules of the House. As it is a little amendment I hope the committee will give it to me.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRAIN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 30.

Mr. CRAIN. No quorum.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask my friend from Texas if he will not waive the question of no quorum, provided he shall have a separate vote in the House?

Mr. CRAIN. Vox populi, vox Dei; I will do that.

The Clerk read as follows:

For ice-harbor at the mouth of Muskingum River, Ohio: For repairs, $10,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to amend that paragraph by striking out, in line 21, the words "For repairs" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "To complete."

Mr. BLANCHARD. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor of refuge at Portage Lake, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move to amend that paragraph by striking out "ten" and inserting in lieu thereof "thirty;" so as to make the appropriation $30,000. I will explain briefly the reason for offering this amendment. This bill generally is constructed upon the plan of appropriating about 33 per cent. of the estimates of the Secretary of War, based upon the report of the Chief of Engineers. The harbor of refuge at Portage Lake is made an exception to that rule. In the Book of Estimates, page 182, it will be seen that the Secretary of War recommends an appropriation for this harbor of $60,000, but the committee recommend an appropriation of only $10,000, about 16 per cent. The same discrimination was made against this harbor in the river and harbor bill passed at the first session of this Congress. Last year also the estimate was $60,000 for this harbor, but the committee reported an appropriation of only $10,000, while in the same district (which I have the honor to represent) an appropriation of $50,000 was recommended by the Secretary of War and the committee reported an appropriation of forty-five thousand.

Of course I know that circumstances may vary the proprieties in different cases, but in this instance I must insist that the Portage Lake harbor of refuge is justly entitled to a fair pro rata of the entire amount recommended by the Secretary of War. Upon the basis of 33 per cent., the general rule, this harbor would of course receive but $20,000. I have, however, made my amendment thirty thousand, because this harbor was discriminated against in the same manner and to the same extent last session, and I now propose that we shall appropriate a sum sufficient to improve the harbor so as to make it of use. It is not as yet a very important harbor commercially. The entrances and clearances during the past year have not perhaps been more than five hundred vessels; but during the last few months the town at Portage Lake has become a railroad terminus, its commerce has largely increased, and it is certain to increase much more rapidly in the future. The harbor is one that is very easy to improve, and it is a point at which a harbor of refuge is greatly needed. There is no harbor of refuge into which vessels can run in distress or in storm anywhere between Grand Haven and the Straits of Mackinaw. In stress of weather all vessels are compelled to make for lee behind the Manitou Islands, about 60 miles from the harbor in question.

It is true that the Government is about to construct, and has already made a liberal appropriation for, a harbor of refuge at Ludington, about 40 miles south of Portage Lake, but nothing has yet been done toward constructing that work or expending the appropriation, and meanwhile many wrecks occur upon that part of the lake coast. It is exceedingly desirable, therefore, that this work at Portage Lake shall progress as rapidly as possible so as to make the port of refuge available, and I believe that the amount named in my amendment will be required for that purpose. Even as a commercial harbor the importance of Portage Lake is rapidly increasing from year to year, and, as I have said, it is certain to increase much more rapidly in the future, and I trust that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will not oppose this amendment, which is simply designed to put this harbor upon the same basis as the other harbors upon Lake Michigan by giving it 33⅓ per cent. of the amount recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is true that the estimates of the engineer for the fiscal year 1890 of the amount that can be profitably expended upon this harbor of refuge at Portage Lake, Michigan, is $60,000. It is also true that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have embodied in this bill but $10,000 for the continuation of the work at that point. The amount we have recommended in this bill, therefore, is not one-third of the amount which the Chief of Engineers says can be profitably expended there, but my friend from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], who is eminently a fair man, will recollect that the present bill is but a little over half as large as the river and harbor bill of the first session of this Congress.

Now, in the first session of this Congress, the river and harbor bill, notwithstanding the fact that it carried $22,000,000, or nearly double the aggregate of the present bill, appropriated only $10,000 for this harbor. In a bill of half that size we have now given it an equal amount. When we have done as well as this, I think my friend from Michigan is not in a position to complain. The last bill passed the House without any objection as to the amount of this appropriation; it also passed the Senate and the committee of conference without any objection as to the amount. If $10,000 was sufficient to continue that work in the present fiscal year, I submit that $10,000, as reported in this bill, is sufficient to continue the work in the next fiscal. I am fortified in this statement by what the engineer says with reference to the amount heretofore expended yearly for Portage Lake Harbor. On page 253 of part 1 of the Engineer's Report we find that the amount expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888—the last fiscal year—was $11,479. If more than this sum could not be profitably expended during that fiscal year, and if $10,000 was sufficient to be expended during the present fiscal year, we of the committee took it for granted that $10,000 would be sufficient for this work during the coming fiscal year. This is why we have given Portage Lake Harbor only $10,000 instead of $20,000, which would have been its pro rata if it had received one-third the amount asked for by the Chief of Engineers.

We were not guided altogether by what the Chief of Engineers said with reference to the amount which could be profitably expended. We had in mind also what was appropriated in the last bill, which, as I have said, was only $10,000. We concluded that if we now gave $10,000 in a bill one-half the size of the last bill it would be satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to criticise the action of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because I believe the committee is made up of fair gentlemen who have sought to frame such a bill as could pass the House and would benefit the country. But this harbor is one as to which genuine economy would require that the entire amount requisite for its completion should be appropriated at once. I realize, however, that this can not be asked for one harbor more than for another. Therefore I have only proposed that this improvement shall receive its pro rata of appropriation according to the amount given to other harbors.

This harbor of refuge when completed will be the most commodious and accessible upon Lake Michigan. It is a straight sand cut from Lake Michigan to Portage Lake, a distance of about 2,200 feet; and the principal work to be done is simply dredging. More or less can be done in any one year. At present, with about 8½ feet of water, the harbor is of course absolutely worthless as a harbor of refuge. The sooner the project is carried out the sooner this improvement will be available for the purpose for which it is intended, that is, as a place of refuge for vessels in distress. Meanwhile the harbor is being used, and is valuable as a commercial harbor.

I will not occupy further time in advocating this amendment. I believe it is meritorious and ought to be adopted. I propose simply to place this harbor upon the same basis as all the adjacent harbors on the lake.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. CUTCHEON, there were—ayes 15, noes 36.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I was about to say that I would not make the point of no quorum, because I desire to see this bill expedited; but, of course, it is beyond my power to say whether any other gentleman shall make the point.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Under the circumstances, I trust the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] will withdraw his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentlemen from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to see this bill delayed——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think my amendment a fair and proper one; but if justice can be done all round by allowing for this work $20,000 instead of $30,000, which would give us for this session 33 per cent. of the estimate, I should be content.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman will accept $15,000, I will agree to that.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Very well. I accept the gentleman's proposition to make the appropriation $15,000.

Mr. CHEADLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHEADLE. Tellers having been ordered, and the regular order being demanded, is it not the duty of the tellers to take their places?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Louisiana were appointed as tellers, but the reason the Chair hesitated in directing the tellers to proceed with the count was that the parties seemed to be trying to come to an agreement about the figure in the amendment——

Mr. BLANCHARD. And we have done so.

The CHAIRMAN. And it would be competent for the gentleman offering the amendment to alter its terms before the taking of the vote upon it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I understand the chairman of the committee [Mr. BLANCHARD] accepts my proposition to make the appropriation $15,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I accept it.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to strike out the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as now offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I accept that.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the committee must act upon the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Is this question debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to be heard briefly.

I am aware of the fact that it is not fashionable for a member to speak for any public improvement outside of his own district, but I wish to say in regard to this particular harbor that it is interesting not only to the representative of that harbor but to every representative of every harbor on the northern lakes. It is a harbor of refuge for the northern part of Lake Michigan, and, as I understand, it is the only one there existing. It is incomplete because of insufficiency of depth, and if I am wrong in my statement I desire to be corrected.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman is correct. It has but 8 feet and it is desired to have 18.

Mr. ADAMS. Exactly; and the size of vessels there is increasing year by year. We have but 15 feet at Chicago, where we ought to have 18, and every harbor of refuge on Lake Michigan, or on every one of the northern lakes, ought to have at least 15 feet if not 18. As this is only for dredging and continuing the existing improvement, I regret that the gentleman from Michigan did not put his amendment at $20,000; but as he has seen proper to place it at $15,000, it seems to me that every one interested in the navigation of the northwestern lakes ought to support that amendment.

Mr. CHEADLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHEADLE. A vote was taken upon a pending amendment, which vote developed the fact that a quorum was not present. As soon as the vote was announced I rose in my place and made the point that no quorum had voted. Having raised the point of no quorum, can any other business be transacted unless the point of no quorum is withdrawn or further count has developed the presence of a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, in response to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana, that after the point of no quorum was made the gentleman from Michigan moved, as he had a right to do, his new amendment, which was in substance the withdrawal of the first amendment and offering another, and the vote is now being taken upon the latter amendment. Pending that the gentleman from Indiana has moved to strike out the section, which is in order after the committee has had the opportunity of perfecting the text of the section.

Mr. CHEADLE. But my inquiry is, can any business be transacted at all, or can the gentleman withdraw his amendment, until the question of a quorum has been decided?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Michigan had the right to withdraw his amendment or substitute other amendments in different amounts until the House had finally acted upon the amendment. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XIX. When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted upon until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there was no final decision in this case, and the gentleman sought to withdraw the amendment and substitute a different one, which the Chair thinks he had a right to do.

Mr. CHEADLE. I admit that, as a general rule, the proposition suggested by the Chair would be correct; but the question of a quorum having been raised, my understanding is, and of course I only submit it for the decision of the Chair, that no further business can be transacted until that point is settled.

The CHAIRMAN. The withdrawal of the one proposition and the substitution of a new one deprived the House of the necessity of enforcing the presence of a quorum. The gentleman, of course, had a perfect right to make the point of no quorum, but the amendment having been withdrawn, no vote can be taken upon it. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana will be in order after the pending amendment shall have been acted upon.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. CUTCHEON.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 45, noes 2.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. CHEADLE and Mr. CUTCHEON were appointed tellers.

Pending the division,

Mr. WHITE, of New York, said: I ask that the tellers report, preparatory to a motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the tellers not having completed their count, a motion to rise would not be in order.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I ask that the count by tellers be announced, with a view to making that motion.

The tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 3.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11765) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette and Ontonagon in said State, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. WALTHALL.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 1278) for the relief of James A. Terrell;

A bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only.

It also announced the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5009) to provide certain arms, ammunition, and equipage to the State of Oregon for the militia thereof;

A bill (H. R. 7261) granting the right of way through certain lands in the State of Minnesota to the Moorhead, Leech Lake and Northern Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 8469) for the relief of Michael Pigott; and

A bill (H. R. 10869) to construct a road from Florence, S. C., to the national cemetery adjacent thereto.

It also announced the Senate had passed with amendment in which concurrence was requested the bill (H. R. 1959) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia.

It also announced the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes, and requested a conference with the House on said bill and amendments, and had appointed as conferees on its part, Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. GORMAN.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians, in the State of Minnesota; when the Speaker signed the same.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. 1786) to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to withdraw that for a moment in order that I may obtain an order to have a bill printed. It is the bill (S. 3511) in regard to public lands. It is important that it should be printed and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that order has been made.

Then, on motion of Mr. BLANCHARD (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. VOORHEES: A bill (H. R. 11918) to authorize the board of county commissioners of the county of Whitman, Washington Territory, to issue bonds and to build a court-house and jail and to sell and acquire real estate for such purposes—to the Committee on the Territories.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 3, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION CORRESPONDENCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has examined the message of the President of the United States sent in yesterday, together with the record of the transaction to which it refers. It relates and is supplemental to matters that have already been made public. It will therefore, if there be no objection, be read, laid upon the table, and printed.

The message was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed, as follows:

To the Senate.

On or about the 25th day of September, 1888, I received a copy of a resolution adopted on that day by the Senate in executive session, requesting the transmission to that body by the President of all communications and correspondence (not heretofore sent to the Senate) under his control on the subject of the proposed convention with China transmitted by him to the Senate by message dated 16th March, 1888, and on the subject of the reported failure of the Government of China to finally agree to the same.

A few days after the copy of said resolution was received by me, and on the 1st day of October, 1888, I sent a communication to the Congress accompanying my approval of a bill prohibiting the return of Chinese laborers to the United States, in which I supposed all the information sought under the terms of the Senate resolution above recited was fully supplied.

I beg to refer in this connection to Senate Executive Document No. 273, first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and especially to page 3 thereof.

Believing the information contained in said document answered the purposes of said Senate resolution, no separate and explicit answer was made thereto.

But in my message of October 1, 1888, the tenor and purport of a cipher dispatch from our minister in China to the Secretary of State, dated September 21, 1888, was given instead of attempting to transmit a copy of the same.

For greater precision, however, and with the object of answering in more exact terms the resolution of the Senate, I transmit with this, in paraphrase of the cipher, a copy of the said dispatch. I also transmit copies of two notes which accompanied my message of October 1, 1888, one from Mr. Shu Cheon Pon, chargé d'affaires of the Chinese legation in this city, dated September 25, 1888, to the Secretary of State, and the other being the reply thereto by the Secretary of State, dated September 26, 1888, both of which will be found in Senate Executive Document No. 273.

The dispatch and notes above referred to comprise, in the language of the Senate resolution, "all communications and correspondence" the transmission of which is therein requested.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 2, 1889.

CERTIFICATES OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress of February 3, 1887, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed by the States of Maine and California; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying certificates, to lie on the table.

GEORGE F. ROBERTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 20, 1888, a statement of the sum of money required to pay George F. Roberts, administrator, and others, alleged excess of money erroneously collected as set forth in Senate bill No. 2001; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HOAR. I am informed that all the members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills are unable just now to attend to the duties of that committee and that the clerk of the committee has sustained a severe accident. I ask unanimous consent that the Chair be authorized to appoint two additional members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to have the authority of the full committee until otherwise ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Chair be authorized to appoint two additional members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills with authority to act with the powers of the full committee until otherwise ordered. If there be no objection, it is so ordered. The Chair appoints the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] as additional members of the committee.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of Washington Territory, praying that an appropriation be made by Congress for the improvement of Cabinet, Rock Island, and Methow Rapids, and other important points where float bowlders obstruct the channel of the Columbia River. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANFORD presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the passage of the Senate tariff bill unless such modifications are made as will protect the beet-sugar, wine, and fruit industries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that American interests in the Samoan Islands be protected; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the establishment of a relief station in the Arctic Ocean; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that appropriations be made for the hydrographic office at San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of the Maine Woolen Manufacturers, by Lewis Anderson, president, and A. F. Bradbury, secretary, urging legislation upon the subject of undervaluation of foreign merchandise when passed through the custom-houses of the United States, and also upon the classification of worsted and woolen cloths and yarns; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1140) authorizing the Secretary of War to procure and present suitable medals to the survivors of the "Forlorn-hope storming party" of Port Hudson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1786) to regulate the appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3766) to refund certain income taxes illegally collected; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 124) relating to the salary of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

INDIAN WAR VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all records and papers on file in his Department relative to the service of volunteers from Washington and Idaho Territories in the Indian war of 1877, commonly known as the Nez Percé war, together with information as to the number and names of such volunteers, officers and privates, respectively, the period or periods of service, and whether any payments, and if so, what amount, and when, have been made for such service.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all records and papers on file in his Department relative to service of volunteers from Washington and Idaho Territories in the Indian war of 1877, commonly known as the Nez Percé war.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1959) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7) granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh;
A bill (H. R. 206) granting a pension to William H. Starr;
A bill (H. R. 210) granting a pension to Ephraim Nye;
A bill (H. R. 308) granting a pension to John Lynn;
A bill (H. R. 724) for the relief of Louisa McLain;
A bill (H. R. 2061) granting an increase of pension to Francis De Freitas;

CANCELED LAND CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], coming over from a former day, which will be read:

The Chief Clerk read the resolution offered by Mr. VOORHEES December 21, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate, prior to the expiration of the present session of Congress, a list of all homestead, timber-culture, and pre-emption entries to public lands which have been canceled after issuance of final receipt and certificate therefor, during the present administration, for any cause other than voluntary relinquishment. Such list shall be similar in the data supplied to the list of canceled desert-land entries furnished in response to a prior resolution of this body.

Mr. VOORHEES. I simply want the adoption of the resolution. It is an inquiry for facts and information of great consequence to the people. I do not suppose it is necessary to discuss it; I presume there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. HALE. I ask leave to call up for passage Order of Business 601. It will take no time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Maine moves to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 601, a bill (S. 870) to provide for the retirement of a certain class of officers in the United States Navy.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield for that bill provided it takes no time, but if it does I shall object to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that any officer who, after twenty years or more of service, has been or shall hereafter be placed on the retired-list of the Navy by reason of physical defect, which defect was not a disqualification for service under the regulations at the time of such officer's original entry into the service, but has subsequently been made so, shall, upon the certificate of the retiring board to such state of facts, be held to be retired for disability incident to the service, and shall receive the rate of pay established by law for officers of his grade retired under such disability.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Maine to make a short statement, as there is no printed report, as to the object of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I explained the provisions of the bill to the Senator from Missouri, who had it arrested heretofore, to his satisfaction. It only applies, so far as is known, to a single officer, whose defect, a lack of vision, was created after he entered the service. So he has no benefit from the order of the Department unless this bill is passed. It simply makes the difference between the furlough pay and three-quarters pay, and only applies in one case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON PRECIOUS METALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask consent to submit at this time the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of the final report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the recent changes in the relative values of the precious metals, with minutes of evidence and appendices, presented to both houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty, in octavo form, in long primer type, and bound in cloth, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator if that includes the full report.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does, and the testimony.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing under the rule.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VEST, in Schedule I, cotton manufactures, line 1211, to strike out "10 cents per pound" and insert "35 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to make the paragraph read:

313. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn (not wound upon spools), whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams, or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, if there is any one branch of human industry in which America ought not only to be able to compete with the world but to take the lead of the world, it would seem to me to be this of cotton. It is the most important of all the industries that pertain to this country, unless it be iron and its manufactures. It is growing in importance and the consumption of the manufactures of cotton is increasing in quantity every day.

I have collated a few statistics with reference to the production and the growth of cotton, which I wish to impart to the Senate. For the last fiscal year the consumption of the entire world was 10,911,000 bales of cotton, a bale being estimated at 450 pounds. Of this sum the Southern States of the United States of America furnished 7,017,707 bales. Very nearly seven-tenths of all the cotton that is produced or consumed in the world were produced in the Southern States. There were spun and woven into fabrics in the United States in the same year 2,230,494 bales. The remainder was exported and sold to foreign countries.

To show the importance and the rapid growth of the cotton production in this country, I find by examination that there were produced in the year 1837–'38, fifty years ago, 1,804,797 bales, against 7,017,707 bales, as I have stated, produced the last year. So the production of cotton itself in fifty years has increased 350 per cent. in the United States, and rapid as our population has grown the increase in production has more than kept pace with it; it has in fact largely exceeded it.

In all the civilized world the consumption of cotton has increased in the same proportion. In Great Britain in 1866–'67 there were consumed 2,560,000 bales, whereas in 1887 there were consumed in Great Britain 3,861,000 bales, an increase of over 50 per cent. in the consumption of that one country alone in twenty years.

On the continent of Europe the increase was still greater. In 1866–'67 on the Continent the consumption was 1,703,000 bales, when in 1887–'88 it was 3,770,000 bales, an increase largely over 100 per cent. In 1866–'67 the mills of the Southern States of this Union consumed only 76,000 bales of cotton. In 1887 they consumed 500,000 bales of cotton, whereas the mills of the Northern portion of the Union consumed, in 1866–'67, 746,000 bales, and last year they consumed 2,030,000 bales, showing an increase in the consumption of the Northern mills of nearly 300 per cent. and an increase in the consumption of the Southern mills of over 600 per cent.

The latter result, the extraordinaay ratio of increase in the consumption of the Southern mills, is not only astonishing, but to me it is particularly gratifying, for it may be truthfully said that every particle of progress that has been made in the cotton manufacture in the Southern mills has been done without the benefit of a single dollar of protection, not only in opposition and in competition with the mills of Old England, but with the mills of New England, which were established with an amount of capital and skill that made them quite as formidable as the mills of the old country. A statement I have here of the extent and distribution of the cotton mills of the Southern States will be found very interesting, and I ask the Secretary to read it for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The document forwarded by the Senator from North Carolina will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. VANCE. Almost all, you may say 95 per cent., of the goods manufactured in the Southern mills are of a quality less than 100 threads to the square inch, and therefore can not be affected beneficially or otherwise by protection. Those goods not only supply the local demand of all the South and Southwest, but to a very great extent are usurping the markets of the Northwest, so much so that but a few years since I saw the statement in the financial and commercial papers of the country that the spinners of similar coarse goods in the Northern mills had applied to the great trunk lines leading to the Northwestern country for special rates, putting it upon the ground that unless they could get some advantage of the Southern mills by special freight rates they would be driven out of the market.

Not only have the Southern mills pretty well taken the market of this country for that grade of goods, but large numbers and values of them are exported to foreign countries, as I shall show in a moment. I ask permission to read here a letter from one of the most intelligent gentlemen in my State, who is well acquainted with the condition of the mills in that State, and whose exposition of their condition will answer very well for that of mills in the South at large:

I proceed to answer your queries.

First. The mills of North Carolina are relatively numerous, but they are small, and they do not make a fine grade of yarn. ("The number of a yarn" is the number of hanks of that yarn it takes to make a pound.) Our mills mostly make from 14's to 20's; the great bulk is 14's and average is 15's. The numbers, however, run from 8's to 22's. A few mills make even finer numbers. At Wilmington they make 36's.

Second. The cloth made in this State is almost entirely either "brown sheetings" (unbleached plain white goods) or "plaids."

Brown sheetings is mostly 4 yards wide and 3 yards to the pound. Plaids are mostly 25 to 27 inches wide, 4, 4½, and 5 yards to the pound. The yarn almost exclusively used in both these goods is No. 14. No. 14 yarn makes 44 threads to the inch, or, counting both ways, 88.

No. 14 yarn, running 44 threads to the inch, 25 inches wide, makes a cloth weighing about 5 yards to the pound. But it can be "beat" thicker so that the cloth will be heavier, and will take only 4 yards to make a pound; the width also varies to 27 inches.

I inclose samples of cloth made from No. 14 yarn, weighing 4, 4½, and 5 yards to the pound, sent by Mr. Willard. I also inclose a sample of a finer yarn, possibly No. 22, running over 6 yards to the pound. You will perceive the difference in texture between that and the others, and can feel the difference in thickness from beating between the others, all made from No. 14 yarn.

Goods weighing 5 yards to the pound sell wholesale at 5 cents a yard; 4½ yards to the pound, at 5½ cents, and 4 yards to the pound, at 6½ cents.

In spinning there is a waste of one-fifth, so that spinners say 100 pounds of cotton will make 83 pounds of yarn. Say 1⅛ pounds of cotton make a pound of yarn. With cotton at 10 cents, 12 cents of cotton is 1 pound of yarn. Cotton is now about 9 cents, and No. 8 (2-ply) yarn is quoted at about 12½ cents. The cost of spinning is seen to be almost nothing, relatively.

But in some cases finer numbers are used, say, then, from 14's to 20's. The great bulk, however, is as above. (At Wilmington the mill makes Nos. 32 to 36 yarns, which it makes into "print cloth." The square inch contains 64 by 64 threads. This is the standard "print cloth," on which calico is "printed.")

The products of our North Carolina mills, as far as I have information, are not exported.

The brown sheetings are sold here at home chiefly. The plaids were formerly for local consumption, but the business proving profitable the mills increased and the supply was more than Southern demand. The surplus has found a market at the Northwest, and in a less degree at the North.

Before the war our mills made the yarns which were shipped to Philadelphia, where there were a large number of looms employed merely in making "plaids," which were sold at the South. The Southern mills have largely broken up those looms, although some are yet run in Philadelphia. At the North our Southern plaids are not used much. They have other "colored" goods, but the women do not wear this class of goods there for dresses, as at the South.

Print cloth is made into calico only at the large printing mills at the Northeast.

The number of mills in North Carolina is stated, as follows:

Eighty-one mills, 240,081 spindles, 5,856 looms, consuming 80,485 bales of cotton, weighing 35,668,479 pounds, the average yarn being No. 15.

Although no foreign shipments are made of North Carolina products (as far as I know), yet shipments are made from other Southern points. One mill in South Carolina I have heard (perhaps at Greenville) has sold all of its products for some years in China.

The foreign trade in cotton goods has not varied largely for some years, excepting in 1886 and 1887, when our shipments to China were unusually heavy. This increased shipment to China has not in 1888 been maintained.

As far as the tariff is concerned, it is inoperative as protection to our Southern makes of yarn or goods—the cost of labor in the goods not being considerable. The tariff is protective as to the finer grade of goods, where the cost of labor is a larger item. The tariff on goods like Southern goods does not permit an increased price, because prices are determined as to them by adequate competition here locally. But the cost of production (which regulates the limit which competition can legitimately reach) is increased by the tariff on machinery, and articles entering into the product. If the cost of the plant were reduced, the price of our cotton goods would rule much lower here, and we could export successfully and largely increase our milling interests.

Since that letter was received, I have received others giving more information in regard to the exportation of these Southern-made goods. I have a letter from the same gentleman in which he states that on subsequent inquiry he has found that the Piedmont Manufacturing Company of Greenville, S. C., and another mill under the same management, export their goods abroad, and the Clifton Mills, at Clifton, S. C., the Graniteville Mills, at Graniteville, S. C., the Pacolet, and the Langley, and the King Mills, and the Sibley Mills, at Augusta, Ga., and many others. They are passed through the custom-house for export under the name of "domestics," and by observing the reports of the exportations you will see that very large quantities of domestics go to China, to India, to South America, to Mexico, and all parts of the world, the bulk of which are no doubt from the Southern mills.

The activity of British manufacturers of cotton goods, maintained under very adverse circumstances, should be a sufficient example to the manufacturers of the United States of what can be done without a protective tariff. They have not only maintained their trade in the face of the increased production by the mills of the United States and the continent of Europe and all the rest of the world, but they have at the same time maintained their rate of wages.

For the past year ending October 1 their trade in cotton goods, cloth, and yarn, reduced to pounds for convenience' sake, was 1,200,000,000 pounds, as against 1,145,456,000 pounds in 1886–'87, and 1,116,840,000 pounds in 1885–'86, showing a constant and steady increase; and the consumption of the goods of the British mills is not due to their increased sales, particularly upon the continent of Europe, but chiefly their sales have been increased and their business has been advanced in India and in China, in the face of the cheapest labor in the world, by mills paying the dearest labor in the world, except the United States, showing conclusively that England has not acquired and maintained her supremacy in the manufacture of these cotton goods by the cheapness of her labor, for she pays more than anybody else in the world except the manufacturers of the United States, nor by the cheapness of the raw material, for we get the raw material as cheap as she gets it herself or cheaper by freights, insurance, commissions, etc., incident to transportation; but she has acquired it by the cheapness of the material of which her plant is composed, by the cheapness of the interest on the capital which she employs, by the cheapness of her fuel and all that runs her operations, and, I might add, by the wisdom and the enlightenment of her commercial policy.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] gave us yesterday some interesting comparisons of the cost of spinning cotton in this country and Europe, taken from Mr. Schoenhof's investigations and inquiries while he was consul at Tunstall. I beg also to refer to the same statement. I have a personal acquaintance with that gentleman. I know him to be a man of high character and very considerable ability in the investigation of financial and commercial questions, and I have every reason to believe that what he has stated in his official report can not be successfully contradicted, and that if it could be successfully contradicted it would have been done long ago.

In his statement he says that in England the waste by the spinner of cotton is much smaller than it is in the United States; that in England 125 yards of cloth requires 14 pounds of cotton, whilst in America 125 yards of the same kind of cloth requires 18 pounds of cotton. The profit to the English manufacturer consists principally in sizing and the starch and other materials to give it sufficient weight. The cost of spinning in England per pound he puts at 3.506 cents, or, as we would say in round numbers, 3½ cents per pound. The cost of spinning in America is 3.21 cents, showing that it is positively costlier to spin a pound of cotton in England than it is to spin a pound of cotton in the United States, whilst in North Carolina, according to the testimony of the most intelligent and reliable manufacturers to whom I have applied, the cost of spinning a pound of cotton for the making of such cloth as I have described is 1½ cents—from 1½ to 3½ cents, according to the quality of the cloth. The very highest quality of yarn spun in North Carolina costs the same or little less than the same quality of cloth costs to spin in England, whilst the cheapest quality of cloth costs 50 per cent. less to spin in North Carolina than it does in England, and a little over 50 per cent. less to spin in North Carolina than it does in Massachusetts.

The net waste of cotton resulting from spinning in Lowell is stated by Mr. Schoenhof, by the authority of the manufacturers whom he consulted, to be 14 per cent., whilst the highest average net waste in spinning the same yarn in Lancashire is 8.1 per cent. The cost of weaving per pound in Lowell is stated at 3.736 cents; the cost of weaving in England is 4.802 cents; whilst the cost of weaving, by the same authority, of the coarse goods which I have described as made in the Southern mills in North Carolina is 1½ cents per pound, or one-half cent per yard where the goods run 3 yards to the pound. The cost of weaving per "cut" of 50 yards in Lancashire is 25½ cents, whilst the cost of weaving a "cut" of 50 yards in Lowell is 20 cents. In England one spinner attends 576 spindles, whilst in America a spinner attends 960 spindles. In America one weaver attends 6¾ looms, whilst in England the same weaver would attend 4 looms. In America the average earning per loom per week of the operative is $5.08; in England the average earning per loom per week of the operative is $5; showing a difference of only 8 cents in the aggregate earnings of the two. The output of the American weaver per week is 1,270 yards, whilst the output of the English weaver is 908 yards.

Mr. President, if these figures are true, I should like to ask what this protection is for. It can not be for the benefit of the operative, because, although his earnings are somewhat larger in this country than they are in England, they are not due to the tariff. He only earns more money by reason of his longer hours of labor, his superior skill, and his more indefatigable industry, and the greater results which he gives to his employer.

Now, sir, why should we, with this great continent so admirably fitted to the production of cotton, occupied by a people whose genius is directed to its production, where all the elements of manufacturing successfully are to be found in a superior degree to those of any other country upon the face of the earth, and having, as you may say, a monopoly of the raw material, for the rest of the world is dependent upon us—why should we hamper our statute-books with these restrictive laws, which can only have the effect of hampering and crippling trade, and can not put any money into the pockets of the beloved workingmen?

Mr. President, the best evidence that we can compete without protection is that we do compete under all the disadvantages of protection. If a man could travel 20 miles a day and carry a heavy load, is it not reasonable to argue that he could travel much further in the day if he carried no load? If with all this enormous protective-tariff taxation upon the plant, upon everything with which we operate except alone the raw material, handicapped by higher wages in this country than they pay in Europe—if we can successfully compete in one item of cotton manufacture, why can not we successfully compete in them all if the restrictions upon our progress were removed?

To show the injustice and uselessness of this duty, especially on the cheap grades of cotton cloth, I cite the fact which is disclosed by the returns of the Treasury Department of the enormous exportations of these cheap cloths.

The total imports of cotton cloth, both colored and uncolored, which we receive from foreign countries are 27,950,100 square yards. The total exports of cotton cloth to all the world from these United States are 204,602,087 square yards, being seven times as much of the same kind of cloths as we import. Our total export of all cotton manufactures, exclusive of raw cotton, is $14,928,342. It is only in the matter of laces, edgings, embroideries, trimmings, and fancy grades of cotton manufacture that the balance of trade is against the United States; in all the ordinary manufactures of cotton we are to-day heavy exporters. The country to which we export the largest amount of cotton cloth is China, which takes 78,360,170 square yards under the competition not only with Great Britain but with her next-door neighbor, India, where the cotton is manufactured by the cheapest labor in the world.

The next largest customer of our cotton cloths is the Republic of Mexico, which takes over 12,000,000 square yards. Then comes Venezuela, which takes 10,000,000 square yards. Next comes the colored Republic of Hayti, which takes over 7,000,000 square yards. The United States of Colombia take 5,500,000 square yards, and the Island of San Domingo takes 4,250,000 square yards, whilst Great Britain herself takes twenty-odd million square yards in her own territory proper, besides the amount that I have given as being sent to her possessions, when we receive from her only 17,000,000 square yards all told.

If we could do that, why can we need still to cover our statute-books with these protective laws—restrictive laws, as they should be called? It seems to me that the spirit of protection is very hard to satisfy, very hard indeed. Now that it is shown by the amount of our exportations that we are able to send cotton cloths and yarns to the kingdom of Great Britain and into all of her possessions and to meet her upon all the neutral markets of the world and actually and successfully compete with her, what is to hinder us from doing it? Having become accustomed to leaning upon the Government and to depending upon taxation, we have got to believe that there is no human endeavor that can be successful unless it is supported by public taxation; and consequently we hear every session as we have heard this session and as we shall hear again that there must be subsidized lines of steam-ships to bear our products to market. We have become so accustomed to ask governmental aid in everything we do to supplement our own incompetency or our own greed, whichever it may be, and I believe it is generally both, that although we make the cheapest goods in the world, although we have the raw material cheaper than any other people have in the world for the manufacture of these cotton goods, and the labor cost in the manufacture of them is less than that which enters into the composition of any other piece goods of a similar character in the world, yet the Government must be once more called upon to bear the expense of taking these goods to market. That is what a subsidized line means. Not only must the American people pay taxes for the purpose of securing a profit in the manufacture of these goods, but they must actually contribute out of the public Treasury to the carrying of those goods to market.

The illustration given the other day by the Senator from New York, whom I do not see in his seat, of the wisdom of Germany in producing cheap sugar, simply meant that the German people were taxed to give cheap sugar to foreigners outside of the German Empire; that is all it meant, and that proposition is to be made here. There is a great desire on the part of the protectionists to have a market for the surplus, and that surplus must be sold at whatever reduction of cost. It is more profitable for the producer to sell it at half price than to let it lie upon his hands, and if the surplus were once a year thrown on the American market it would disturb the values in the home market, and that must be avoided. Therefore it has to be sent abroad to be sold cheaply, at half price or anything it will bring, to these miserable foreigners whom we profess to dislike so much.

That may be one of the exigencies of trade. A man must get rid of his surplus in some way, but in Heaven's name let him get rid of it at his own expense. In the name of common sense and common honesty if he wants to furnish foreign paupers with cheap goods for which the Americans have already been taxed, let him bear the expense of taking them to market and selling them at the best he can, and not call upon an already overtaxed people for further contribution.

The total increase of this cotton schedule, as they make it, over the existing law would amount to $233,000, which sum would have to be increased by the very large amount on which the duty is raised, on cotton velvets, plushes, fine goods, etc., amounting to the sum of $16,000,000; and the amount of the increase of duties upon those can not be computed for want of data, and therefore it can only be estimated.

I should say, judging by the increases on those goods the data for which have been furnished to the Treasury Department and where the calculations have been made—I should say that the increase in the balance of the schedule would amount to fully as much more, or, say, $500,000 increase in the duty on cotton, and that under the circumstances which I have explained. Upon an article where the raw material is free, where machinery is most perfect and the labor is most skillful, and where all the conditions of manufacture are the most favorable here of any country upon the face of the earth, instead of going back in the direction of freer trade, in the direction of a liberal policy for the purpose of pushing our point of advantage until we wrest from Great Britain and all the continent of Europe the control and domination of this great trade, we are going backward in the direction of the dark ages and increasing the duties on the cotton schedule to the extent of at least half a million dollars.

There are a number of inconsistencies and improper things in this bill, which I shall endeavor to point out in the best way I can as we progress with the bill item by item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VANCE. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In "Schedule I, cotton manufactures," line 1211, after the word "pound," it is proposed to strike out "10 cents per pound" and insert "35 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to make the paragraph read:

313. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn (not wound upon spools), whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea," and he would vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New Hampshire both being absent, we have arranged that we will exchange the pair so that it will be between the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New Hampshire, and the Senator from Maine and myself can vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] was transferred yesterday, but I do not know what arrangement there is for to-day. So I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. BATE (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is absent. He is paired generally with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I do not see the Senator from Vermont in his seat.

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAMPTON. My pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] having been transferred to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HAMPTON. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	Gibson,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Call,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Reagan,

Chace,	Harris,	Pasco,
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Plumb,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being disclosed by the vote, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Allison,	George,	Morgan,	Stockbridge,
Bate,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Teller,
Berry,	Gray,	Pasco,	Vance,
Call,	Hale,	Payne,	Vest,

Coke,	Ingalls,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Dolph,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Edmunds,	McPherson,	Spooner,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum being present, the roll will be again called on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. HALE (when the name of Mr. FRYE was called). My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. The Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is paired with the other Senator from California [Mr. HEARST]. By an agreement between the Senator from California who is present and myself, the pairs are transferred so that the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and I vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. We have arranged a transfer of these pairs so that both the Senator from Nebraska and myself can vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. STANFORD (when his name was called). I have been paired with my colleague [Mr. HEARST], but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. I vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], but that pair is transferred to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], and I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BERRY. I announced a pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but understanding that he has voted, I vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], but transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Vance,
Berry,	Gray,	Payne,	Vest,
Call,	Hampton,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Coke,	Morgan,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be resumed at paragraph 314.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before paragraph 313 is passed over I desire, for the committee, to offer a formal amendment to the phraseology by striking out in lines 1206 and 1207 the words in parenthesis, "(not wound upon spools)," and to insert after the word "form," in line 1210, "except spool thread or cotton hereinafter provided for." It is simply a change of phraseology to make the law effectual.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The amendments will be agreed to unless objection be made.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate in calling the yeas and nays unnecessarily, and I only want to say in regard to this paragraph providing for tariff duties on cotton threads, yarns, etc., that it seems the object of the committee has simply been to exclude foreign importations by the increase of duty on certain items. No reasons have been given for the increase of the duties on these specific items. I see from the reports for 1887 in regard to imports that of cotton threads and yarns valued at 18 cents per pound there were imported in value for 1887, $221,477.

Mr. ALLISON. How many pounds?

Mr. VEST. That is dollars. The pounds are 624,537. The value $221,477.

In the next item, which is where the valuation is 23 cents per pound, there were imported $210,422.60 worth, and in the next item, 28 cents per pound, there was imported $178,405 worth. So upon these three items, which show the largest importations, there has been an increase in the Senate substitute, and I take it for granted, as I have a right to do, that that increase was put upon these items on account of the importations from abroad, the object of the committee being to exclude as far as possible all foreign competition, thereby enabling the manufacturers in the United States to hold the market here at whatever price they see proper to put upon the article.

I will not call for the yeas and nays, or make any motion upon the other items, because of course the result in the Senate would be the same as in the vote just taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no amendment before the Senate, the reading will proceed.

The Secretary read paragraph 314, as follows:

314. Spool-thread of cotton, containing on each spool not exceeding 100 yards of thread, 7 cents per dozen. Exceeding 100 yards on each spool, for every additional 100 yards of thread or fractional part thereof in excess of 100 yards, 7 cents per dozen spools.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out, in lines 1226, 1229, and 1230, the words "7 cents per dozen" and insert in lieu thereof "40 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1226, after the word "thread," it is proposed to strike out "7 cents per dozen" and insert "40 per cent. ad valorem;" and in line 1229, after the word "yards," to strike out "7 cents per dozen spools" and insert "40 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is not an item in this bill which illustrates more forcibly and distinctly the object of the majority of the Finance Committee than this one upon spool-thread. That object unquestionably is to meet, as I have said before, the demands of the manufacturers. There is no item in this bill—and I want to emphasize the statement—which shows more distinctly that the manufacturers of this country propose to get every cent they can in the way of profits and to increase them as far as they are able, without regard to the details of manufacturing or the cost to themselves.

Now, sir, I will undertake to prove that beyond any sort of question in regard to this item of spool-thread, an article that goes into the consumption of every family in the whole land. To say nothing about the large factories and manufacturing establishments in the cities, there is not a family in the United States, speaking entirely within the limits of truth and accuracy, that is not affected by this tax upon spool-thread. I know we shall be met by the invariable argument, "It is a trifle; it is only a few cents," as we shall be told when the question of salt taxation comes before the Senate, "It is only 3 cents per head for every man, woman, and child in the United States, and let the tax go on." It is the principle which we attack; it is the outrage of putting unjustly into any man's pocket 3 cents of my money, which constitutes as villainous a robbery as if it was $300. If this thing can be established upon principle, there is no limit to the tax that can be put upon the people of the United States, and if this tax upon spool-thread comes out of the hard earnings of the sewing-girl, that is the best reason in the world to me why I should resist it without regard to the value involved.

I say distinctly that these spool-thread manufacturers want all they can get, and that they are actuated simply and solely by a desire to make money, and I will prove it by their own statement. I will not bring in any floor-walker, I will not bring any Democratic politician here to testify, but I will bring these gentlemen themselves. I thank God that my training as a lawyer has taught me to analyze testimony given as they have given it in regard to this item.

In 1882 these gentlemen—these spool-thread manufacturers, and there are only a few of them in the United States—went before the Tariff Commission and made a statement of their case, and what was it?

The undersigned, representing mills—

This is October 14, 1882—

The undersigned, representing mills manufacturing fine cotton yarns and spool-cotton in this country, respectfully recommend that the following be substituted for paragraphs 927 and 928, section 2504, Schedule A, of the revised tariff, approved June 22, 1874:

"Par. 927. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn, whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, except as hereafter provided for, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 10 cents per pound; valued at over 40 cents per pound, and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound; valued at over 60 cents per pound and not exceeding 80 cents per pound, 30 cents per pound; valued at over 80 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound; and in addition to such rates of duty, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

"Par. 928. Spool-thread of cotton, 6 cents per dozen spools, containing on each spool not exceeding 100 yards of thread, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem; exceeding 100 yards, for every additional hundred yards of thread on each spool, or fractional part thereof, in excess of 100 yards, 6 cents per dozen, and 15 per cent. ad valorem."

The same making a reduction of 20 per cent. in the duty upon spool-thread of cotton, with no material reduction in the revenue derived therefrom.

Mr. President, that made a duty of 15¾ cents per dozen spools of 200 yards each. In 1882, on October 14, they declared that they could not live without it, and that was a reduction of 20 per cent. upon the previously existing law. After taking off 20 per cent. on this tax they then said they could not live without 15¾ cents a dozen. What do these gentlemen say now? They have not closed a single mill. They have not ceased to make enormous profits. There is not a more wealthy establishment in the United States than J. & P. Coates. They have carried on their business ever since, and now what do they come before Congress and demand?

The next step in this proceeding is before the Morrison committee in 1884, two years afterwards. Then what did they say? They had demanded 15¾ cents in 1882. Now, they appear in 1884 and say:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 18, 1884.

SIR: The undersigned, representing establishments producing nine-tenths of all the spool cotton thread used in the United States, all of which is finished in the United States, respectfully state that they earnestly appealed to the Forty-seventh Congress for an equitable tariff upon spool-thread and cotton yarn, showing that half the cost of a dozen of thread is made up of wages. Worth 30.6 cents per dozen of 200 yards six-cord in England, the labor part of one dozen spools of thread is 15 cents, and that labor can not be obtained in America for less than 15 cents more, the exact difference or sum which they asked as the proper duty on spool-thread. The tariff act of 3d March, 1883, imposes 14 cents per dozen of 200 yards.

One cent and three-fourths less than they demanded in the petition or statement or memorial which I have just read to the Senate. They asked in 1882 for 15¾ cents, and in 1884 they are willing and anxious to accept a duty of 14 cents on the same article.

Prior to that act the combined specific and ad valorem duties amounted to 21.94 cents per dozen of 200 yards. The reduction to 14 cents threw off 7.94 cents, or 36 per cent. of the former rates.

We respectfully represent that it is impossible to go below this without destruction of capital or reduction of wages, and having been the first to urge upon Congress the late settlement on the basis of the difference between the wages of labor in England and America, we ask that it should not be disturbed by further reductions.

We can not state too strongly the vital importance to an industry employing American labor at double the wages of English labor, of permanence in tariff rates. No rate can be permanent which is not just. On this ground we favored a reduction a year ago.

That is a reduction of 20 per cent., which left still a tax of 15¾ cents a dozen.

The recent action of the Forty-seventh Congress in the matter of cotton yarns and spool-thread was a just settlement; and we pray your honorable committee that it may be permitted to stand until it has at least been tried.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON,
Chairman of Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise for information. I do not understand what the Senator says or reads about 15 per cent. duty. When thread costs 30 cents a dozen the duty at 14 cents very closely approximates 50 per cent.

Mr. VEST. It is a very simple proposition. I will state to the Senator that they asked in 1882 for this duty:

Spool-thread of cotton, 6 cents per dozen spools, containing on each spool not exceeding 100 yards of thread, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem; exceeding 100 yards, for every additional hundred yards of thread on each spool, or fractional part thereof in excess of 100 yards, 6 cents per dozen and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

That would be 6 cents and 10 per cent. ad valorem on the first hundred, and 6 cents and 15 per cent. on the next, and on a valuation of 30 cents for a dozen spools of 200 yards that would be 15¾ cents per dozen.

Mr. ALDRICH. The present duty amounts to 14 cents per dozen.

Mr. VEST. The Tariff Commission recommended, I think, about the rates that were asked by the manufacturers; but the bill which we passed in 1883 put it at 7 cents per dozen, and the substitute of the Senate now proposes to put it at the same rate, instead of adopting the ad valorem duty which is named in the Mills bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. We propose to leave the duty exactly as it is.

Mr. VEST. Exactly. I have stated that, 7 cents. Now I want to know whether we are to believe these manufacturers in 1882 or 1884. The point I am making in this whole controversy is that these gentlemen are not influenced by what is just and right. If they would deal fairly with the consumers of this country, and say, "We can not live and compete with these foreign manufacturers except at a certain rate of duty," and stick to it, then we could go into this controversy with some reliance upon their testimony. But in 1882 they say 15¾ cents a dozen, and in 1884 they say 14 cents per dozen, and I am warranted in believing, and I do believe, as much as I believe in my own existence, that they are actuated only by a desire to make as much money as possible for themselves.

Mr. ALDRICH. Can not the Senator from Missouri conceive a change of conditions by which 15¾ cents might be sufficient in 1882, and 14 or 12 or 10 cents might be sufficient in 1884?

Mr. VEST. What is that change of condition? I want to know it. When they are taxing every sewing-woman in this country 2 cents or 2½ cents, as I believe, profit on every spool of thread that is sold to her, I want to know the change in those conditions. I want to know why it is that 15¾ cents per dozen was necessary in 1882, and in 1884 they are willing to take 14 cents per dozen and say that is right.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri stated that the manufacturers in this country are exacting from the persons who use spool-cotton 2½ cents a spool, and now he says the foreign cost is 30 cents per dozen.

Mr. VEST. I do not say so.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is. I will say it.

Mr. VEST. The manufacturers say so.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say it is 30 cents per dozen spools on the other side. The selling price here is 42 cents per dozen. If 30 cents of this is exacted from the consumers, the cost to the domestic manufacturer can be only 12 cents per dozen, or less than half the foreign cost. This statement exposes the absurdity of the story of exaction.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator makes a statement that the Senator from Missouri charges that this tax is paid by the consumers in the United States. If it is not paid by the consumers, by whom is it paid?

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Missouri say it is not paid by the consumers?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I say it is paid by the consumer, but I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to say it was not paid by the consumer.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was not discussing that question. I was merely calling attention to the fact that if it costs the sewing-woman an extra sum of 2½ cents a spool, the cost of making spool-cotton here could not be over 12 cents a dozen according to the Senator's own statement. I am only taking the naked statement of the Senator from Missouri, without any regard to whether it was true or whether it was not.

Mr. VEST. I did not make any statement. I am arguing this whole case on the statements of the manufacturers. I know nothing about it. I am analyzing their testimony. I say that the Senator from Rhode Island can not explain, nor any living man, how in 1882 they demanded 15¾ cents tax in order to protect them, and in 1884, two years afterwards, they were willing to take 14 cents on identically the same article, with two years' more experience, and, I have every reason to think, with improved machinery, certainly with more skillful labor.

Now the Senator suggests there were changes in conditions, and when they come here to the representatives of the people of the United States, of the consumers, and say, "Take our word for it," I have a right to cross-examine them; I have a right to criticise their testimony in the name of the people who pay this money; and the fact that it is a small tax does not alter the principle involved or our duty.

Now, here is their statement. I propose to argue this question on the statement of the other parties, of our adversaries, for they are our adversaries in more than one sense of the word.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am sure I do not understand the Senator. I understand him to be criticising these manufacturers for reducing the tax from 15 cents and over to 14 cents.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I give them credit for no such thing. Here is what I say, and my friend or myself must be very unfortunate if he does not understand me. These gentlemen came to Congress as all these manufacturers do. It is an ex parte proceeding. You do not hear from the consumers, but you hear from the men interested in making money. They come before committees and before Congress and say, "Now give us such a duty and we can live and compete with the foreign manufacturers." "Very good," we say; "what tax, what duty will protect you and enable you to get a fair profit?"

In 1882 they said that a duty of 15¾ cents a dozen on 200-yard spools of cotton was required, and two years after, these same men, without any explanation, after Congress had refused to give them the 15¾ cents and gave them 14 cents on the same article, come here and say, "That is right; we can live under that; we can make money under it." Now, I want to know how it happened——

Mr. HAWLEY. Two years had elapsed.

Mr. VEST. What happened in those two years? Did they not have more money; did they not have more skilled labor?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I will tell him what happened.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. Two different bills were introduced in the House of Representatives by his political friends proposing to reduce the duty on these goods far below where they could live, and these gentlemen were willing to accept a duty of 7 cents a dozen rather than to have a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem, as the Senator now proposes.

Mr. VEST. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island. The Morrison bill, the horizontal-reduction bill, proposed a reduction of 20 per cent. ad valorem. They accepted a reduction of 20 per cent. in 1882. They say so emphatically. Here is their own language, and I will convict them out of their own mouths. They put down what they say they can live under:

Spool-thread of cotton, 6 cents per dozen spools, containing on each spool not exceeding 100 yards of thread, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem; exceeding 100 yards, for every additional 100 yards of thread on each spool, or fractional part thereof, in excess of 100 yards, 6 cents per dozen and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

The same making a reduction of 20 per cent. in the duty upon spool-thread of cotton, with no material reduction in the revenue derived therefrom.

Mr. ALDRICH. That 20 per cent. reduction was a reduction from the law in existence prior to 1883, when the duty upon cotton thread was 6 cents per dozen and an addition of 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I know it.

Mr. ALDRICH. And upon each additional hundred threads 6 cents per dozen and 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. Yet, Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. They had already submitted to one reduction of 20 per cent. and they were protesting against another reduction, which the Morrison bill proposed.

Mr. VEST. And now the Senator from Rhode Island shifts his base again. The words are not cool out of his mouth in which he said that my political friends had brought in two bills that proposed to reduce this taxation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Below the act of 1883.

Mr. VEST. Not below the act of 1883. The first evidence they gave was in 1882, before the act of 1883 was passed. Then they accepted cheerfully a reduction of 20 per cent. and still demanded 6 cents a dozen and 10 per cent. ad valorem on the first hundred and 6 cents and 15 per cent. ad valorem on the second. That was before the act of 1883.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not understand that they are asking for anything now.

Mr. VEST. The Senator does not?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; they are asking for no change in the law.

Mr. VEST. I do not know whether they are asking for anything or not; but it is asking for a good deal of money.

Mr. HAWLEY. The last time the Senator heard from them they consented to a 20 per cent. reduction, and they are saying nothing now.

Mr. VEST. After saying they could not live without 15¾ cents a dozen they now say, "Give us 14," and if you do not do that liberty lies bleeding in the streets. Here is their own estimate:

In connection with this paper Mr. Auchincloss presented the following exhibit:

Article, six-cord spool-cotton, 200 yards: Where is the competing article made? Great Britain.

Price per unit of quantity product:

	Cents.
17*d.* per gross, less 10 per cent	30.6
Cost of transportation, one-half cent to 1 cent per dozen, say	.7
	31.3

Price of domestic article:

55 cents, less 15 per cent	46.75
Insurance and transportation	1.75
	45.00

Cost of production varies with the price of cotton. Cost of manufacture may be set down as 15 cents in Great Britain and 30 cents in United States.

Wages paid per capita: Average pay-rolls, November and December, 1883—Great Britain, 12*s.* 4*d.* = $3; United States, $7.57.

That is their own exhibit. In one case it will be seen that they put down the cost of transportation, but no insurance upon English goods, and when it comes to increasing the cost to themselves they put down insurance and transportation. Does not the English merchant or manufacturer insure his goods? Why did they shut out that item? The whole thing is a cooked exhibit. The deliberate intent, manifest upon the face of it, is to affect the committee by increasing the price of the production of spool-thread in the United States. But they overreach themselves and show that they do not put in their estimate the cost of insurance as to imported goods that are brought across the ocean subject to the perils of navigation.

We hear a great deal about competition in the United States inside of this protective system.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will look at that statement he will find that insurance and transportation are deducted instead of added.

Mr. VEST. Why is it not deducted in both cases?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is deducted from the American price, so as to be put upon equal terms with the other side.

Mr. VEST. They make it 31.3 cents on English goods and 45 cents on American goods. That would make a difference of 14 cents.

Mr. ALDRICH. But they take the American price and deduct insurance and transportation, so as to equalize the conditions.

Mr. VEST. I see that they do, but they put no insurance at all upon the English goods.

Mr. ALDRICH. They deduct it on this side, which amounts to the same thing.

Mr. VEST. There has been a great deal said here about diminishing the cost of the article on account of domestic competition. I wish to bring another one of these manufacturers on the stand. My friend from Rhode Island yesterday objected to every witness as a "floor-walker" and a "Democratic agitator."

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I will state that I did not at all object to Mr. Howard as a witness here. He is a very creditable man, so far as I know, and he is entitled to have me say that he is a man of respectability, a man of standing in his community. The Senator from Missouri was trying to make it appear that he was taking the statement of a workingman who was in no way connected with the agitation of this question or with politics; that he was entirely outside of the arena which the Senator from Missouri and myself are in; and that he was therefore a witness entitled to special care and consideration. What I said was that he was like the rest of us, a politician; that he was simply that and nothing more; that so far from being a workingman, he represents a workingman's organization; that he is secretary of a workingman's organization, and his work consists in doing the work of that secretaryship and drawing a salary therefor; and his testimony is entitled to the same consideration and the same weight that the testimony of any other man similarly situated would be.

Mr. VEST. I shall not take up time in going back and reading Mr. Howard's testimony, but here is what he stated, and unless he is a perjured scoundrel he is a workingman. He said he worked seventeen years as a mule-spinner in Great Britain and eleven years in the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. Years ago.

Mr. VEST. Years ago! He said he commenced when he was a boy; that he was raised in a factory and knew nothing else. Yet he is a politician because his fellow-workmen have elected him president of a mule-spinners' association, and he was elected to the Legislature and declined a re-election. Does that make him a "professional agitator" and "floor-walker?" That was the statement of the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. "Walking delegate" was the term I used.

Mr. VEST. A "floor-walker," I think. We will not quarrel about words. I will say "walking delegate;" I accept the amendment. The Senator says that no doubt he is a very worthy man. Well, if he is a worthy man he told the truth.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to make a statement?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. I assisted in the examination of Mr. Howard in Boston and in New York, and I learned about him from all sources that he is a man of the highest respectability and the highest credibility. He is a trusted man by the operatives and the manufacturers. I heard nothing to the contrary in reference to the man's character and standing. What he stated to the committee were matters of fact known to him personally by personal experience, personal association, and personal observation, in Oldham, England, and at Fall River, Mass. There is not a man in Massachusetts whose testimony is more reliable, and he would not undertake to make a statement unless he knew it to be perfectly true. I feel it to be my duty to make that statement in reference to Mr. Howard.

Mr. VEST. I do not know this gentleman. I treat him like I would any other witness, and his testimony as I would any other evidence. I do not propose to make any comments upon him. His testimony is here and it speaks for itself. If he is not a perjured man he is a workman of experience, and he is not the political agitator who has been described upon this floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. That makes me a little curious to know exactly what Mr. Howard proved. I heard something——

Mr. VEST. My strength will not permit me to read all his testimony. I read from it yesterday.

Mr. HAWLEY. But I want the conclusions, in three lines or four lines.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will find it in the RECORD of this morning.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood the Senator, in quoting Mr. Howard, who knows something about Fall River, and Oldham, England, to assert in general that the operatives in New England saved no money and the same classes were better off in England than they are here. I say I do not care if all the apostles put together say it, he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. VEST. That is a question which can be settled between the Senator from Connecticut and Mr. Howard.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is settled already so far as I am concerned.

Mr. VEST. Of course it is settled to the Senator. I suppose testimony dies with the Senator, and that conclusions will perish when he goes from the face of the earth.

Mr. HAWLEY. On that subject.

Mr. VEST. I do not accept that conclusion. I shall exercise my judgment. I will take this testimony here and analyze it, and no man's personal assertion here shall influence me in coming to my conclusion in regard to it.

We have heard here again and again that the competition inside of the magic limits of a protective tariff diminishes prices. These cotton-spool-thread manufacturers have had their own duty. They have had 14 cents since 1884 and they were satisfied with it, and they say now they want it to remain. What has been the effect on prices in the United States? Here is the testimony of Mr. Ferguson. I do not know him either, but he is a spool-thread gentleman. Said Mr. HERBERT, of Alabama:

And on the gold basis the fall in price has not been very great during this period?

That is, on spool thread.

Mr. FERGUSON. No. I did not intend to occupy so much of your time, gentlemen. I simply desired, as I have said, to put before you our own case as to this matter.

Mr. HERBERT. But I am asking you now with reference to thread, which is your own case. Has there been really any considerable fall in the price of thread during the last twenty years?

Mr. FERGUSON. Not much. There is not very much to come and go upon in a 5-cent article.

There is no fall by reason of competition in these prices; they are sustained from year to year at the expense of the poorest, hardest-worked of all the operatives in the United States, the sewing women and girls in the large cities, and the women throughout the country, the mothers and daughters who make the clothing for their husbands and brothers under their own roof-trees.

Mr. Ferguson further testified, and if it were not pathetic it would be ludicrous. If we did not know the class of people that this enormous tax—for it is nothing else in proportion to the value of the article—if we did not know the people upon whom this tax was levied this sort of testimony would be ridiculous. This same gentleman, Mr. Ferguson, appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and here is his testimony. He said:

But there is another fallacy and a very important error that exists in the minds of a good many people in reference to this matter of thread. During the war thread sold for 10 cents a spool; it is now selling for 5 cents.

Yet he had just said that there was no fall for the last twenty years.

As I say, we made a reduction in the price of goods on the return to specie payment. Again, on the 1st of January, 1883, we made another reduction of 5 per cent. That was two reductions. In the mean time the home competition here had pressed prices down to just what a manufacturer would consider a fair profit. Now the spool of cotton for which the sewing-woman in this country pays 5 cents will enable her to do 10 per cent. more work than she would do if she were provided with cotton manufactured in Scotland. This is a statement which I can prove to you by people who employ sewing-women. I have talked with a manufacturer, and supplied him with thread, which his people are quite willing to pay a cent a spool more for, because they can make more money by it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. A cent more per spool would be an addition of 25 per cent.?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And you say that the saving to the sewing-woman would be 10 per cent.?

Mr. FERGUSON. But see the comfort which the sewing-woman gets. She saves her physical powers. She has more capability of doing her work, and that is a great thing for a woman who has to sew for a living.

Sweet, charitable, philanthropic soul! He puts the money into his pocket and does it for the poor sewing-women whose physical comfort he is entirely consulting!

The great majority of the thread used in Great Britain and all over the world is, to a great extent, glossy thread. The people of the United States use the best thread. They are not satisfied with anything but the best thread. They will pay more for our thread than they would pay for the thread made on the other side. Now, if the same quality of thread which we sell here was produced on the other side, the manufacturer would require to pay at least 2 pence a pound more for the cotton out of which to make it; and the result would be that a good deal of the cotton which they use for that purpose would be left on this side, and they would take Egyptian cotton for the purpose.

Mark the argument to the cotton producer. If you do not give us this duty your cotton will not be consumed; they will use Egyptian cotton abroad.

The price is at present 5 cents a spool. That is what the sewing-woman in California pays for her cotton. It is first manufactured in New Jersey, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, or Connecticut, and is sent to New York for sale. From the agent's hands it passes into the hands of the wholesale dealer, who has to have some profit. So that wages do not end at the mill. The merchant will not buy my stuff and keep it in his house and sell it unless he has interest for his money, and he wants 5 per cent. profit. Then the freight to the Missouri River must be paid, and that adds to the cost. The merchant on the Missouri River sells it to the merchant in California at a small profit—and when it reaches the sewing-woman there it costs her 5 cents a spool. It is better in value than what can be obtained on the other side for about the same price. But a majority of people who deal in six-cord thread in Great Britain make no profit at all on it.

That is new information—

That is the manufacturers' side of the question as to the sewing-women. I happened to have sent to me this morning a book describing the condition of the sewing-women in the great city of New York. It is entitled "Prisoners of Poverty," and is written by Helen Campbell. Without detaining the Senate I wish to turn from that picture by the manufacturer with the sewing-women benefited by this superior article of thread made in the United States under this tax of 7 cents on the single spool of 100 yards and 14 cents on the 200 yards to this picture drawn by a lady who has devoted her life to the sewing-women of the United States, and who personally went among them in the tenement houses, in the factories, in the large establishments that are reaping enormous fortunes by grinding the very lives out of these poor women. Here is what she said:

"Do you see those goods?" another asked, pointing to a counter filled with piles of chemises. "How do you suppose we make a cent when you can buy a chemise like that for 50 cents? We don't. The competition is ruining us, and we're talking of giving up the business."

"That's so. It's really more in charity to the women than anything else that we go on," his partner remarked, with a look toward him which seemed to hold a million condensed winks. "That price is just ruin; that's what it is."

Undoubtedly, but not for the firm, as the following figures will show, figures given by a competent forewoman in a large establishment where she had had eleven years' experience: Twenty-seven yards and three-quarters are required for one dozen chemises, the price paid for such cotton as is used in one selling at 50 cents, being 5 cents per yard, or $1.40 for the whole amount; 30 yards of edging, at 4½ cents a yard, furnishes trimming for the dozen, at $1.35; and four 200-yard spools of cotton are required, at 25 cents per dozen, or 8 cents per dozen garments. The seamer who sews up and hems the bodies of the garments receives 30 cents a dozen, and the "maker," this being the technical term for the more experienced worker who puts on band and sleeves, receives from 90 cents to $1 a dozen, though at present the rates run from 75 to 90 cents.

Our table then stands as follows:

Cloth for 1 dozen chemises	$1.40
Edging for 1 dozen chemises	1.35
Thread for 1 dozen chemises	.08
Seamer for 1 dozen chemises	.30
Maker for 1 dozen chemises	.90
Total cost of dozen	4.03
Wholesale price per dozen	5.25
Profit per dozen	1.22

The chemise which sells at $7 per dozen has the additional value in quality of cloth and edging, the same price being paid the work-women, this price varying only in very slight degree till the excessively elaborate work demanded by special orders. One class of women in New York, whose trade has been a prosperous one since ever time began, pay often $100 a dozen for the garments, which are simply a mass of lace and cobweb cambric, tucked and puffed, and demanding the highest skill of the machine operator, who even in such case counts herself happy if she can make eight or nine dollars a week. And if any youth and comeliness remain to her, why need there be wonder if the question frame itself, "Why am I, the maker of this thing, earning barest living, when, if I choose, I, too, can be buyer and wearer, and live at ease?"

Wonder rather that one remains honest when the only thing that pays is vice.

For the garments of lowest grade to be found in the cheapest quarters of the city the price ranges from 25 to 30 cents, the maker receiving only 30 cents a dozen, and cloth, trimming, and thread being of the lowest quality. The profit in such case is well-nigh imperceptible; but for the class of employer who secures it, content to grovel in foul streets and know no joy of living save the one delight of seeing the sordid gains roll up into hundreds of thousands, it is still profit and he is content. As I write an evening paper containing the advertisement of a leading dry-goods firm is placed before me and I read: "Chemises, from 12½ cents up." Here imagination stops. No list of cost prices within my reach tells me how this is practicable. But one thing is certain. Even here it is not the employer who loses; and if it is a question of but a third of a cent profit, be sure that that profit is on his side, never on the side of the worker.

So it goes, Mr. President, from the manufacturer down through all the range of prices to the poor sewing-women and to the consumer. Not one cent is lost to any one except the one who needs it most.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the question of the duty upon spool-cotton has been so often discussed in this Chamber and the other, in its sentimental as well as its practical aspects, that I do not care to continue the discussion at any length. But there are some statements made by the Senator from Missouri that demand attention, I think.

Prior to 1867, when the first adequate duty upon spool-cotton was placed, spool-cotton sold in this country at wholesale, three-cord cotton, at 70 cents a dozen. It sold at retail at from 8 to 10 cents a spool. It now sells in this country at 45 cents a dozen at wholesale, or 5 cents a spool at retail.

Prior to 1867 all the spool-cotton consumed in the United States was made abroad, largely in Scotland and England. Now ninety-nine one-hundredths, I imagine, of the spool-cotton that is consumed in the United States is made by our domestic manufacturers. The quality of cotton which was used prior to 1867 was, as I have said, three-cord cotton. Now all the thread that is sold in the United States, or a very large proportion of it, is six-cord cotton. So for 5 cents the working-woman buys a very much better article than she did for 10 cents prior to the time when the protective tariff was levied upon spool-cotton.

Let us see what the effect of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri would be upon the poor working-women for whom he has so much sympathy at this moment. The duty proposed in our bill is 14 cents per dozen spools. He proposes 40 per cent. ad valorem, which, if it was honestly collected, would amount to 12 cents a dozen spools. The difference between the rate which he suggests and the rate suggested by the committee is 2 cents a dozen spools, or one-sixth of a cent per spool. It is not going to change the retail price to the poor sewing-women by taking off one-sixth of a cent on a spool of cotton. Who will get the benefit of it? It will be the importer in New York, and nobody else. That is the practical side of the question.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, a single word with respect to this question. As I understand it, every particle of tax that is placed upon this thread industry, certainly every part in excess of that which is absolutely needed for the sake of paying the excess in the cost of labor employed here in the industry, is a tax upon the poorest-paid labor in this country.

Now, I want the Senator from Rhode Island to understand me. I say it is a tax upon labor. Who purchases this thread? Who uses it? It is the sewing-women all over the country. Here is a true illustration of it. I hold in my hand an affidavit that was handed me during the last campaign by a sewing-woman engaged in making shirts in the county of Atlantic, in the State of New Jersey. For fear I might interfere, perhaps very seriously, with the formation of the new Cabinet I will not state the name of the employer, and therefore I will not send the affidavit to the Secretary's desk to have it read, but will read such portions of it myself as apply to the case. It applies to two particular schedules in this bill, the one under consideration and one that we are to reach in a few moments, providing for a duty to be levied upon manufactures of cotton goods—if I remember correctly, upon all manufactures of cotton goods a duty of some 40 per cent. is imposed. The affidavit reads as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, Atlantic County, ss:

Mrs. Ella Strickland, of full age, being duly sworn according to law, upon her oath says:

That she is the wife of Isaac H. Strickland, and that she lives in the township of Galloway, in the county of Atlantic, and that her post-office address is Oceanville, in said county; that she has made cotton-wool shirts for Philadelphia firms for 35 cents per dozen, and that to her certain knowledge women in this township have made these shirts for 25 cents per dozen; and that a good, quick needle-woman, working from 7 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night, might be able to make one dozen of these shirts, but not over that quantity, to the best of this deponent's belief.

And deponent further says that she is now engaged in making fine white men's dress shirts for a Philadelphia firm, and that all the remuneration she receives is $1 per dozen shirts; and that the greatest number of these shirts that she can make, working from 7 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night, is six shirts; and that she is compelled to furnish the cotton thread used in making the shirts, and that this cotton thread costs about 10 cents per dozen shirts, leaving 90 cents as the pay, out of which the freight has to be paid one way by her.

ELLA STRICKLAND.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, this 21st day of October, 1888.

JAMES S. BECKWITH, Notary Public.

There is a context in which it is stated that the freight one way is about 15 cents, so it leaves 75 cents to this poor woman as the entire cost of making one dozen men's shirts, upon which the duty levied is 40 per cent. As this tariff bill is professedly in behalf of American labor and to protect the wages of American labor, by what process of reasoning does the Senator from Rhode Island propose to impose a heavier duty or a duty in excess of the absolute need upon the thread which the poor woman is forced to buy as a part of the contract, and then compel her to make a dozen shirts for 75 cents, when the manufacturer of the shirt, the proprietor of the establishment, receives 40 per cent. protection?

I have many other statements of like character from the same locality. I can name you a single city in the State of New Jersey where there are more than five thousand of these women making men's garments and women's garments, and I want to say that while in some cases the pay is slightly higher, it is altogether out of proportion to the duty and protection accorded to the factory.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator kindly give the Senate the benefit of his judgment as to what this duty should be?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I am voting with the Senator from Missouri to reduce it from the high plane upon which it is placed by the Senator from Rhode Island and his associates. In other words, if a dozen men's shirts of the best quality are worth say $24 a dozen in England and a duty of 40 per cent. is levied upon them, it gives as a matter of course $9.60 of protection. Nobody disputes the fact that the cotton cloth can be made as cheaply in this country as it can there; that cotton is as cheap here as it is there; and I want to know what becomes of the $9.60 the manufacturer gets by way of tax upon consumers and only pays the poor needle-woman 75 cents net for making a dozen shirts. We hear the boast made that this is to be hereafter a farmer republic; that the farmer vote turned the tide of battle in the last election to the protection tide. Can it be possible the farming country understand the true character and scope of this proposed legislation? And when they do understand and comprehend it I predict that this so-called farmer republic will not last long. They will think even four years too long.

I listened yesterday to a very long debate in this Chamber respecting the prosperity, the happiness, the contentment of the New England operatives in New England mills. In addition to that the vast amount of money which they had in savings-banks was used as an argument. I want to know what that has to do with the measure of duty that ought to be imposed upon industries in this country. Certainly no class of people, certainly no locality in this country has ever received the benefit that the New England people have received through Government bounties. They have done the major part of the manufacturing for the whole country in years past under high protective tariffs. They are a class of people who are different from almost any other people upon the face of the earth. They have habits of industry, they are educated, they are quick-witted, and in fact there are no operatives to be found anywhere upon the face of this earth who will produce more goods in a given length of time and with a like amount of manual labor than the operatives in New England factories. They have been brought up differently from other people.

The Senator from Colorado asked the Senator from Missouri why it was that they could not manufacture goods in the State of Missouri. A man born in the West and reared upon those boundless prairies has a different idea of life and its expenditures and its requirements than has the operative in a New England factory. They are reared there to habits of industry and of economy, and it is no argument to say that because they are able to save a part of their earnings and put it in a savings-bank, another class of people having been brought up differently, with different ideas of life, also can save money. Transplant a New Englander anywhere and he will succeed, because he is born and bred in habits of industry and economy; and he will also save part of his wages, be the same more or less. The Western man has bigger and broader ideas of life and greater expenditure. This is as true of the Old World as of the New.

A few years ago I visited a jute factory in Forfar, Scotland, in which the pay to the operatives was very much less than it was in England for the same class of work. I was informed by the proprietor of the works that his operatives in his mill had saved a large amount of money; that almost all of them had deposits in the savings-banks, while the English operative, upon the other hand, had spent his money just as fast as he earned it.

What argument is it to say that because New England is prosperous under high protection, in which they have had a monopoly of the markets for years and years, the tariff should be continued and even increased to a point heretofore unknown to any civilized government on the face of the earth under the plea of continuing that prosperity? Does it continue the prosperity? Not by any means.

I have made the statement upon this floor and I again repeat it, and I shall undertake to prove it, that the wages paid to labor in this country in comparison with the results of that labor are no greater than the wages paid in other countries; that labor in this country is as much better than foreign labor as the pay is better. Let me illustrate it. Let me prove it. I have before me here a statement made by a gentleman, the representative of the Government of the United States in a foreign country. I speak of our consul at Tunstall, Mr. Schoenhof. He was delegated by the State Department to visit the different countries and to ascertain the difference in wages paid to labor in this country and other countries on certain industries. I will take the shoe industry of the State of Massachusetts. This gentleman visited a shoe factory in Lynn, Mass. He asked for the privilege, as I understand, of examining their books in order that he might determine exactly what the labor cost was in the manufacture of a case of shoes. I will read what he says about it. Mr. Schoenhof said:

Whoever has gone through a Massachusetts shoe factory with open eyes to observe its workings surely leaves it with a useful lesson learnt. Especially so when in his younger days he made good use of the easy opportunity and watched the shoemaker at his daily work. He will remember how the latter beat out his sole leather, cut his soles, the heels, and, from a well-selected side, the uppers, etc. After all the preliminary work had been done, how the twine was doubled till it reached the proper thickness, then how he twisted it and, suspending it on a hook on the door-post, waxed it, the fastening at the ends of the bristles, then the laborious way of stitching with his awls in hands, the finishing, smoothing of the soles with the sharp edge of a piece of broken glass, the burnishing, the polishing, etc., and all the different operations necessary in the making of a pair of boots out of a few pieces of leather, how all this was performed by one and the same master hand. What a skillful man the shoemaker was in his eyes. But now, if he compares this with the American factory method, this mode of working, handed down by the craft for thousands of years perhaps, what an object lesson of development, evolution, and revolution in the industries and arts, taken place within one short generation, presents itself to him by comparison in this single industry.

To examine an American shoe factory is, indeed, the examination of the complete emancipation of labor from any exercise of muscular power directly upon the work. The hand is only used, except in the cutting and hand-lasting, to direct a mechanism which does all the work which used to be done in former times in the manner stated above. The mechanism itself is set and kept in motion by steam power. To the operative nothing is left but to direct the work. Great is the attention required, swift are the motions to complete a vast amount of work in a very short time with correctness and neatness. No time is left for repairs of bad work. If so, it goes out of the time, the earnings of the work people. Nor is time left to think out poetry of the Hans Sachs nor mystic transcendentalism of the Jacob Boehm style. Dreamland has no corner left in a Massachusetts shoe factory. If it had, the operative retiring to it while working would soon wake up with a finger caught in a machine.

Now he goes on to say:

So that there is practically nothing left but very close attention and exercise of nerve power, for hours and hours follow the same rapid monotony, but monotony which leaves no chance to [illegible] to sleep over. Such, it may safely be said, is the system of work, minutest subdivision of labor, and application of machinery to every branch of work which characterizes the manufacture of boots and shoes in the United States. Work done on any other principle, except for custom trade, could not maintain itself for an hour under the fierce competition in the trade in America.

If we then go away from America to Europe and examine the working methods there, we take with us another very instructive lesson. It is, that if two do the same thing it is not the same thing, and if two nations make boots and shoes by machinery it is not the same thing either. Here, more than in anything else, we see all the differences in the manners, customs, and habits of the working people manifest themselves. We see how different, indeed, are the ways in which even the same machinery is set to work by different nations and how different the results from its employment. How all the phlegm and want of energy, perhaps due to want of encouragement of the European working classes, is manifested there and the results when compared with the work and the prodigious output of their American brothers and sisters. Of this phase I shall speak with greater detail when I come to deal with the different countries where boots and shoes are made by the aid of machinery, and where I have been able to collect data on the subject.

Before setting out on the inquiry I provided myself from an American factory with samples of ladies' button boots of two qualities, one made in Lynn, Mass., and the other representing a slightly inferior quality, corresponding to boots made in country shops, and ranging at somewhat lower prices. I will call the higher grade No. 1, and the cheaper one No. 2. The first sells at the factory at $1.70, and the other grade at $1.35 per pair. The first quality is more stylishly made and has more fancy work, but as to quality and wearing character the difference is not very pronounced. In every instance where I showed my samples to manufacturers in foreign countries they were subjects of praise so far as workmanship or general appearance is concerned if put side by side with their own makes. As to price of goods and labor cost, further on.

He goes on to show that the price paid for uppers per dozen pairs for labor in Lynn, Mass., was $1.33 per dozen pairs, or per pair 11¼ cents; the price paid for bottoming per case of sixty pairs (there being both the cutting out and the fitting of the uppers and the bottoming of the shoes) was 18¼ cents per pair. The whole labor cost in that pair of shoes in the State of Massachusetts was about 35 cents per pair.

After examining the shoe manufactories in the State of Massachusetts, after examining their books and having been given every facility in the world to ascertain correctly what was the labor cost, he then proceeded to Germany, and visited not only Germany but other parts of Europe. He visited Frankfort-on-the-Main, Berlin, Vienna, Austria, and Erfurt, in Thuringia; and he also went to England. He visited the shoe industry at Stafford, in England. He visited the great shoe shops of Leicester, in England, and he gives statements from all the factories, made from their books, obtained from the operatives and from the manufacturers themselves. Upon this question there can be no mistake, because this work is done largely by the piece under contract. What is the result? I will read it:

Labor cost of manufacturing ladies' button boots in Lynn, Mass.; Frankfort, Offenbach, and Berlin, Germany; Vienna, Austria; Stafford and Leicester, England; and weekly earnings of operatives in the respective places, of quality—sample No. 1.

In this bill a duty is imposed upon all manufactures of leather. I think 40 per cent. is the amount named in the bill—40 per cent. duty where the entire labor cost is half the labor cost in any competing country upon the earth, and it is urged that this duty is to protect American labor, when in fact it is the foreign labor that needs the protection against American shoes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator enlarge the scope of his inquiry a little and tell us something about the difference in the cost of making pearl buttons in New Jersey and in Austria, if it will not interrupt him too much?

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator from Rhode Island needs any information upon the pearl-button industry, when we reach that schedule of the bill I shall be very glad to give him all the information he wants. I do not care to discuss the pearl-button industry when I am talking about shoes.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from New Jersey had been animadverting upon the great evils which the women who make shirts were suffering under, and as he was familiar with the pearl-button industry, having been before the committee this morning urging an advance upon that particular article, I thought perhaps he might further illustrate his subject by stating the difference in the cost of pearl buttons between Austria and New Jersey.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator wants the information now, he can have it, but I prefer to wait until I get through with this boot question, which troubles the Senator seemingly very much. I am loaded for bear, let the rabbit run awhile longer.

The same authority takes up the question of ladies' dress goods and gives very valuable information. We find that there are two classes of factories, at least factories located in two different parts of our own country, in which in one case the price paid to labor, or the labor cost of the same class of goods, is considerably more than in the other. For the information of the Senator from Rhode Island I will say that the least labor cost found in this report is paid by the manufacturers in Rhode Island. Mr. Schoenhof gives the cost in every stage of the manufacture. The scouring of the wool, the weaving of the goods, the manufacturing, the finishing, and everything is put down, and, moreover, it is copied from the books of the manufacturers themselves. We find that the entire labor cost in the manufacture of ladies' dress goods is very little between this country and Europe. In some woolen products, particularly in the manufacture of carpets, and the carpet industry has become a very important one in this country. I will simply give his recapitulation with respect to labor cost in carpets. Speaking of the ingrain carpet industry he gives the cost. The labor cost in the United States is 7.92 cents, while for like labor in England it is 8.263 cents. What is the duty upon the carpet? Forty per cent. All this is claimed to be in the interest of American labor and for the protection of American labor, and still we show less labor cost, as we have shown in the shoe industry, that the entire labor cost in a case of shoes in Lynn, Mass., was about half the labor cost in a case of shoes of like quality in any country in Europe.

Now, what is the reason of that? The reason is simply because the labor here is better labor. It is better fed labor; it is better paid labor; it is more intelligent labor. This whole question is answered by a foreign boot-maker, speaking to Mr. Schoenhof. Let me read what he says. A manufacturer at Vienna, Austria, said to Mr. Schoenhof:

> You need not tell me; I know all about it. We can no more compete with you in the manufacture of boots and shoes, or in anything which depends on the highest utilization of machinery, than we can fly. Our people have neither the strength, nerve, nor endurance of yours, nor have they the ambition. They don't eat and don't work. They are underfed, and it would be ridiculous to expect that they can cope with your operatives.

In the cotton schedule, I think in the very paragraph we have just voted upon, a duty of 43 or 44 per cent. is demanded, when, in short, it has been proven by the best of evidence that the labor cost is not one-quarter of the duty proposed, because if this report is not evidence there can be no evidence. More than that, when we come to compare the statement made by Mr. Schoenhof with the statement made in the census report of 1880, there can be no avoiding the fact that the difference in labor cost here and abroad in all our major industries in no case is one-quarter of the amount of duty you propose here. This whole bill, cotton schedule and all, is based upon the idea that whenever you find a single article of goods which they were able to import under the existing tariff in 1887, you have raised the duty to a point that will prohibit the importations. The meaning of it is the absolute prohibition of all foreign trade, and in my opinion it is absolutely destructive of all local enterprise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, the compilation which we have on our desks shows that there were imported in 1887 of spool-thread, 731,744½ dozen, and that the cost thereof was $95,167. That would seem to indicate that the value of a dozen spool-thread of a hundred yards is 13 cents. The proposed tax of 7 cents a dozen would therefore be a tax of more than 50 per cent.

We begin this bill by an assertion in the title that we intend to reduce taxation and simplify the laws. For twenty years both political parties have been making a pretense of an intention to reduce tariff taxation. In 1872 there was a reduction of 10 per cent. Subsequent to that time the protectionists and the Republican party organized a commission which was directed to investigate the interest of manufacturers in the country, and they recommended a reduction of about 20 per cent. As the Senator from Missouri a few minutes ago read to the Senate, the manufacturers of this article of spool-thread recommended a tariff which they said at the time was a reduction of 20 per cent. from the then existing rates.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate, without any argument, to the taxes that have been levied and collected upon this article. The first tax imposed was in 1861, and was a tax of 30 per cent. The same tax was continued until 1863, when it was raised to 40 per cent. After that the tax was changed to take the form of 6 cents a dozen, and a different ad valorem per cent. was added up to the time of the reduction in 1872. Subsequent to that time the old tax remained until 1883, when 7 cents a dozen was adopted as the tax.

There ought always to be some sort of relation between a tax and the value of the property taxed. Instead of reducing this tariff we are absolutely increasing it by reason of the decrease in the cost of the article. While we are making a pretense to the country of reducing the tax upon those articles which enter into the home consumption of every family in this land we are positively and in fact raising the tax with each step we take. The tax of 7 cents a dozen which was provided for in 1883 is a higher tax now than the same rate of 7 cents a dozen was in 1883; and the pretense that we are keeping up the same tax is not true, because the ad valorem tax is higher at 7 cents a dozen now than it was in 1883. On spool-thread worth 13 cents a dozen a tax of 7 cents a dozen, as I said in the beginning, is more than 50 per cent.; and while we have been making a pretense of reducing the tax which was begun at 30 per cent. and increased to 40 per cent. during the war, we have gone on steadily, until now, a quarter of a century after the war has closed, and after both political parties have pledged themselves to reduce taxation, we are proposing to impose a tax higher than has been levied heretofore upon this article of necessity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1226, after the word "thread," it is proposed to strike out the words "7 cents" and insert "40 per cent. ad valorem;" and in line 1229, after the word "yards," to strike out "7 cents," and insert "forty per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). Having transferred my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] so as to make a pair between the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] and the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and I vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore can not vote.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Since announcing a pair between the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] and the Senator from New York

[Mr. HISCOCK], I am informed that some other arrangement has been made. I therefore withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] is paired to-day with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire whether my colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is paired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not informed of any pair.

Mr. SPOONER. I have asked the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to pair with my colleague, and he has agreed to do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] who is absent. I agreed to pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] who is absent. We can exchange the pairs, and I announce a pair between the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Gibson,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Berry,	Gray,	Ransom,	Walthall.
Call,	McPherson,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Pasco,	Vance,
Coke,	Payne,	Vest,

NAYS—21.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Allison,	Hawley,	Platt,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Sherman,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Davis,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Dolph,	Paddock,	Stewart,

ABSENT—37.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hampton,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Dawes,	Harris,	Quay,
Blair,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Hiscock,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Turpie.
Cameron,	George,	Kenna,
Chace,	Gorman,	Morgan,
Colquitt,	Hale,	Morrill,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

315. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, and not exceeding fifty threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 2 cents per square yard; if bleached, 2½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 4 cents per square yard.

316. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding fifty and not exceeding one hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 2½ cents per square yard; if bleached, 3 cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 4 cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth not exceeding one hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 6½ cents per yard; bleached, valued at over 9 cents per square yard; and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem.

317. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding one hundred and not exceeding one hundred and fifty threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 3 cents per square yard; if bleached, 4 cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 5 cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding one hundred and not exceeding one hundred and fifty threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 7½ cents per square yard; bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12½ cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem.

318. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding one hundred and fifty and not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 3½ cents per square yard; if bleached, 4½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 5½ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding one hundred and fifty and not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 8 cents per square yard; bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I move to strike out, in paragraph 318, line 1270, the words "3½ cents per square yard" and in lieu thereof to insert "40 per cent. ad valorem;" and also, in line 1271, to strike out "4½ cents per square yard" and insert in lieu thereof "40 per cent. ad valorem."

I ask a vote on these two amendments, and I trust, if I shall be successful in them, to make the remainder of the paragraph conform thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire the words "per square yard" stricken out?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to repeat what I have had occasion to say in regard to these increases. It will be noticed, speaking in general terms, that upon the lower-priced cotton cloths, the coarser cloths, manufactured in the South, which are embraced in paragraphs 315 and 316, there is a decrease of duties, and on the finer cloths, manufactured in New England, and embraced in paragraphs 317, 318, and 319, there is an increase of duty, and a large increase.

I shall not detain the Senate by any argument, but I want to put in evidence the testimony of some gentlemen engaged in the business of manufacturing this cloth. I shall first read from the testimony taken before the House committee in 1884:

COATES & POTTS, MANUFACTURERS OF COTTONS AND WOOLENS,
FORTY-SIXTH AND MARKET STREETS,
Philadelphia, February 27, 1884.

DEAR SIR: The managers of the Philadelphia Textile Association, in their recent protest, do not offer any argument which should lead you or the Committee on Ways and Means to any conclusion aside from the object of your tariff bill. Indeed, if a full canvass of manufacturers here could be had apart from political influences, very many instances would appear of a conservative sentiment which the Textile Association and Mr. KELLEY and Mr. RANDALL seem in ignorance of. A spinner of hosiery yarns told me not long ago that "what we want now is more market and less protection." I am assured in my own mind that we can only expect to keep our home market by furnishing goods at prices which will not attract competitive importations, and by diversifying our productions we may avoid a ruinous competition among ourselves. I am persuaded that all our interests would be better served if your bill could be passed at once by both Houses, and receive the approval of the President.

The statistics of importations, 1883, exhibited by the Textile Association, are of little value in the discussion. Worsted yarns were "boomed" beyond the importation price by the "boom" in Jersey cloths. The same cause probably operated to stimulate the increased importation of ready-made clothing—"Jerseys." They—Jersey cloths—were also knitted goods, making these items of the protest due not so much to the reduction of tariff as to an unhealthy stimulus to prices.

I take the liberty of expressing my mere personal opinion as above for whatever it may be worth to you, not forgetting that you are probably fully posted as to the public sentiment already.

Very respectfully,

BENJ. C. POTTS.

Hon. W. R. MORRISON.

It is refreshing amidst this Sahara of protection to find one oasis like that, a manufacturer who will state frankly and without regard to the consequences to himself or his business what he believes to be the truth.

Now, without further comment, I want to read from a firm, who I do not think have any sympathies with the Democratic party, and that is the firm of Arnold, Constable & Co., of the city of New York, the largest dry-goods merchants now in the business in this country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And importers.

Mr. VEST. And importers also; and if that disqualifies them as witnesses, as a matter of course the challenge is a good one, but I submit that it does not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is only to add grace to the performance.

Mr. VEST. I shall just proceed to read, without argument, what they say in regard to these finer grades of cotton cloths:

[Arnold, Constable & Co., New York. Paris, 21 rue d'Hauteville. Lyon, 8 Quai St. Clair. Manchester, 41 Lower Mosley street.]

NEW YORK, February 20, 1884.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Dalton stated before your committee that a change in cottons would prevent the manufacturers in this country from making the finer kinds of cottons, such as sateens.

They come under this last section.

I send you some samples to controvert what Mr. Dalton says:

Sample A is American, 36 inches wide; cost by the case 11½ cents per yard; the pattern is French.

Sample B is French, 32 inches wide, 4 inches narrower than the American; cost to land 18½ cents. You will see we can no longer import the plain French cloth.

Sateens were gotten up by one of the best French manufacturers, especially for us, in the spring of 1882, when we had the market almost entirely to ourselves. In the spring of 1883 the Americans copied the cloth and printed them very extensively, and are going on with them again this season.

In the spring of 1883 the Americans greatly undersold the French article, and our importation was sold without any profit, and in some instances at a considerable loss. We have been driven from the market; therefore the Americans need not fear the reduction which the committee propose.

For the spring of 1884 we have imported sateens in very small quantity, but have produced some cottons of an entirely different weave, which we suppose will be copied next spring.

C sample, American sateen, 32 inches wide, the case price of which is 27 cents, at which price it is supposed to pay the manufacturer a profit, as he would not sell so early in the season without.

D sample, French sateen, 32 inches wide, cost to land 31½ cents.

Sincerely yours,

ARNOLD, CONSTABLE & CO.

Hon. A. S. HEWITT.

P. S.—The American has more weight than the French, but the finish is not quite as good.

It may be that the fact that these people are importers disqualifies them from being credible witnesses, but I submit that if they have not deliberately—and that is a firm of as high character as there is in the country—if they have not deliberately put themselves on record as false witnesses the duty existing to-day in the present law is too high; and yet our friends on the other side of the Chamber insist upon increasing that duty, I submit, for no other purpose, and the conclusion is irresistible, than to give opportunity to American manufacturers to increase their profits.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, it seems by looking at these schedules that there have been two or three additional classifications made. The present law classifies all goods of this character, in the first place, such as are below 100 threads to the square inch, and, second, those which exceed 100 threads to the square inch and do not exceed 200; thirdly, those that exceed 200. That is the present law. This makes a classification of all goods of this character below 50 threads to the square inch, and then another classification between 50 and 100 threads, and another between 100 and 150, and another between 150 and 200, and then all over 200, making five classifications instead of three. That, I suppose, is for the purpose of showing their generosity by giving away things that do not belong to them, and their liberality by grabbing a little more of other people's things!

They reduce the duties on goods of the first classification so coarse as under 50 threads to the square inch, of which there were only a little over 2,000,000 square yards imported, but those come in conflict with the poor Southern mills, and they care nothing about them. They reduce those below what the Mills bill did in the other House. They have out-free-traded the free-trade Democrats; in fact, they trade as freely in other people's property as anybody I know of. But when it comes to the next classification, exceeding 100 and not exceeding 150, they maintain the present law; they do not increase it; but when it strikes from 150 to 200, where there were over 20,000,000 yards imported in the last fiscal year and where the competition comes pretty near home, then they increase on every grade from 3 to 3½ and from 4 to 4½ cents, and from 40 to 50 per cent. ad valorem. In other words, they claim that they are reducing duties on those things which yield no revenue. That is very true. They increase duties on those things which do yield revenue.

It seems to me, for the reasons which I gave this morning and which have been given a hundred times, and which I hope will continue to be given until the final cataclysm comes of this iniquitous protective tariff system—for those reasons, I say, this increase ought not to be made and the duty ought to be made 40 per cent. ad valorem.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). At the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], who is charged with getting a pair for the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], I will transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], so that they will be paired, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and I vote "nay."

Mr. REAGAN (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] requested me to announce his pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], and to state that he would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I announce a pair between the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. SPOONER. My colleague [Mr. SAWYER], who is absent, is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay," and I suppose the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea."

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	George,	Payne,	Vest,
Berry,	Gray,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Call,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Coke,	Pasco,	Vance,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Allison,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,

Davis,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Dolph,	Mitchell,	Stanford,

ABSENT—36.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Gorman,	Morrill,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Hale,	Plumb,
Blair,	Dawes,	Hampton,	Quay,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Harris,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Hearst,	Sabin,
Brown,	Farwell,	Hiscock,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Frye,	Kenna,	Turpie,
Chace,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. In line 1281, of paragraph 318, I move to strike out the word "five;" so that it will read: "A duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1281 it is proposed to strike out "forty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding one hundred and fifty and not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warping and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 8 cents per square yard; bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). By the transfer which I have just announced the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] are paired, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and I vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore do not vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I announce for the last time to-day that I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	George,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Berry,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	McPherson,	Reagan,

Cameron,	Gibson,	Morgan,
Chace,	Gorman,	Morrill,
Colquitt,	Hale,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

319. Cotton cloth not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 4½ cents per square yerd; if bleached, 5½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 6¾ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all such cotton cloths not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 10 cents per square yard; bleached, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 15 cents per yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. In paragraph 319, I move to strike out from the word "filling," in line 1284, all that follows to the word "yard," at the end of line 1287, and insert in lieu thereof "40 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Beginning in line 1284, after the word "filling," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "yard," in line 1287, as follows: "4½ cents per square yard; if bleached, 5½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 6¾ cents per square yard;" and insert "40 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

319. Cotton cloth not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAY (when Mr. KENNA'S name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] asked me to announce that on all questions arising on this bill he is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I make that announcement once for all.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I announce the pair for to-day between the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. REAGAN (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). I announce the pair of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and will not announce it again to-day.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. GEORGE. I announce the pair of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Coke,	Pasco,	Reagan,
Berry,	George,	Payne,	Vance,
Call,	Gray,	Pugh,	Vest,
Cockrell,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—21.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Stockbridge.
Allison,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Davis,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Dolph,	Mitchell,	Stewart,

ABSENT—39.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hampton,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Dawes,	Harris,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Hiscock,	Saulsbury,

Chace,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Walthall.
Colquitt,	Hale,	Plumb,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It being ascertained by the roll-call that a quorum is not present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Allison,	George,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Bate,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Teller,
Berry,	Gray,	Payne,	Vance,
Call,	Hampton,	Platt,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Coke,	Hoar,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Davis,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Stanford,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum being present, the roll-call will proceed upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE. May I be permitted to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, the roll-call having been partly proceeded with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, the present system of Federal taxation, composed of excise and import duties, or what are better known as internal-revenue taxes and tariff duties, had its beginning and derived its present character from the necessities for revenue in our late civil war. It must be admitted that the unavoidable necessity for the enactment of these laws was to raise revenue for the public object of suppressing the rebellion. The question of protection to manufacturing industries in the United States was not then raised or considered in fixing the rate of duty on any import or in the application of any such duty.

The paramount if not the sole consideration was, how much revenue can be raised from importations? The high rate of duties for war purposes became the nursery and hot-bed in which manufacturing in the loyal States sprung into vigorous and prosperous growth, yielding most abundant harvests. The harvest was so rich that it directed the attention of Congress to the propriety of imposing upon the manufacturers themselves some of the burdens of direct taxation.

The fact which I desire to emphasize is that in framing tariff laws during the war there was no necessity, intention, or desire, in fixing the rate of duty, or in the application of the duty to any article of import, to prohibit or to diminish importations for the protection of any American manufacturer against foreign competition. On the contrary, the more importations the more revenue, and revenue was the paramount object of Federal taxation during the war. Had there been no war there never would have been any suggestion from any quarter that as much as 40 per cent. duty on any imports was necessary to protect American manufacturers against foreign competition. Suppose the Government of the United States now had no bonded debt and no pension obligations to meet, and no other use for revenue except to defray the necessary current expenses of legitimate government, would we have ever heard of the claim that at least 40 and on many articles 200 per cent. upon imports was necessary to protect American manufacturers against foreign pauper labor or any other disadvantage? Any claim like that we have heard in thrilling appeals all over the land for such protection would be heeded no more in the condition I have supposed than if it emanated from the inmates of an insane asylum.

I challenge a denial of the fact I now state, that it was the necessity for revenue and not the necessity for protection that required the levying and the collection of the present rate of tariff duties on imports. Then, the question arises, what shall be done with present tariff rates when it is admitted that they produce more revenue by $100,000,000 per annum than is needed by the Government? The ruinous condition in full view of all men is the present surplus revenue income into the Treasury of $100,000,000 and its continued increase every month of about $10,000,000 beyond any use that can now be made of the money by the Government; and it is admitted by the Republican Senators who framed the Senate bill that it will amount to $221,000,000 surplus before any new tariff bill can be passed and put in operation. What, then, shall be done with this surplus, and how shall we stop the drain of millions of money not needed by the Government, and admitted to be necessary to carry on the business and industries of the country? Two remedies are now before the Senate—one embodied in the House bill, and another embodied in the bill of the Senate Committee on Finance.

The House bill originated where the Constitution required it to be originated. After full discussion the House bill passed by 13 majority. The House bill has been before the Senate committee long enough to receive the most mature consideration, and that committee has reported their amendment as a substitute for the House bill after exhausting their skill and ability in its preparation, and the two measures confront each other in the Senate. The House bill has received the votes of 162 representatives of the people, and of the Democratic delegates of thirty-eight States in State conventions, and the unanimous vote of the delegates in the last national convention of the Democratic party. It is reasonably certain that the votes of only two Senators prevent the passage this day of the House bill by the Senate. Two votes in the Senate from the Republicans would insure the passage of the House bill any hour the roll was called. When and how will the fate of the two measures be decided?

Will the Democrats in the Senate and House give up the Mills bill after the sanctions it has received? The question will soon be answered, and when answered my prediction is that neither the House nor the Senate bill will or can become a law of the present Congress. It is idle to tell me that any provision of either of these bills was passed upon or decided favorably or unfavorably by a majority of the electoral votes in the last election. How stands the House of Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress as between the House and the Senate bill? How many voters in the three hundred and twenty-five Congressional districts in the thirty-eight States ever heard of, or, if they heard of, had a correct understanding of the main provisions of the House or the Senate bill? Politicians and newspapers may declare that so and so has been decided by the election, but no human being capable of self-government has or will change his convictions or action on either of these bills on account of the late election.

The matter of immediate interest to the people is whether any revenue bill will be passed by the present Congress. All admit that remedial legislation is demanded. Both Houses of this Congress while acting separately and independently of each other to carry out their respective views without going into conference will never agree on the provisions and details of any revenue bill. The only hope for the passage of any bill this session must be founded on the action of a conference committee of the two Houses. It is manifest that it is the organized purpose of the Republicans of the Senate to pass the substitute now before the Senate. They have shown their ability and intention to pass their substitute substantially as reported. When the substitute goes to the House, the House will not concur in the Senate amendment, and the two bills will then go before a conference committee of the two Houses. Will that conference committee agree on any bill? Let us speculate a little on what is likely to be the action of the conference committee. The two bills will be compared with each other and found to agree in many particulars. Then come the items upon which the two Houses disagree. Many of the disagreements will be on non-essential and comparatively immaterial matters. Both Houses have and will adhere to provisions that will be given up in conference. Then come the hard points, the fundamental differences. Will these be surrendered, or waived for future disposition? What are some of the confessed and undisputed aims of the two bills? Both claim that the revenue from existing laws will be reduced in round numbers $70,000,000 if either bill passes. Then what divides the two Houses and the two political parties? The division is first, on what articles shall go on the free-list, and second, what shall be the rate of duty on the articles imported that are like those manufactured in this country; and all the trouble in coming to an agreement grows out of one single inquiry, and that is the kind and degree of protection that is required to shelter American manufacturers in the competition between them and foreign manufacturers to supply the American markets.

It would be an easy matter for the two Houses to agree on the rate of duty necessary for revenue to support the Government and meet all its obligations. The whole contention resolves itself into the single question of the kind and degree of protection Congress should afford American manufacturers by the exercise of the tax power. This thing of giving aid and encouragement to mining and manufacturing industries in the United States, called protection, is expressly recognized and authorized in the Constitution in the grant of power to Congress to levy duties on imports, a power known and intended to be a power capable of being properly exercised so as to afford such protection. Did not the framers of the Constitution understand the ordinary principles and axioms of political economy? If so, then they knew that when Congress levied the duty on any import brought here for sale the duty would certainly become a part of the original cost of the article to the importer, and that he was certain to collect the duty out of the purchaser of that article in the American market, and that the duty would follow and always become a part of the price of the article down to the consumer.

The authors of the Constitution knew also that the price of the imported article would regulate the price of any article like it that might be manufactured in this country, and that if the duty was added to the price of the imported article in whole or in part it would certainly be so added to the price of the like article manufactured in this country if it took both the home and foreign supply to satisfy the American demand. If the duty was paid by the importer on the article imported, and by him collected out of the consumer in whole or in part, it was perfectly plain that it made no difference to the importer how high the duty was so long as he could collect it out of the American consumer, and at the same time make such profits as he demanded and as he was certain to do if he had no American competition. Here lies the foundation of the economic principle, and policy, and necessity, and benefit of protection and encouragement of American manufacturing to the American consumer. It aids and assists in building up home competition that meets the foreign manufacturer in the American market and prevents him from enjoying a monopoly in supplying, at his own prices, the wants of the American consumer. These things were perfectly well understood by the framers of the Constitution when they granted the power to levy duties on imports for the public objects specified in the Constitution.

The First Congress, having many members who had just aided in framing the Constitution, undertook to exercise the tax power of the Government, and as a matter of preference they framed a tariff law instead of resorting, as they had a right to do, to direct taxation, and in so doing they stated that one of the reasons for their preference was to afford protection. In framing a tariff law in the First Congress many members declared (Madison among the number) that in framing the bill the objects in levying the duties on imports were to raise revenue "and encourage American manufacturing," and that was stated to be one of the reasons for adopting that mode of raising revenue. If they did not intend and desire that protection, help, encouragement, should follow the duty and be the result and effect of the duty on imports, why did they say so? Ah! but it has been claimed that such would have been the necessary effect of the duty without saying so. But still, it is certain they said so, and if they knew it was unnecessary to say so, it only makes the proof stronger that they desired such protection as one of the objects and effects to be accomplished by levying the duties on articles that were or could be manufactured in this country, and their desire was emphasized in the debate. These are my reasons for declaring myself a protectionist (as I have done before in several tariff speeches in this Senate) in the sense of affording aid, help, and encouragement to American industries engaged in mining and manufacturing by the imposition of duties on articles in the manufacture of which there is competition in Europe and America. In what I have stated to be my position I affirm that I am in a straight line and in perfect harmony with the position of the organized national Democratic party.

Then where and how do the two parties differ? The difference is perfectly plain, fundamental, and irreconcilable. The Democratic system of protection to home industries of all descriptions is the true American system, founded on and inseparable from tariff duties levied not for revenue only, but for revenue, as the basis of the tax power, and protection, as an effect intended and desired to be produced in the exercise of the power by discrimination between imports and by the adjustment and application of the duty.

In making out the dutiable-list in the different schedules I would determine the rate of duty on each article by the amount of revenue that article ought to produce in making up the aggregate sum necessary to support and meet the obligations of the Government.

If the article is necessary in general use I would charge it with the least amount of revenue, and if a luxury I would charge it with the most revenue it was necessary for it to produce, and if the article was manufactured in this country I would ascertain to what extent, and if in sufficient quantity to supply the American demand without looking to foreign markets I would consider these facts in fixing the rate of duty. One of the most difficult problems to deal with in framing tariff schedules and determining the proper amount of duty is to decide correctly, or even proximately, what effect the rate of duty will have on the amount of importations.

There is one controlling fact in this calculation, and that is, what may be the extent and source of the supply of the import to be taxed to meet the American demand or consumption? If the American manufacture is sufficient in quantity and quality to supply the home demand without resorting to importations, then the duty on such articles ought not to exceed an amount that will cover the difference in the labor cost of the article here and in Europe, as it is very certain that such a rate of duty would place the manufacturers at home and abroad on terms of perfect equality in their competition to supply the American market and prevent the foreigner from dumping any of his surplus upon our home markets to cripple our industries. But if the American manufacturers are not able to supply the home market and fully meet the American demand and consumption of the article or articles selected for taxation, then the American consumer must look partly to importations of such articles to supply his wants. In such a condition of the supply and demand in the American market, if the article is a necessary of life the rate of duty should be no more than sufficient to make up the difference in the labor cost of the article in the home and foreign markets, so as to deprive the manufacturers at home and abroad of the power of dictating prices to the American consumer, and keeping them in competition with each other on terms of equality in furnishing the American market.

It is certain that if the foreign manufacturer had to supply the American market with any article without any American competition the consumer here would suffer in the price as much as if the home manufacturers monopolized the market and had no regulator of prices except home competition.

It is certainly of the highest importance to American consumers that there should be the largest amount of production of what they consume, and that there should be the greatest competition among those who supply the American market with what it is able to purchase and consume.

There are two factors necessary to produce what the American consumers require, and they are capital and labor. Capital is more independent than labor. Capital is scarcer than labor and much more difficult to obtain. It can exist without clothing, food, and shelter. Labor must have employment to live. It is nearly always the sufferer in any contest with capital.

In mining and manufacturing the first indispensable factor is capital. Money is never ready for investment in anything until the owner is reasonably assured that there is safety and profit. These assurances being afforded and capital obtained, the next factor is labor. The labor supply is sufficient to meet any demand capital is likely to make for mining and manufacturing. When capital is invested and labor employed in these industries, both the laborer and the capitalist are mutually interested in success. The joint product of this capital and labor must have a market. Markets must have supply and demand, and supply and demand make prices. If there is but little of anything that is in demand the price is higher. If too much is in the market the price is lower. The most important question in the whole business of protection of labor and capital is the price that can be realized for the joint product. Not that labor ever gets its just share of the price received by the capitalist for the joint product, but the price in the market is the one essential element in the whole contention about protection.

Now, the everlasting question is, what does a tariff duty on an article manufactured abroad and imported into the American market for sale and consumption have to do with the price of that article to the American consumer? Why can not the truth be ascertained and admitted in answer to this question? If any fact in human transactions can be found out in a thousand years' experience it does seem this is one. But we are just where we were before the solar system was discovered. The manufacturer to whom the price is paid is contending to-day that while it is impossible for him to live without the duty, he swears that he gets no part of it or a very inconsiderable part of it, and the consumer who pays the price swears that the duty or a part of it was in the price he paid.

The manufacturer swears he must have the duty put on the article made abroad like that he makes here, or he can not manufacture that article, and he will be compelled to close up, and leave the foreign manufacturer without competition in supplying the wants of the American consumer, and then the foreign manufacturer will demand his own price. The consumer inquires how the duty is to protect the American manufacturer if it does not increase the price of such articles in the American market. Why is it that the American manufacturer has to close up and give way to the foreigner, if it is not because the foreigner undersells him with the like article manufactured abroad with cheaper labor? The American manufacturer answers the consumer that if the duty is put on the article high enough to cover the difference in the cost of his labor, then the foreigner can not get in here with his cheaper goods without first paying the duty, and when he does that, then the cost of the article he brings here will be the same as the article made here and they will meet each other here in the home market on terms of equality, and the consumer can buy on reasonable terms.

It is absolutely certain that before the foreign article can be offered for sale in the American market the duty on it must be paid into the Treasury of the United States. In the debate in the First Congress

(May, 1789), Roger Sherman stated, as reported in Annals of Congress, volume 1, page 304, that—

The merchant considers that part of his capital applied to the payment of the duties the same as if employed in trade, and gets the same profit upon it as on the original cost of the commodity.

That statement of a plain truth was made nearly a century since, and no one has had temerity enough to question it until it became customary to assert that high duties made cheaper goods. But is it really believed that when an importer brings foreign-made goods into the American market and pays the duty on them he does not ask and always receive back the duty in the price paid him for the goods by the American consumer?

If that be true as to the importer and as to the price of the foreign article he sells here, then how is it as to goods manufactured here and like those imported and on which no duty has been paid? These American goods, free of duty, are here for sale in the same market, and the American manufacturer and the importer meet the consumer, and the American manufacturer and the importer each offer their goods to the consumer, and the consumer inquires of each what price he asks. Is any one simple enough to believe that if the importer treats the duty he paid on his goods as part of their cost, and adds it in the price he asks the consumer, the American manufacturer will not ask the same price for his goods made here and on which no duty has been paid?

But then, says the American manufacturer, admit that I ask the same price, does that prove that the duty had anything to do with the price I asked? Certainly not, as I never paid any duty on my goods and therefore could add none in my price. The original cost of my goods on account of the higher price I paid for my labor was as great as the cost of the imported goods including the duty. The duty was added to the cost of the imported goods and the higher-priced labor was added to the cost of the home-made goods and made the cost of each the same in the American market.

This is a perfectly truthful, fair, and logical analysis of the Democratic doctrine of protection secured to the home manufacturer by making up to him in the rate of duty on the imported article like that he makes here the full amount of the difference in the cost of labor employed here and abroad in mining and manufacturing the articles imported and those made in the United States. The broad, high, patriotic, national, and just ground occupied by the Democratic party, and from which the party as a national organization can never be driven, is that American manufacturers have no right to ask and Congress has no authority to grant any more encouragement and protection than will be secured in an amount of duty that will make up the difference in the cost of mining and manufacturing labor in Europe and America. When this is done home and foreign manufacturers stand in the American market on terms of perfect equality in the original cost of their productions.

If the rate of duty on the imported article makes the cost to the importer the same as the cost of the home-made article to the American manufacturer, then is it not absolutely certain that both the foreign and home manufacturer meet the American consumer in the American market on terms of perfect equality? The duty has made the imported article cost the importer so much, and the higher-priced labor has made the home-made article cost the American manufacturer as much as the duty made the imported article cost the foreign manufacturer, so that it is manifest that in the original cost of the foreign and the domestic article the duty has placed both the home and foreign manufacturer in the American market on terms of perfect equality.

This is the impregnable ground occupied by the organized national Democratic party. Individual Democrats may go as far as the Republicans, but I propose to allow them to do so as long as they support Democratic organization on questions involving governmental power and white supremacy. Economic questions, like revenue, protection, and currency, are regulated by statute laws and are the subjects of change by amending or repealing laws found on trial to operate injuriously. As to such matters white people may differ as individuals and still retain membership of their political party and support its organization.

But when it comes to questions of local self-government and usurpation of governmental power, and especially life and death questions involving the peace and good order and safety of society and property and the supremacy of intelligence and morality found to exist in the greatest degree in the white race in all civil government in this country, there can be no concessions, no compromises among white people. Whoever is the friend of the white race in such essentials is my friend, irrespective of party, and whoever is the enemy of the white race on questions involving race supremacy is my enemy.

This fidelity of white men to each other on race questions and conflicts must be unfaltering under all trials and must prove itself in action on the side of maintaining the absolute supremacy of the white race in the possession and exercise of all governmental power in this country. Not that any inferior race shall suffer any deprivation or detriment in the possession and enjoyment of all personal and property rights belonging alike to them and to the white race, but that in matters of civil government in this country the white men alone in all parties must rule in order that the blessings of republican and democratic government by white men may be secured to all races and conditions. Such fidelity of white men to each other in the Southern States for such purposes has been established under the dire necessities of self-preservation, and white men of all parties everywhere else who are free from such troubles and necessities may rest assured that no allurements of office, or differences of tariff laws, or degrees of protection to American industries can ever degrade them to the level of negro equality.

Where, then, is the line of separation between the two parties on proposed tariff legislation? Where is the ground of contention? It is found on the question of the labor cost of protected articles, and whether protection shall stop at the line of difference in such cost here and abroad. The first difficulty is in agreeing upon the amount of labor that enters into the production of protected articles at the mine and at the factory; and, second, what wages are paid such laborers in America and in Europe? What is the per cent. of labor cost expended in the production of protected articles? The per cent. of labor is not the same in the production of each article. And then the cost of such labor differs in every foreign country and in many of the United States.

The quantity and quality and cost of labor employed in different countries in mining and manufacturing industries are most difficult questions to determine with any reasonable or satisfactory certainty. There are so few reliable data, and it is so easy to make facts and figures out of whole cloth, and there are so many motives to misrepresent, that it is hopeless to expect that these sources of contention will ever be removed or that labor cost can ever be established as the basis of protection to American manufacturers. We must deal the best we can with these questions, as they come to us with all their difficulties and complications. Then take the metal schedule for illustration.

The first form of iron is in the pig. It is made of ore, and the iron in the ore is melted out in a furnace heated with coke and the iron separated from the dirt by the use of limestone in the smelting. To make a ton of pig-iron it takes about 2½ tons of ore, according to the per cent. of ore, and 1½ tons of coke or anthracite coal and one-third of a ton of limestone. The cost of the labor employed to handle and utilize this raw material in making a ton of pig-iron in the Sloss furnaces in Birmingham, Ala., the largest in the State, is as follows: Sworn statement of Colonel Sloss, founded on his pay-rolls, puts the labor cost of the ore at $2.25, of the coke at $2.13, and of the limestone at 17 cents. He includes also in the cost of a ton of pig-iron water and fuel for the boiler and repairs of furnace and labor, and salaries of officers, superintendents, and labor in railroad transportation of the ore, coke, and limestone, amounting to $4.16, and making in the aggregate $8.71. Colonel Sloss concludes his statement as follows:

This table shows that the actual labor that goes to the making of a ton of pig-iron costs $8.71.

I will now give the sworn statement of H. S. Chamberlain, of Chattanooga, Tenn., a large miner of coal and manufacturer of iron for twenty-five years. I asked Mr. Chamberlain the following question:

In counting the items of cost that enter into the production of pig-iron from the crude ore to the finished pig, what proportion or percentage of the cost do you pay for labor?

Answer. Well, everything in it is labor, excepting the royalties, unless you would say that if I buy a ton of iron to make horseshoes or any other work about the place you would not count that in what might be called supplies. Other than that of course it is all labor. For instance, at our blast-furnace or at the coal-mines it is so. The mining of coal is all labor, except the royalty, which would be a separate item, from 12½ to 25 cents. I would answer, in a rough way that is very near accurate, that the fuel costs us $5. Take ore. The cost of transportation being excluded as not a part of the labor cost, I should say that the ore, the labor part of it, for a ton of pig-iron would be in cost not a great way from $4. The ore and the coal together, not including transportation, for a ton of pig-iron is $9. I put the whole cost for a ton of pig-iron when it is ready for shipment at $14. Besides what I have stated as to the labor cost of the coal and ore, we may say that about $1.50 or $2 might come in for labor about the furnace, making the cost of all the labor $11.

Mr. President, I have examined many witnesses under oath in New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and Alabama, and very few of them agree as to the labor cost of pig-iron. They differ from $2 to $8, and upon examination it will be found, as Colonel Sloss stated in his testimony, that—

The cost of making pig-iron is one of the troublesome questions, and ignorance or carelessness on that point has brought us into a good deal of difficulty. You ask a man what it costs to make iron and you will find that he has got one formula; and when you go to another you will find that he has got a different one, and so on. Now, I have here a statement of the cost of making iron for twelve months at our works.

Colonel Sloss makes the whole cost of the manufacture of a ton of pig-iron, including raw material, labor, repairs, taxes, and interest, $11.90.

I have no doubt that pig-iron can be made, and is now being made at Birmingham, Anniston, Gadsden, and other places in Alabama, at a cost of $9 per ton, and certainly at $10, and that the whole labor cost of a ton of pig-iron does not exceed $6; and the proof is conclusive to show that the iron and coal workers in Alabama get about as much and save more than such workers in Pennsylvania.

When you estimate the labor cost of a ton of pig-iron you have the first item of labor cost in all the forms of iron and steel and of all structural iron and steel. As you ascend in the scale of iron and steel manufacture you encounter the same difficulties in ascertaining the cost of labor that was had in determining the labor cost of a ton of pig.

Take next the cotton schedule. Edward Atkinson, with an experience of thirty years in manufacturing cotton goods in Massachusetts, states under oath that—

Nine-tenths of the cotton goods manufactured in this country consist of staple articles for the use of the million, such as shirting, sheeting, and drilling, and the common wear, and one-tenth consists of a nicer article, depending upon its style, its weave, its color, or how it is woven, like fine laces and organdie, and fine lawns and extremely fine threads. The former we manufacture for and supply entirely the home market, and the latter we mostly import from England, France, and Switzerland. The cost of the manufacture of cotton goods in mill labor does not exceed 1 cent per yard. The necessary expense attending the importation alone of the cotton fabric is at least 5 per cent.

The American cotton spinner has an advantage over the English cotton manufacturer of at least half a cent a pound in the cost of raw cotton. In a cotton mill constructed to-day for making a coarse fabric of cotton in this country a cent a pound would allow the payment of 6 per cent. on the capital invested. But for revenue the kind of cotton goods imported are a perfectly fit subject for a revenue tariff. In other words, if we did not need the revenue we would not need a revenue tariff; but needing the revenue and considering the revenue standard point of view in imposing the duty, we compass the other object at the same time. If there had never been a duty exceeding 10 per cent. in the United States from the beginning upon any article we would have had a more stable and larger development of cotton, wool, iron, and steel factories than we have to-day.

We all admit that, whether beneficially or otherwise, we have changed the direction of our industries through the policy of protection that has obtained, and no man of common sense proposes to sweep away the existing tariff at one sweep. I would cease the discussion between the two opposite theories, and I would have the two sides come together, and from their respective standpoints agree upon a practical measure which both sides could sustain. The difficulty is the difference of opinion between the manufacturer and consumer as to the rate of duty. The rate necessary for revenue is easily ascertained; the trouble is all found in the rate claimed for protection—it is denied that the rate that will bring revenue enough will bring protection enough.

The question of the price of cotton does not arise between the American producer of cotton and the manufacturer of cotton goods, for the reason that the American producer enjoys almost a monopoly in the production; and of fine cotton, the foreign purchaser regulates the price, because the foreign manufacturer of cotton goods takes two-thirds of the American cotton crop. This is not the fact as between the American producer of raw wool and the American manufacturer of woolen goods, for the reason that raw wool is raised in many foreign countries.

The next witness I will introduce is Mr. Gilbert B. Whitman, of Manchester, N. H., agent of the Amory Manufacturing Company, which employs eight hundred operatives in manufacturing cotton cloth, and engaged thirty-one years in manufacturing. I asked him the following question:

Mr. PUGH. The average rate or average cost of labor per yard of the kind of goods you have described—drillings, sheetings, and jeans—Mr. Atkinson said was about 1 cent per yard.

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. PUGH. Have the American manufacturers any ground for fear of English manufacturers, except on the cost of labor?

Answer. Not the least.

Mr. PUGH. They are able to compete except on account of the difference in the cost of labor?

Answer. That is all.

Mr. PUGH. All the advantage they have over you is in the cost of labor, and you offset that by a half cent difference in the cost of the raw material and a half cent in the cost of transportation.

The next witness is Thomas L. Livermore, of Manchester, N. H., agent of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company, which has on its payrolls six thousand operatives and manufactures 50,000 bales of cotton per annum. I asked him the following question, which he answered under oath:

Mr. PUGH. What per cent. of the cost enters into the fabric as cost of labor?

Answer. As I said, it is about 30 per cent. That includes the labor expended in the repairs of machinery and in handling the cloth after it is woven to get it ready for the market, and in trucking about—freighting—all of which is an essential part of getting the goods ready for the market, and we charge it in as labor. That includes the cost of transportation up to the time we put the goods onto the cars.

Mr. PUGH. How much benefit do you get from the protective tariff in the prices? What per cent. is added to the price of your fabrics in the American market on account of the tariff?

Answer. I suppose that all our profit is due to the tariff on that class of goods. As far as I have been able to judge, there are some few kinds of goods in which the great proportion of value consists in the material and a small portion of the value consists in the labor that we could compete with foreign manufacturers. These denims are perhaps an illustration. They are very coarse goods, into which little labor, comparatively, enters; but when it comes to finer goods, such as our ginghams, which constitute one-half our product, I do not think we could run our mills upon them without a protective tariff.

Mr. PUGH. Would not a duty of 30 per cent. afford you the same protection that you get now?

A. I think it would.

Mr. BLAIR. You mean a reduction of 10 per cent. of the duty on such articles would not result in their larger importations.

A. I do not think it would. I think the moment you get it below a prohibitory point that moment it would hurt us. In order to have it prohibitory you must have it high enough that it will not be infringed by fluctuations from one year to another. I do not think it is worth while for us to make any "bones" about it. What we want is a prohibitory tariff.

Mr. President, I desire to call special attention to recent declarations of Republican Senators reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 22d of December last, page 455:

Mr. VEST. We come back to the fundamental difference between the two parties in all these arguments, and it is going in a circle. We say that no duty should be put upon anything for the sake of protection alone. We say you have no right and it is unjust to tax the consumers in the United States for the purpose of building up any special industry, without regard to the necessities of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator to be in favor of that method of taxation which will raise the necessary money to support the Government from duties upon imports. If it be true that the consumer pays these duties, and that the price of the domestic article is enhanced to a sum equivalent to the duties, is not that the most expensive method of taxation that can possibly be devised, because for every dollar that goes to the Government $10 go into the pockets of the men who make the same article in this country, no matter what the rate is?

Mr. VEST. We are not discussing the expense, but the justice of the tax.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say that if I understand the Senator he is willing to levy duties upon cotton goods, for example, to maintain the Government. Suppose a duty of 1 cent is levied upon cotton yarns instead of 10 cents, and then nine-tenths of the cotton yarns consumed in this country are manufactured here. According to the theory of the Senator that 1 cent is added to the entire consumption of yarns and only one-tenth goes into the Treasury, and the other nine-tenths are paid by consumers of the yarn.

Mr. VEST. It is no theory; it is a question of actual fact.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now, that being a fact, I submit to the Senator that his method of taxation is the most unjust and oppressive that could be possibly devised. * * * I do not believe in the theory of the Senator.

Mr. VEST. What other theory can obtain, unless the Senator holds the manifest absurdity, to my mind, that the manufacturer pays the duty and that is the end of it?

The statement in the remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], to which I invite special attention as being most important and as being the crucial test of the Republican system of protection, is in the following words:

If it be true that the consumer pays these duties and that the price of the domestic article is enhanced to a sum equivalent to the duties, is not that the most expensive method of taxation that can possibly be devised, because for every dollar that goes to the Government $10 go into the pockets of the men who make the same article in this country, no matter what the rate is?

And this theory the Senator from Iowa emphatically denies. He is compelled to deny it or he must condemn the system the Republicans practice in enforcing the pledges of protection to American manufacturers. How can it be denied that the duty on an article imported is paid at the custom-house by the person who brings it into the American market for sale? How can it be denied that when the duty is paid by the importer it becomes a part of the original cost of the imported article and that when offered for sale in the American market, if the importer gets any profit his selling price must include the duty? Then how is it with the price of the domestic article manufactured in this country? Will the domestic article be offered for sale in the American market at a price that is made no higher on account of the price of the imported article that is increased by the duty? Admit that the price of the domestic article is regulated by its original cost, and that its original cost is the same as the imported article with the duty added, on account of the higher cost of the labor employed in the manufacture of the domestic article, can it be denied that the price of the domestic article includes the difference in the cost of labor here and abroad, and puts the home and foreign manufacturer upon terms of equality?

But the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] says that if the duty enables the American manufacturer to get the same price for the domestic article that is paid for the imported article with the duty added, it is the most expensive, unjust, and oppressive system of taxation that could possibly be devised. As urged by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] it is not a theory, but an actual fact. It is a fact established by the levying a duty on imports high enough to cover the difference in the cost of the labor employed here and abroad to manufacture imported and protected articles.

Just at this corner in the debate between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Iowa the stalwart protectionist from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] takes the floor and boldly announces the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth in these words of unmistakable meaning:

Mr. BLAIR. It is not then the theory that the duty is not paid at all, because the foreign article is not sold here. * * *

I submit to the Senator from Missouri that the Republican position is that the foreign article is not consumed here, it is not paid for, it is not traded for, it does not come to America at all, and our theory keeps it away, and then nobody pays it, because the foreign article is not sold.

Mr. VEST. From our imports we see how much is brought into this country.

Mr. BLAIR. That is because our theory is not carried out. * * *

Those foreign goods have no business here. The Republican theory is debauched by Democratic free-trade doctrines, and the foreign goods find their market here in the United States and are consumed in the United States, when, if our theory was carried out, they would remain at home, our own people would manufacture those goods, and they would sell to their own people, and we should consume what was created here. It is altogether in carrying out the theory.

Here we have it from one Republican Senator that the duties on imports do not enhance the price of the articles imported, or the price of the articles like them manufactured in this country, to the extent of the duty, because if such be true then the method of tariff taxation is the most expensive, unjust, and oppressive of any system that could be devised. And from another Republican Senator, who knows that the duty does increase the price if the article is imported at all, we have the frank and honest confession that the true theory of the Republican party is not to allow any competition for the American market between foreign and home manufacturers, but the duty should be high enough to keep the article taxed in the foreign country where it was made and where it belongs, and not allow it to come here for sale or barter, and let the American manufacturers supply the whole American demand at prices regulated alone by competition among themselves; and that if this Republican theory of prohibiting imports for the sake of protection stops the collection of any revenue, then the theory is to resort to direct taxation for the support of the Government.

Mr. President, the Republican doctrine refuses to make the boundary line of protection a rate of duty high enough to cover the difference in the cost of labor here and abroad employed in the manufacture of protected articles, and thereby make the original cost of the goods the same in the American market to home and foreign manufacturers, and insists that the duty shall have no relation whatever to revenue, but shall be made high enough to exclude importations and thereby prostitute the tax power into a power to make trade regulations between the United States and foreign countries. Who denies that this is the Republican theory and system of protection proposed to be organized and executed by the passage of the Senate substitute for the Mills bill?

Hear what the great junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] said in favor of a prohibitory tariff in same debate (RECORD, page 291):

Mr. EDMUNDS. * * * If you put your tariff down to the point of 25 per cent. because that is what the laborer gets, it enables the foreign manufacturer and the foreign starved and reduced and slave labor, as it really is, to send to this market just so much more of their productions; and I have not lived long enough yet to believe that, if I am to have two pairs of boots, and that if I get one of them in London that pair of boots is not going to be made here. Every pair of boots that I wear that is made in London is not made by somebody in the United States, and by just that much the labor of the United States is deprived of the opportunity to make boots for me. Now multiply that on the subject of boots and shoes by 60,000,000 and you will understand what I mean; and when you apply it to every one of the things in this whole list, the observation is of course true in exactly the same way.

This is the whole argument in favor of a prohibitory tariff on every article that can be made in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask the Senate and the country to remember that but a short time since the most that the American manufacturer claimed to protect him against injurious competition with the European manufacturer was to make the duty for revenue high enough to cover the difference between the higher-priced labor paid by him and the lower-priced labor paid abroad by his competitor, so as to make the original cost of the domestic and imported article the same in the American market, thereby putting the two manufacturers upon terms of equality in their competition with each other to supply the American consumer. When the Democratic party came fully up to that standard of protection in their platform and practically in the House bill, here comes an advance movement of the Republican forces to plant their flag upon the outer wall of protection, overreaching the boundary of the tax power of the Government to raise revenue for its support, and prostituting this revenue power into a power to prohibit trade with foreign countries by raising the duties high enough to destroy it for revenue and potential for protection by prohibition of importations.

Are American consumers of protected articles ready to surrender to the new exactions of tribute to those who claim a monopoly of the American market, with no protection to the consumer except what may come from the unavoidable and uncontrollable pressure of competition among themselves? Mr. President, I am a friend of American manufacturers and I will favor no law or system of laws that will interfere with their sure and steady and healthful growth and prosperity. But some protection is due to American consumers. They want their necessities and indulgences satisfied in the American market. They prefer that their wants shall be supplied by home manufacturers in the home market, but they want some chance of having their wants satisfied at prices that are reasonable.

Consumers claim that there shall be some mutuality in the American market between buyers and sellers. When the manufacturer meets the farmer with his cotton, his wool, his wheat, his corn, and his meat, what passes between them? The manufacturer says to the farmer, "I will pay you such a price." Well, who has fixed the price of the cotton, wool, wheat, corn, and meat the manufacturer must have? The price is fixed by the manufacturer, and the farmer is never consulted and has no voice or hearing. When the manufacturer gets the produce of the farmer at his own prices, it then comes to the farmer's turn to buy from the manufacturer what he wants.

The farmer says to the manufacturer, "I want you to sell me a suit of clothes, some calico, some gingham, dress goods for my wife and daughters, boots, shoes, hats, blankets, some trace-chains, axes, chisels, drawing-knives, pocket-knives, and many other articles you have to sell and I must buy;" and does the farmer say, "I will pay you so much for what I want," as the manufacturer said about what he wanted that the farmer had to sell? No, sir. The manufacturer has the price-making all his own way. He makes the price of everything he buys from the farmer and then makes the price of everything he has to sell and does sell the farmer.

The identical money the manufacturer pays the farmer for his cotton, wool, wheat, corn, and meat at prices made by the manufacturer, that identical money the manufacturer gets back from the farmer in the sale of protected articles at prices made also by the manufacturer. Is not such an American market a charming one for the manufacturer? Is there any wonder that he gets rich and the farmer is always poor? Is there any surprise that the manufacturer piles up any amount of money to put a party in power that will insure him such an American market? The wonder is that farmers and consumers submit to such injustice and outrage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

320. On stockings, hose, half-hose, gloves, shirts, drawers, and other goods made on knitting machines or frames, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, and not otherwise specially enumerated and provided for in this act, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. In line 1299, I move to strike out "35" and insert "30;" so as to read "30 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On line 1299, it is proposed to strike out "35" and insert "30;" so as to read:

320. On stockings, hose, half-hose, gloves, shirts, drawers, and other goods made on knitting machines or frames, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, and not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALDRICH. I appeal to the Senator from North Carolina to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VANCE. Why so?

Mr. ALDRICH. It will delay the business of the Senate, and I wish that we may complete this schedule to-night.

Mr. VANCE. Finish the schedule to-night?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. VANCE. I can not withdraw the call for the yeas and nays for such a purpose as that. I do not desire to finish the schedule to-night.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. STOCKDALE, and Mr. PAYSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the operations of the National Academy of Science; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

INDEMNITY TO JAPANESE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, recommending an appropriation for the relief of Japanese subjects injured, and of the families of Japanese subjects killed on the Island of Ikisima in consequence of target practice directed against the shore by the United States man-of-war Omaha in March, 1887.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 3, 1889.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations if there be no objection, and printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as it involves a question of foreign affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 4, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 3, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a draught and recommending the passage of a bill to authorize the printing of a statistical abstract; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an increased estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation for the support of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ST. MARY'S FALLS CANAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers relative to the commerce of the St. Mary's Falls Canal, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the expenditures for the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

ST. LOUIS AND IRON MOUNTAIN RAILWAY VS. W. H. CAYCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, papers in the case of the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railway vs. William H. Cayce; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF ARID LANDS FOR PURPOSES OF IRRIGATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report by the Director of the Geological Survey upon the survey of arid lands for the purpose of irrigation; also, submitting an estimate of an appropriation for the work; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following House bills with Senate amendments; which were severally referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 7776) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and in the county of Burt, State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-route—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10621) for the removal of the political disabilities of John H. Parker, of Virginia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 5349) for the relief of James Trabue, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callahan, and the widow of John Waters—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 9385) for the relief of Christian Kunzie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 5985) to increase the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardner, and Mrs. Lillie May Pavy to $30 per month—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS FOR DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT COURTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes, with amendment of the Senate.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendment, both as to the text and title of the bill. I will state in explanation that this bill passed the House of Representatives the 31st of last January. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to distribute one set of the Supreme Court reports at each place where the district and circuit courts are held in the United States. The bill passed the House, went to the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Printing. That committee referred the bill to the Attorney-General and a draught as a substitute was prepared by the Attorney-General, which met the approval not only of the Attorney-General but also of the Secretary of the Interior. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas what amount is involved in this bill.

Mr. LANHAM. The bill as it originally passed provided that $20,000 should be appropriated. Upon investigation by the Attorney-General, it is estimated that it may require $28,000 in order to supply all the courts.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say, when this matter was up years ago, and it was endeavored to put it on the sundry civil bill, there was an estimate made by the Department of Justice that it would involve the expenditure of over $1,000,000.

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, no. Here is the report or a letter from the Attorney-General. It is simply to give one set of the Supreme Court decisions to each place where these courts are held.

Mr. BLOUNT. It was endeavored to put that on the sundry civil bill several years ago.

Mr. LANHAM. Will my friend allow me to read from this letter of the Attorney-General?

Mr. BLOUNT. If my friend will allow me, I will state that, as I remember, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], in the conference committee, when this measure was up before, made a statement of an estimate made by the Department of Justice that it would involve over $1,000,000, and therefore I think it is of sufficient importance to go over.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman allow me for a moment——

Mr. BLOUNT. If I should do so other gentlemen would insist upon being heard. The gentleman will see that there is a difference of opinion.

Mr. LANHAM. If you will listen to what the Attorney-General said——

Mr. BLOUNT. I decline at this time. I might do so and still not be convinced.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I ask consent that the bill remain on the Speaker's table, that I may have an opportunity of explaining to the gentleman from Georgia hereafter.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that will be done.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ARMS FOR MONTANA MILITIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1969) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Senate amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill had better be read, unless the gentleman from Montona prefers to state the substance of it.

Mr. TOOLE. I will make a brief statement which I hope will answer the same purpose. The report made by the Senate committee shows the facts to be as follows:

In August, 1867, there was issued to the Territory of Montana, for the purpose of repelling Indian hostilities, field artillery, small-arms, etc., amounting to $69,296.77, which was charged against the annual quota allowed said Territory under the law for arming and equipping the militia. By the act of February 17, 1870, the Secretary of War was authorized to balance the account between the Territory of Montana and the United States by crediting said Territory with the balance of the amount then standing charged against it on account of the issuance of arms in August, 1867, amounting to $69,296.77, as above mentioned. In the mean time, and before such credit was authorized, there had been deducted from the annual quota of the Territory the sum of $33,860.76.

The United States has frequently on occasions of emergency issued extra arms to the States, and deducted the same from their annual quotas, but has afterwards credited the States with the amounts so deducted. This was done in the case of an extra allowance made to the State of South Carolina on the requisition of the governor of that State in 1869, which was for a time charged to its annual quota and afterwards made good by the issuance of additional arms.

The bill under consideration provides for the arming of the militia of the Territory of Montana, and the Secretary of War estimates that it would require about $46,500 to comply with its provisions. This would be in excess of the amount which should be issued to the Territory to make up what has been deducted from its annual quota and credited on the special issuance of arms, etc., in August, 1867.

Your committee have therefore amended the bill limiting the amount appropriated thereby to the amount which had been taken from the annual quota of the Territory and credited on the special issuance of arms in 1867, which amounted to $33,860.76. This will relieve Montana from the charge of the extra allowance made in August, 1867, on account of an emergency growing out of Indian hostilities.

Mr. HOLMAN. This $33,000, as I understand it, is a demand on the Treasury.

Mr. TOOLE. Yes, for the purchase of these arms; but when purchased they become the property of the United States, and the Territory is required by this bill to enter into bonds for the safe-keeping and return of the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this necessary?

Mr. TOOLE. Yes, sir. That was necessary, as there was no estimate for these arms in the estimates submitted by the War Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought we had been providing for enough arms.

Mr. TOOLE. Well, that is the statement of the Acting Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. TOOLE] that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM R. WHEATON AND CHARLES H. CHAMBERLAIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California.

Mr. MCKENNA. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill. A like bill passed the House a few days before the adjournment of the last session but failed to reach the President in time for either disapproval or approval.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to William R. Wheaton, ex-register, and to Charles H. Chamberlain, ex-receiver of the land office at San Francisco, Cal., jointly, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,800, being a portion of the amount deposited in the Treasury of the United States by them as fees for testimony which was taken by clerks whose compensation was paid from the private funds of said ex-register and said ex-receiver.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] that this bill be now considered?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman whether there is any report in this case?

Mr. MCKENNA. Yes; but the report is very long, and I can make a statement of the facts in a few minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no objection to the gentleman making a statement, but I reserve the right to object after the statement is made.

Mr. MCKENNA. Under the law as it was practiced in the land office in San Francisco the register and receiver were allowed the fees in certain cases coming before them; and out of those fees they paid their official expenses. The Secretary of the Interior subsequently decided that those fees did not belong to the officer, but should be paid over to the United States Government; and they were thus paid by the register and receiver into the United States Treasury.

The object of this bill is to reimburse to these officers the amount of money actually paid out by them for clerk-hire, being the sum of $3,800. Five thousand dollars was the amount collected, of which $3,800 was expended for clerk-hire. Subsequently an act was passed allowing to these officers $100 a month, I believe, for clerk-hire.

Those are the facts connected with this case. A bill similar to this was passed by both Houses a few days before the recess, but failed to receive the approval of the President—as I suppose on account of want of time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MCKENNA. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] will remember the bill to which I refer, as it was one immediately preceding a measure called up by himself on one of the Fridays before the recess.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from California under what circumstances these clerks were employed? How is it that they were employed without any authority for their payment out of existing appropriations?

Mr. MCKENNA. These land officers had authority to employ the clerks, and their employment was necessary. The clerks were paid at one time out of the fees collected by the register and receiver. The Secretary of the Interior, however, decided that those fees were public money. Hence the payment of those clerks had to come out of the private funds of the register and receiver. Subsequently, by law or by a construction of the Department, these officers were allowed clerk-hire. The object of this bill is to reimburse them for the money which they paid out of their private funds for this service.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCKENNA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABANDONED MILITARY RESERVATIONS IN NEVADA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3677) to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PAYSON. The reference of that bill should be, I think, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I submit to the Chair that the bill properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, which has charge of all matters relating to military reservations.

The SPEAKER. The bill might go, the Chair thinks, to either committee, because it provides for the opening of abandoned military reservations to homestead entry.

Mr. HOLMAN. When military reservations are abandoned they become of course a part of our public lands.

Mr. PAYSON. And these reservations are already abandoned by existing law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, on further examination, thinks the bill more properly should go to the Committee on Public Lands——

Mr. PAYSON. Of course.

The SPEAKER. It relates to the settlement of these abandoned military reservations as public lands under the homestead law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those abandoned reservations become public lands by operation of law.

Mr. PAYSON. Of course.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no desire to insist on the reference of the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, if it relates alone to abandoned military reservations.

The SPEAKER. It does.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

EMMA BIDDLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3628) granting an increase of pension to Emma Biddle.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that this bill remain upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that disposition will be made of the bill.

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read a first and second time, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 1455) for the relief of Mark Tomlinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Murphy, of Marengo, Iowa—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FORFEITURE MARQUETTE AND ONTONAGON RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the message of the Senate announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon in said State, and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The request for a conference was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. MCRAE, and Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. MCRAE, at his own request, was excused from serving as such conferee, and Mr. STOCKDALE was appointed in his place.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two weeks on account of important business.

Mr. DOUGHERTY was granted leave of absence, by unanimous consent, until the 10th instant.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, during the debate yesterday in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the river and harbor appropriation bill, while the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] was engaged in making some remarks criticising the action of the committee in reference to certain ports along the coast of Texas, I asked him through the chairman whether he had reference to Buffalo Bay or Buffalo Bayou, and his reply was that he had reference to both Buffalo Bay and Buffalo Bayou. That fact does not appear in the RECORD, and I ask the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

CALL OF THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

Mr. REED. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to make the following report, and to present a resolution upon which I ask the previous question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Before the gentleman has that read I ask whether he will not grant more time for debate than merely thirty minutes.

Mr. REED. I have asked for the previous question, having been instructed so to do by the Committee on Rules, so I am not at liberty to accede to the present request. After the resolution is read it will be apparent to the House, I think, the matter does not require more debate than the rules of the House permit.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to suggest to the gentleman after the resolution has been read to the House he will see it affects great measures.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think we can determine whether to limit debate or not until the subject to be debated has been brought to the attention of the House.

The SPEAKER. The report of the Committee on Rules will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, having had under consideration a resolution proposing to so amend the rules of the House as to limit the call of States and Territories on each Monday morning to one hour, begs leave to report in lieu thereof the following, and recommends its passage:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the present session of Congress there shall be no call of the States and Territories on the first and third Mondays of each month.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now I ask unanimous consent that one hour be allowed to each side in debating this resolution.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.

Mr. REED. I ask the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. It is proper to say that there was a division, however, in the Committee on Rules on this subject.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, the House divided, and there were—ayes 73, noes 22.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 36 in favor of the call and 6 opposed to it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is that a quorum?

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required. One-fifth of those present may order the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not want this thing railroaded through in this manner.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 28, not voting 180; as follows:

During the roll-call,
Mr. GLASS said: I ask that my colleague, Mr. NEAL, be excused on account of sickness.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
After the doors were closed,
Mr. COMPTON said: I ask that my colleague, Mr. GIBSON, be excused on account of sickness.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask that my colleague, Mr. GAY, be excused on account of ill health.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. ROGERS. I desire to call attention to the fact that my colleague, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, is away on leave.
The SPEAKER. If the House should order the absentees to be brought in that would include no gentleman who is absent by leave of the House. The Chair will cause a list to be prepared showing those who have leave.
Mr. GEAR. I ask that Mr. WARNER be excused. He is absent upon important business.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. GRIMES. I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. CARLTON.
The SPEAKER. While a call of the House is pending gentlemen can only be excused for that day.
Mr. GRIMES. Then I ask that he be excused for this day.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. MCKENNA. I make a similar request for Mr. FELTON, who is absent on account of sickness.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. FINLEY. I desire to make a similar request respecting Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky, who is absent on account of sickness.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MORRILL, be excused. He has been called away from the city on account of important business.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. KEAN. I ask that my colleague, Mr. PHELPS, be excused.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Then I move that he be excused for to-day.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. For what reason?
Mr. KEAN. He is out of the city and on his way here.
The question was taken, and the motion to excuse Mr. PHELPS was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that my colleague, Mr. HATCH, be excused. He was called away from the city on important business and has not yet returned.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object.
Mr. DOCKERY. Then I move that my colleague be excused.
The motion was agreed to
Mr. WILKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WILKINS. Have a quorum answered to their names?
The SPEAKER. The Chair is not at present advised.
Mr. WILKINS. If so, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.
Mr. WHEELER. I ask that my colleague, Mr. FORNEY, be excused on account of sickness.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
The question was taken on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call, and the motion was disagreed to.
Mr. REED. I move that the absentees be summoned in the usual form.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks the adoption of the resolution which the Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House all such of its members as are now absent without leave of the House.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. If I may be permitted, I desire to ask that my colleague, Mr. CUTCHEON, be excused. He is not well, as all members know. He was here this morning, but is absent.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask that my colleague, Mr. WEBER, be excused. His intention was to arrive here to-day and be present at this session, but on account of some delay in railroad trains he has not come.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object.
Mr. FARQUHAR. Then I move that he be excused.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. BURROWS. I ask that my colleague, Mr. O'DONNELL, be excused.
The SPEAKER. He has leave of absence.
Mr. BOUND. I ask that my colleague, Mr. PATTON, be excused.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SPRINGER. For how long a time are these gentlemen excused who are not here to-day?
The SPEAKER. Only to-day. The House under call can not grant a leave of absence further than to excuse present attendance of members.
Mr. SPRINGER. I hope they will all be here to-morrow, for we will need them.
The question was then taken on the adoption of the resolution of Mr. REED, and it was agreed to.
The following members are absent by leave of the House:

Breckinridge, Ark.	Dougherty,	Hooker,	O'Donnell,
Caruth,	Felton,	Kelley,	Parker,
Clardy,	Forney,	Lagan,	Patton,
Clark,	Gay,	Laird,	Phelps,

Dalzell,	Hatch,	Morrill,	Whitthorne.
Dibble,	Hunter,	Neal,

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I move that the House do now adjourn.
The question was taken; and there were—ayes 67, noes 43.
Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 59, nays 109, not voting 155; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I object.

The names were read; and the result was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call of the House.

The motion was rejected—ayes 53, noes 57.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who has charge of this report, that he allow it to go over for the present, and let us proceed with other business. The report will not lose its privileged character.

Mr. REED. If it can be understood that it will pass to-morrow—if there can be unanimous consent with regard to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I can answer only for myself. I merely suggest to the gentleman from Maine that he will lose no right which he now possesses by allowing this to go over, so that we may proceed with the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WEAVER. If we postpone it we shall certainly get a quorum just so much later. If we can not get a quorum in any other way the sooner we get it the better for our business.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then I make that motion, as I do not believe we can do any business by continuing in session.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House (at 3 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 4, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION CORRESPONDENCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I desire to supplement the message yesterday sent to your honorable body in response to a Senate executive resolution, dated September 25, 1888, asking the transmission of certain communications and correspondence on the subject of the recent proposed convention with China and the reported failure of the Government of China to finally agree to the same, by adding to said response two telegrams I omitted therefrom, which were sent in cipher by the Secretary of State to our minister at Peking, and which may be considered by the Senate relevant to the subject of its inquiry.

One of said dispatches is as follows:

"WASHINGTON, September 4, 1888.

"DENBY, Minister, Peking:

"Rejection of treaty is reported here. What information have you?

"BAYARD."

Two replies to this dispatch were made by our minister to China, dated, respectively, September 5 and September 6, 1888. They were heretofore and on September 7, 1888, sent to the Senate, and are printed in Senate Executive Document No. 271.

The other of said dispatches is as follows:

"WASHINGTON, September 18, 1888.

"DENBY, Minister, Peking:

"The bill has passed both Houses of Congress for total exclusion of Chinese and awaits President's approval. Public feeling on the Pacific coast excited in favor of it, and situation is critical. Impress upon Government of China necessity for instant decision in the interest of treaty relations and amity.

"BAYARD."

The answer of our minister at Peking to this dispatch, dated September 21, 1888, was yesterday sent to the Senate with the message to which this is a supplement.

The matters herein contained are now transmitted to the end that they may, if deemed pertinent, be added to the response already made to the Senate resolution of inquiry, and with the intent that in any view of the subject the answer to said resolution may be full and complete.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 3, 1889.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the message will be ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be well that the first message of the President and the succeeding messages which have come in on the subject should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let them be printed together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be printed as one document, or in connection with each other.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department, submitting an estimate of $2,000 required for placing clock dials and apparatus in the towers of the custom-house and subtreasury building at Chicago, Ill.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition very numerously signed by members of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, praying for such legislation as will prevent the sale of liquor in the Congo Free State. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Council Bluffs, Iowa, favoring the holding of a world's exposition in 1892, and a permanent exposition of the three Americas at the national capital; which were referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. REAGAN presented the petition of Pomona Grange, of Navarro County, Texas, praying for the passage of a law to relieve the country from the effect of trusts; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of the United States Eyeless Pensioners' Association, praying for the passage of certain legislation in behalf of pensioners suffering under the disability of blindness or having lost one or both eyes; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Nancy Polock, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3724) granting a pension to the widow of the late Commander Samuel H. Baker, United States Navy, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3027) to provide for the making, publication, and distribution of the "Register of Labor" therein named, reported it without amendment.

HAYTIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate all correspondence and information in possession of the executive department touching recent occurrences in the Island of Hayti, both as relates to the state of the government there and to the seizure and delivery up of the American vessel Haytien Republic.

INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back without amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 122) declaring the sense of Congress in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America. I give notice that to-morrow after the usual morning business I shall ask for the consideration of the joint resolution, and I hope that it will receive the unanimous approval of the Senate. Let the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America, and must regard any such connection or control as injurious to the just rights and interests of the United States and as a menace to their welfare.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate this expression of the views of Congress to the governments of the countries of Europe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar with the favorable report of the committee.

OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and are hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer under the resolution of the Senate of December 20, 1888, the expenses for the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON PRECIOUS METALS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] on the 3d instant, to report it favorably with amendments. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of the final report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the recent changes in the relative values of the precious metals, with minutes of evidence and appendices, presented to both houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty, in octavo form, in long primer type, and bound in cloth, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "printed" the committee report to insert the words "the usual number and;" and after the words "octavo form," to strike out "in long primer type;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the usual number and 3,000 additional copies of the final report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the recent changes in the relative values of the precious metals, with minutes of evidence and appendices, presented to both houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty, in octavo form, and bound in cloth, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3767) to authorize the board of county commissioners of the county of Whitman, Washington Territory, to issue bonds and to build a court-house and jail and to sell and acquire real estate for such purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HALE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3768) to reorganize and equalize the rank and pay of the personnel of the United States Navy, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3769) granting a pension to Andrew J. Elliott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 125) authorizing the heirs of Rear-Admiral Charles H. Baldwin, United States Navy, to receive a snuff-box set in diamonds from the Czar of Russia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COKE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 126) providing for the selection of a point for a deep-water harbor on the northwest coast of the Gulf of Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN LAND GRANTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be instructed to ascertain what prosecutions or suits have been instituted or authorized to be instituted to set aside patents to Mexican private land grants in California, at whose instance, and for whose benefit such suits have been instituted or authorized to be instituted; what private counsel have been employed to assist in the prosecutions, the terms and conditions of their employment, and by whom the costs of such suits are paid; when the patents sought to be vacated were issued, and the number of people interested therein, and what interest the United States has in such suits. And for that purpose said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and report by bill or otherwise.

STATEMENTS ON CUTLERY AND GUNS.

Mr. VANCE. During the holidays a delegation of hardware manufacturers and importers came to this city and made an unofficial statement before the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and myself, which we thought of sufficient importance to have printed for the use of the Senate. I ask the adoption of the following resolution for that purpose:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate the testimony given by the hardware importers and manufacturers taken before Senators VANCE and VEST on the 27th of December last.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 3732) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida;

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VANCE in Schedule I, cotton manufactures, paragraph 320, line 1299, before the words "per cent.," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

320. On stockings, hose, half-hose, gloves, shirts, drawers, and other goods made on knitting machines or frames, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, and not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. The pending amendment was offered yesterday by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he will withdraw that amendment this morning I will say to him that as to paragraphs 320 and 321 the committee are considering the propriety of offering some amendments as from the committee. I meant to have stated that last night when the matter was under consideration, but failed to do so. However, if the Senator prefers a vote on his amendment I shall not object.

Mr. VANCE. I will comply with the request of the Senator from Iowa by withdrawing the amendment for the present.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to state that the committee will propose some amendments to paragraph 321 as well?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; to paragraphs 320 and 321.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think that paragraph 321 sadly needs amendment, and therefore I was led to make the inquiry.

Mr. VANCE. Do I understand that paragraphs 320 and 321 are to be passed over informally?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that those two paragraphs may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment being withdrawn, paragraphs 320 and 321 will be informally passed over, and the reading of the substitute will proceed at paragraph 322.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

322. On cotton damask and on clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, including hemmed handkerchiefs, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. McPHERSON. This is the particular paragraph of the bill that I called attention to yesterday in stating that the makers of gentlemen's fine shirts are receiving 75 cents for the making of a dozen shirts. Here is 40 per cent. ad valorem in the form of duty to the manufacturer himself. I should think, unless it is going to interfere very seriously with the general structure of the bill as to the duties herein proposed upon the manufactured goods before they are made into clothing, the rate of duty here proposed might suffer a slight reduction. I do not want, however, to make the duty on the manufactured clothing less than it is proposed to make it upon the goods from which the clothing is made.

Will the Senator from Iowa please inform me what the average rate of duty is upon cotton damask and all the material that enters into the construction of goods described in paragraph 323?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator inquires as to the duty levied on cotton damask?

Mr. McPHERSON. I inquire as to the duties levied in this bill upon the goods referred to in paragraph 323 before they are manufactured into clothing, in order that I may reach some kind of an idea or knowledge as to how much advance is given upon the manufactured goods over the material of which they are made.

Mr. ALLISON. Cotton damask now pays 40 per cent., handkerchiefs, I believe, 40 per cent., and the goods specified in the remainder of the paragraph 35 per cent. by the existing law.

Mr. McPHERSON. If that be true, there is no additional duty imposed upon the ready-made clothing. The manufacturer of the cotton receives all the benefit, and the poor needle-women who make the clothing get nothing in the way of protection.

Mr. ALLISON. Five per cent. ad valorem is added to all ready-made clothing.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then I am quite correct. The cotton mills manufacturing the goods from which the clothing is made by machinery receive 35 per cent. protection, and the needle-woman, compelled as she is to pay the duty upon the thread, that being a part of her contract in the making of clothing, receives in the bill a protection of 5 per cent., providing the needle-woman gets it.

I want to ask the Senator from Iowa why it is in a bill framed professedly for the protection of American labor, as the labor in the manufacture of the clothing is greater in amount than the real manual labor necessary to manufacture the goods, that the bill is constructed upon such an idea? I read yesterday an affidavit, and I am ready to present others of like character, in which it was shown that a needle-woman manufacturing gentlemen's dress shirts of the first quality receives 75 cents per dozen net for making them, and that she was compelled to furnish the thread with which she made the garments, and that was subject to a high rate of duty also.

Now, here is a duty of 5 per cent. imposed between the material and the clothing when manufactured. I wished only to call attention to the fact. I also want the country to understand as well that it is the manufacturer and nobody but the manufacturer who receives any considerable part of benefit in any single schedule in this bill from one end to the other.

Mr. ALLISON. I will simply say in response to the Senator from New Jersey that we have reduced the duty on the raw material included in this paragraph and have increased the duty to the manufacturer of clothing 5 per cent.

Mr. McPHERSON. We have passed over paragraphs 320 and 321, but right in this connection, that I may be able to make more plain the theory on which I think this bill is constructed, we will take paragraph 321, in which, on stockings, hose, and half-hose valued at not exceeding $3 per dozen pairs, the duty is made 60 cents per dozen pairs and 20 per cent. ad valorem. I suppose the duty on an article costing $3 per dozen pairs would be about equal to the ad valorem duty under the existing law; but we find that a large quantity of these goods are imported from Germany at a cost of only 57 cents per dozen. The duty, I think, is 22.8 cents.

Mr. ALLISON. If I do not interrupt the Senator, I will state to him that in his absence the committee asked that paragraph 321 be passed over.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand that. I am simply calling attention to it.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the intention of the committee to modify that clause.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am calling attention to paragraph 322 by stating what appears in the paragraph which precedes it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that it is the intention of the committee to modify that paragraph.

Mr. McPHERSON. Is it the intention also to modify paragraph 320?

Mr. ALLISON. Not that I know of.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then I will go on with what I was saying.

At $3 per dozen pairs the duty is $1.20, but your bill imposes a specific tax of 60 cents per dozen regardless of cost and an additional duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem. Under this duty hose at 57 cents per dozen pairs would have to pay 71.4 cents duty, or over 125 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. I will repeat to the Senator from New Jersey that it is the intention of the committee to modify that paragraph.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well; as the Senator seems to be ashamed of the work, I will proceed further. Hose at $1.03 per dozen pairs will pay 80.6 cents duty, or 78 per cent., while the three-dollar hose will pay but $1.20, or 40 per cent. In other words, the employer, the manufacturer, the wealthy man who can afford to buy hose at $3 or $6 a dozen pairs is forced to pay a duty of only 40 per cent., while his employé in his factory who must buy the cheaper goods is forced to pay 125 per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 323, as follows:

323. On goods heretofore known commercially as Hamburg edgings, embroideries, or insertings, and as Egyptian and Oriental laces, composed of cotton, and stitched or otherwise wrought by machines worked by hand or other power, 45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I move to insert, after the words "Oriental laces," in line 1318 of paragraph 323, the words "neck-ruffling and ruchings."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 323, line 1318, after the word "laces," it is proposed to insert "neck-ruffling and ruchings;" so as to read:

323. On goods heretofore known commercially as Hamburg edgings, embroideries, or insertings, and as Egyptian and Oriental laces, neck-ruffling and ruchings, composed of cotton, and stitched or otherwise wrought by machines worked by hand or other power, 45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I notice that in paragraph 336, which is under the flax, hemp, and jute schedule, by some sort of arrangement, neck-ruffling and ruchings are included. That paragraph reads:

On laces, embroideries, insertings, neck-ruffling and ruchings, trimmings, lace window-curtains, and other completed articles of lace, and tamboured window-curtains, and other similar tamboured articles, composed of flax, jute, cotton, or other vegetable fiber, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

How it happens that under the flax schedule these cotton fabrics are inserted I do not understand. The articles which I propose to insert, ruffling and ruchings, are made out of cotton, and they ought to be under the cotton schedule. The effect of this classification is that there is a 50 per cent. duty imposed on these cotton fabrics under paragragh 336 of the flax schedule instead of 40 per cent., which is imposed upon the same class of cotton goods under paragraph 323, which we are now considering.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Missouri desires an explanation I will say that the present rate upon linen laces is 30 per cent. ad valorem, and upon cotton laces it is 40 per cent. ad valorem. The committee desired to place a uniform rate upon all laces and embroideries. The larger portion of the importations are laces and embroideries made from linen. Therefore, it was thought better, as the paragraphs were to be consolidated, that they should be put under the linen schedule rather than under the cotton schedule. Of course it makes no difference in the rate. It is simply a question of construction of the proposed act.

I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether, according to his understanding, placing neck-ruffling and ruchings in paragraph 323 would decrease or increase the rate?

Mr. VEST. I think it would decrease the rate from where it is now.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would decrease it?

Mr. VEST. I think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state that the manufacturers of neck-ruffling and ruchings asked us to put them under paragraph 323 for the purpose of largely increasing the rate. I have no doubt myself that 50 per cent. ad valorem is a lower rate upon neck-ruffling and ruchings of cotton than 45 cents a pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem. The effect of the amendment now offered by the Senator from Missouri would be to largely increase the rate upon neck-ruffling and ruchings of cotton.

Mr. VEST. Of course that is what I do not intend to do. I will state very frankly that under my calculation 45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem would be about equivalent to 40 per cent. ad valorem. I think that is certainly so. Unless my arithmetic is more at fault than I have ever known it to be, it would be about 40 per cent. or within a fraction of it. I do not see any escape from that conclusion. It is now 50 per cent., if it is classified under the flax schedule, and my idea was to reduce the duty 10 per cent., for I do not see why there should be this increase of 10 per cent. on these specific articles of cotton manufacture of ruchings and ruffling.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state that these articles of neck-ruffling and ruchings of cotton are not a specially fine manufacture. They are manufactured from cotton cops which are not less than 100 threads to the square inch, and they are not specially fine manufactures.

I will repeat what I have already said, that the manufacturers of neck-ruffling and ruchings appeared before the Committee on Finance and asked to have these articles included in paragraph 323 for the purpose of increasing largely the duty upon them. The committee, after consideration, did not think that that was necessary, and they decided to retain them in paragraph 336. I am greatly surprised that the Senator from Missouri should appear here as the advocate of a large increase of duty on these articles manufactured of cotton.

Mr. VEST. The Senator may be surprised as to my arithmetic, but that is all that ought to excite astonishment, because I think I am now moving for a decrease of duty. If my arithmetic is wrong, then I am wrong all the way through. Does the Senator from Rhode Island say that the amendment I propose is not a decrease of 10 per cent.?

Mr. ALDRICH. I say it is a large increase. I say that 45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem is a large increase over the present law and over the rate fixed by the committee.

Mr. VEST. That is not my calculation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator state the figures upon which he bases his calculation.

Mr. VEST. I submitted this matter to an expert, and he informed me it was about 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator kindly give me the cost per pound of neck-ruffling and ruchings?

Mr. VEST. I can turn to it in a minute.

I intended to make another observation when we reached paragraph 336, but since the subject is up I will make it now. The effect of the classification made by paragraph 336 under the flax schedule is to put all these cotton laces, embroideries, insertings, neck-ruffling, and ruchings, trimmings, lace window-curtains, and other completed articles of lace, and tamboured window-curtains and other similar tamboured articles, composed of flax, jute, cotton, or other vegetable fiber, not specially enumerated at 50 per cent. ad valorem. It seems to me that that ought to have been done frankly and openly under the cotton schedule. When we are considering cotton goods we ought to provide for cotton goods, for laces, curtains, etc., made out of cotton, instead of putting them under the flax schedule and mixing cotton goods with those.

I will withdraw the amendment until I can examine the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island as to the increase suggested. I do not want to increase the duty.

Mr. VANCE. In line 1320 I move to strike out the words "45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem" and to insert in lieu thereof "40 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 323, line 1320, after the word "power," it is proposed to strike out the words "45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem" and to insert "40 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

323. On goods heretofore known commercially as Hamburg edgings, embroideries, or insertings, and as Egyptian and Oriental laces, composed of cotton, and stitched or otherwise wrought by machines worked by hand or other power, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VANCE. I find in the testimony which was taken before the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance a statement made by the firm of A. G. Jennings & Sons, Brooklyn, who seem to be manufacturers of these cotton laces. I desire to call attention to two or three statements made by them. They say:

Laces made of cotton or linen thread can be cleaned or washed many times without perceptible injury, while laces made from silk yarns would be ruined. This is a great advantage in favor of cotton and linen thread lace, and the principal reason why it is preferred before silk.

The quantity of cotton laces used in the United States, it is estimated, is more than twenty times that of silk. There are tens of millions of yards of cotton lace imported every season, and hundreds of thousands of lace curtains.

Of the large quantity used in this country little or none is produced here.

Why are they not, and why have they not been made here? Simply because manufacturers who have given this industry a thorough trial have not been able to realize cost for their products. They have not been able to compete in style and assortment with the endless variety and in price with the extensive stocks offered at low prices in this market by agents of the large producers in Europe, who, by a system of undervaluation without penalties, do not pay the full duty of the present low ad valorem rate.

The great cost of producing a new pattern of lace by machine is in the making of the first piece. After that the more pieces made the cheaper it can be sold.

In England and on the Continent those engaged in making cotton laces have large plants and great facilities for producing many new patterns, also a large market and assured demand for many pieces of every new pattern produced. Their machinery is made on the spot. They do not pay 45 per cent. duty on that besides heavy freight charges, and for wooden packing-cases, which for some lace machines often cost over $75.

It is a principle of law that no man can take advantage of his own wrong. Therefore I protest against allowing a manufacturer to complain of the heavy duties imposed on those things with which he has to furnish his plant. They proceed to say:

The labor of making and finishing the lace is 33 to 50 per cent. cheaper there—

That is, in Europe.

The labor of making and finishing the lace is 33 to 50 per cent. cheaper there than in this country.

The cotton yarn used in making lace is especially made for that purpose. It is harder twisted than that which is used for common loom work, and often part is reverse twist or twisted to the left, as well as to the right, and as it is required to be even and smooth, it is generally gassed. In England, there being a steady demand for these yarns, they are supplied to the lace-makers at low rates and in large quantities. This class of yarns—

Of which the laces are made—

is not made in this country at all, but would be if there was a demand for it. On these yarns we pay 50 per cent. duty, besides the charge or expense of importing them, which on a bale of 200 pounds from Nottingham equals 11 cents per pound in addition.

* * * * * * *

If a higher rate of duty is placed on all cotton laces and a lower one on the cotton yarns (adapted to make them) the industry can be started and continued.

It seems to me that with this statement made by the manufacturers themselves it is a violation of every principle of political economy or common sense to impose an extraordinarily high duty upon these articles which are not made in this country, and which only can be made in this country at the expense of the taxation of the people.

I have been told (I do not know whether it be true or not) that owing to some peculiarity of climate the finest qualities of cotton yarns can not be spun in America successfully. I had the pleasure of showing to the Senate yesterday the vast difference in the wastage of spinning cotton in this country and in England. I was unable to account for it, except upon the general statement which I have made, that for some climatic reason, the greater moisture of the climate of England perhaps, the fine yarns can not be spun with the same facility and success in this country with which they are spun in England. If that be so, I submit that it is not good political economy to tax people to overcome a condition that nature itself imposes. It may be an accepted policy of the Republican party, it may be a principle of their political economy to impose taxes upon the consumer, to supplement their want of thrift or want of skill or want of energy in order to make them successful in their business. But I contend that when we undertake to levy a tax upon the American people for a necessary article to overcome a condition which God himself has imposed upon the climate of the country, we might as well undertake to carry the doctrine to its legitimate extent and tax the people for the purpose of raising oranges and bananas in Vermont or anywhere else.

Here it is seen that we can avail ourselves of the established plants of England and of Europe, of their great capital, their great machinery, their great skill, and the cheapness of labor, and the advantage in this kind of manufacture which their climate gives them, and for the cheap labor which is thus used for our benefit we could furnish them articles of which they stand in need that would make that cheap labor subservient to our higher-priced labor and contributory to its comfort.

I think that the present law contains a duty sufficiently high for the protection of an industry that is not yet in existence; that is not yet born; and surely, when we have so large a family of offspring to be supported by a hardly and heavily taxed people, I can not hail the birth of any more such younglings with anything like joy, and I shall not do anything to contribute toward increasing this numerous brood of beggar-brats.

I feel thankful that we have been able, by fostering those things where high-priced labor is remunerative, to purchase five times the quantity of those things which are the product of the cheap labor of Europe. I rejoice that there is one article of human need in this country which a man in common circumstances in this country may supply himself with by his own labor without taxation, and avail himself of the differences which the wise Disposer of human affairs has made in countries and in people.

Mr. ALDRICH. I assume that it makes but little difference to the Senator from North Carolina upon which of these paragraphs he repeats his stump-speeches, but it happens that the paragraph now under consideration was recommended to Congress and to the committee by the present Secretary of the Treasury in identical language and rate with that inserted in the bill. The Secretary's recommendation was accompanied by a statement, which I will ask the Secretary to read, stating that it is impossible to administer the law on an ad valorem rate of 40 per cent. He suggested to Congress and to the committee a compound rate of 45 cents a pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem simply for honest administration, making the statement that the rate was believed to be approximately equivalent to 40 per cent. ad valorem, which is the present duty on all cotton laces and embroideries. If the Senator has any dispute with anybody in regard to this question, it should be with Mr. Fairchild and not with the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance.

I wish to say further that the statement which the Senator made in connection with this paragraph, that fine yarns can not be made successfully in this country on account of the climate, is as untrue as anything can be. It is as wide of the mark as any of the theories and statements the Senator from North Carolina has made in connection with the cotton schedule.

I ask the Secretary to read the portion of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury whice I have marked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

COTTON EMBROIDERIES AND LACES.

The appraisement of machine-made cotton embroideries and laces, known commercially as "Hamburg edgings or embroideries" and as "Oriental and Egyptian laces," has been a subject of much controversy, and, of late years, has been second only to silks as a source of annoyance and trouble to all parties concerned, including importers, appraisers, and the Department. Serious contention in regard to the market value of this class of merchandise began about 1877, when a large proportion of the importations took the form of consignments on foreign account with resulting undervaluations. Owing to this fact, and the peculiar character of the goods, the appraising officers adopted a method of determining the dutiable value of the consigned goods by ascertaining the cost of stitching and finishing and adding a fixed percentage for manufacturer's profit. This resulted in the admission of such consigned goods at lower values than were actually paid for like goods by importers purchasing regularly in the foreign market, who, under the law, were obliged to pay duty upon the purchase price. The goods thus actually bought, when tested by the rule by which consigned goods were invoiced and appraised, were generally found to be invoiced higher than those consigned, the difference in some instances being as much as 100 per cent. The practical result was that a different rate or amount of duty was levied upon the same article from the same foreign market, imported at the same port at the same time, and appraised by the same officers, the discrimination being against the regular purchaser and in favor of the shipper on foreign account.

About a year ago efforts were made by the appraiser at New York, at the instance of the Department, to correct this inequality, but without substantial success. These efforts provoked much dissatisfaction and contention on the part of those interested in consigned goods, who claimed, with some reason, that the system which had prevailed for about eight years with the knowledge of the Department, and to which they had adjusted their business, had thus, by long usage, acquired the force of law. In this they were sustained by the active sympathy of the subordinate officers charged with the appraisement of these goods, who contended that such was the only practicable method of determining the dutiable value of the goods, and was a "reasonable ways and means" of appraisement; so that after a time recourse was had to the same system which, with some slight modifications, prevails at the present time.

As a result of these controversies quite a general movement was made by those most largely engaged in the importation of these goods at New York, as well as by those interested in their production abroad, looking to the adoption of specific duties.

In October, 1885, the importers of embroideries and laces at New York held a meeting and adopted a proposition for specific rates, as set forth in the accompanying correspondence, their scheme being based upon the cost of material, stitching, etc., a pound duty being imposed upon the cloth and a rate per 1,000 stitches upon the embroidery.

As shown by the appended correspondence, the Commercial Corporation of St. Gall, Switzerland, upon the invitation of this Department, submitted a proposition for a specific duty by weight on the merchandise in question, presenting, at the same time, cogent arguments against the so-called "stitch-count" plan of the New York importers.

These propositions were referred by the Department to the appraisers at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago, and their reports thereon are herewith submitted.

The weight of expert opinion is against both propositions in the form submitted. As to the so-called "stitch-count" plan, it is objected that it is difficult of uniform and satisfactory administration, and affords opportunity for evasions by understating the number of stitches, it being practically impossible to correctly verify the same, as a rule, by actual count.

The chief and a valid objection to a simple and uniform weight rate is that it would operate to exclude the coarser and cheaper qualities of goods, and thus discriminate against the masses and in favor of those whose means enable them to buy the finer qualities.

The suggestion of the appraiser at Chicago, of a duty by weight coupled with a low ad valorem rate, appears to be the best solution of the question. It is now approved by Assistant Appraiser Kent, at New York, as shown by his letters herewith, dated the 19th ultimo, although he had originally favored the "stitch-count" plan. It also meets the approval of leading importing houses of the country, and it is thought its adoption, while working fairly toward all, will end the controversies and difficulties heretofore attending the importation of this merchandise.

I therefore recommend the following substitute for the provisions in Schedules I and J of the present tariff, relating to laces, embroideries, etc. (tariff paragraphs 325 and 337):

"On goods heretofore known commercially as Hamburg edgings, embroideries, or insertings, and goods known as Egyptian and Oriental laces, composed of cotton and stitched or otherwise wrought by machines, worked by hand or other power, 45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

"On laces, embroideries, insertings, trimmings, lace window curtains, and tamboured articles, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, not herein otherwise enumerated or provided for, and on cotton damask, hemmed handkerchiefs, and cotton velvet, 40 per cent. ad valorem."

The rates suggested on "Hamburgs, embroideries," etc., are believed to be approximately equivalent to 40 per cent. ad valorem, which is the present rate of duty on all cotton laces and embroideries.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island why the committee felt itself bound to adopt the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say that upon a matter of fact of this kind after the Secretary of the Treasury through the experts of the Department has made an exhaustive examination of the subject, I feel bound, in the absence of contradictory testimony, to accept his conclusions.

Mr. VANCE. During the course of this debate I have heard on more than one occasion the Senator from Rhode Island cite the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury in support of his action. The Secretary made numerous recommendations for a reduction of duty, but I believe I have not heard the Senator from Rhode Island intimate an intention of following that advice on any occasion. It is only when the Secretary's advice looks in the direction of robbery by the increase of duties that the Senator from Rhode Island objects to my stump-speeches and cites the Secretary of the Treasury in his support.

Now, I am not bound by any recommendation made by the Secretary of the Treasury except in so far as it commends itself to me, and I expect to continue the utterance of these stump-speeches with renewed energy just so long as the scheme of robbing the American people by this system of taxation is kept up and advocated; and I shall, year after year, so long as life lasts, be found doing business at the old stand on the same terms. [Laughter.]

This is an increase of duty. If it be true that the Secretary of the Treasury recommends that the duty be changed for the purpose of avoiding undervaluations and frauds upon the Treasury by reason of ad valorem duties, I should like for the Senator from Rhode Island or anybody else to answer me how fraud is prevented if it is perpetrated under a simple ad valorem duty by the substitution of a specific duty and an ad valorem also. The door is open for fraud both front and rear, and every window in the house. Here is a specific duty of 45 cents a pound coupled with an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent.

I commend the zeal of the Senator, which occasionally bursts forth, to protect the Treasury of the United States whenever by so doing he can protect his own people in their enormous profits. I desire to protect the Treasury of the United States also, and there is only one way to do it. There is only one fair and honest method of levying taxation upon imports, and that is to exact a duty in proportion to their value. I do not care who recommends the contrary. Surely, as I have already said, the very object that they aim at is defeated by the substitution of double duties and by the imposition of so much more labor and computation upon the appraisers.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina is probably aware that but one Secretary of the Treasury in the history of the Government has recommended ad valorem rates of taxation. Every man familiar with the question is aware that that method opens the door wide to fraud; that articles sold in America for 20 cents are imported at 10, and there is no possibility in many cases of manufacture of making an accurate examination.

As I say, every Secretary of the Treasury but one, in the interest of good government and honest administration, has recommended specific duties, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who is excellent authority on these matters, suggests to me that every free-trade country follows that rule also. The English duties, as we all know, are specific. That is the rule in general with people who desire honest administration.

But we know perfectly well that a specific duty, we will say, of 45 cents a pound on articles sometimes worth 20 and sometimes 60 cents per pound works unequally. So in order to partially remedy that injustice it is often recommended that there be also an ad valorem duty, which does make a partial remedy for the unjust working of the specific duty. The specific, however, is left if you are to have but one rate of duty.

The Secretary of the Treasury does not discuss the question of protection in this matter. Neither does the committee, as I understand it. The Secretary of the Treasury, in the interest of an honest levying of the tax, recommends it, and the committee has adopted his recommendation. But I need not have said anything about that, because the Committee on Finance has explained those matters sufficiently.

I wish to add a word more, however, to complete the morning lesson to the Senator on these little matters of information. He was never more mistaken in his life than in the remarks he made concerning the impossibility of making certain goods here by reason of difference in climate. The moister climate of Great Britain is certainly valuable to certain kinds of manufacture, but I wish to inform him that in this very Chamber the precise degree of moisture is arithmetically regulated, and the hot air passing over dry, hot steam-pipes is ready to take up more moisture and bring in a condition that would not be very favorable to health and comfort. The indicator to the right of the Presiding Officer will show the Senator by study just what the degree of moisture in the Chamber is. I know the manner in which it is regulated in some large manufacturing establishments, and precisely within a fraction the manufacturer can make the climate of any moist island or any dry island in any room you please.

Mr. VANCE. I stated that I had heard the assertion made; I did not know whether it was true or not. I did not assert it as being positively true, but I am very glad that the Senator from Connecticut has partially corroborated my information.

The Senator says also that this kind of a compound duty partially removes the evil of undervaluation. Why not remove it altogether if specific duties will do it? When you have the implement in your hand to strike the blow that will prostrate an abuse, why knock it half-way down and leave it with life in it to do more damage?

The fact and the truth is that many of the cheapest kinds of laces used by the poor in their first attempts at ornamentation, used by the young girl or the young housewife, would be taxed by this specific duty three or four times as much as the highest-priced articles used by the rich, and that is the reason why these specific duties are adhered to.

The whole of this tariff system is a raid upon the poor man in the name of the poor. Of all the infamous exhibitions of this hostility to the poor that have ever been made in the history of protective legislation in the United States I consider this bill the crowning infamy in that respect, as I hope to be able to show between this time and the 21st day of the month.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to make just one additional inquiry. We have heard this denunciation for at least twenty-seven years, and it is much older than that, of everything that had in it any grain of protection. I will ask the Senator a question. I have asked it of several upon that side and have never got an answer to it. Is there any nation that has an approximately just system of levying customs duties, and if not which is the nearest right?

Mr. VANCE. The nearest right that I am acquainted with is the English system.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have received the answer that I expected to get, and that applies specifically, entirely, and absolutely to its defects. This feature is a merit. As to its defects those can be discussed hereafter. I wished to know where the gentleman tied himself; that was all.

Mr. VANCE. I see the drift; I see what is called the "true inwardness" of that question. The idea is to charge, as always is done, that we are in the English interest, that we follow the English system, that we prefer foreigners to our own people.

Mr. President, there never was a greater piece of hypocrisy exhibited by mankind in its most debased attitude than this pretense of dislike to foreigners. You only dislike the foreigner when he brings something to sell. When he brings a blanket or a pair of shoes or anything else to sell cheaper than you are willing to make it and sell it at, you despise the foreigner and you appeal to all kinds of prejudices against him; but when the foreigner comes himself to underbid and underwork the American laborer and take the bread from his mouth and the mouths of his children, you welcome him with open and with hypocritical embrace. That is what is universally done.

One-half of the factories of New England now are filled with men who are not even naturalized citizens of the United States, but who come across the border from Canada and elsewhere to labor here and return with the proceeds of their labor. You welcome that foreigner when he comes in the midst of your strikes, whom you can use for the purpose of putting down and suppressing the efforts of labor to secure its share in this taxation that is imposed in its name; but when he comes with anything to sell he is anathema maranatha, and all men are social traitors who desire to purchase his products at a reasonable price. That is the history of this labor question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, a word more. I gave the Senator no excuse for saying that I dislike the foreigner or was acting under any prejudice. I have no personal reason whatever to dislike Englishmen or England, I am sure. I disbelieve in England's policy of taxation.

What I wanted was to get one Democrat, if I could not get more, to frankly avow that it is the honest purpose of that party to adopt free trade as the policy of this Government. Not one time in fifty, on the stump or in newspapers, were we able during the last campaign to compel Democratic editors or orators to tell the truth in regard to the position of their party. An avowed free-trade meeting was held in Boston the other day, glorifying the campaign, glorifying the President of the United States, glorifying every effort made in the direction of free trade, prophesying a golden future, and declaring that great progress had been made. All we ask of them is that they shall tell the truth about the inevitable drift of their party, about that which the whole world knows, including themselves, to be the truth, that they mean to bring this country to a doctrine of customs duties which denies the moral and political rightfulness of protection and demands that taxes be laid upon a few articles of universal consumption; that is to say, practically a poll-tax.

That is what the party means. That is the reason why I asked the Senator that question. I did not care whether it was Great Britain, Belgium, or any other country, I wanted to know what tariff he believed in or what was nearest to his idea. He said the English one. That has no protective duties whatever. It is a tariff which is adapted to an island, to a compact little empire whose economic circumstances differ from ours as widely as may be imaginable. I shall dwell upon this more at another time, and give the Senator some statistics and figures.

Great Britain is included within a few degrees of high latitude. There is a great variety of vegetable productions that she can not do anything with whatever. There are many things for the table that she can not produce. There are many things necessary for her manufactures that she can not produce. There are many woods that she can not raise. She can do nothing with cotton. I shall not go through the list of these things; but she is utterly unable to adopt our protective doctrine if she wished to do so.

Here we are with a range almost from the Arctic to the tropics, covering a wide range east and west also, with a possibility of producing everything in the world almost. We can live without what we can not produce. I said in the campaign that we might have the famous Chinese wall of the free-traders, a hundred miles high, around this country and keep it fifty years, and when the doors were broken down you would not find us either naked or starving: that we would not have had much coffee and much tea, but we might be a rich, and a happy, and an intelligent people.

We have every possibility here. We have a nation that is in its infancy, that is but the cock crowing at the morning dawn of civilization to what some of these boys are to see upon this continent. Senators attempt to ridicule us for talking of our infant industries. As a nation we are practically an infant yet. We have a nation to build. What have we done in this decade as compared with Spain! Spain in sixty years has not grown as much as we grow in a decade.

But I am going on to make a speech that I shall reserve for some other time. I want to have the Democratic party take honest, frank, open ground for free trade. That is all I want.

Mr. VANCE. We had in this country once a very practical philosopher, who had a great deal of hard sense couched in very bad English, by the name of Josh. Billings. One of Josh's apothegms was that in order to bring up a child in the way it should go it was necessary to go that way yourself once in a while. [Laughter.] Now, in order to compel your political adversaries to tell the truth I should commend to the Senator from Connecticut that he should do so himself once in a while. He says that I am a free-trader, and that the policy of my party is absolute free trade, and he bases that upon my acknowledgment in answer to his question as to what foreign system of government I most admired.

Mr. HAWLEY. In taxation.

Mr. VANCE. In taxation. I told him I thought the English system was nearest right, meaning of any other than our own. [Laughter.] If Senators will content themselves in peace a moment, perhaps the laugh will be on the other side of the face. I did not mean by that any approval of the system under which we live. God forbid; as God did forbid it thousands of years ago from the top of Mount Sinai, when He said "Thou shalt not steal." [Laughter.] I am glad to see that the Senators are amused. I am not authorized to say what the sentiments of the Democratic party are in relation to taxation.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator answer me a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. VANCE. I prefer not to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. VANCE. I know the Senator from Massachusetts of old. [Laughter.] We had some exhibitions of that when we were discussing the long and the short haul a few years ago.

I am not an authorized exponent of the Democratic party. I look for the exposition of Democratic principles in the same direction that religious people look for the exposition of their faith, to the utterances of their councils and those who have authority to pronounce in matters of faith. I am simply one man, a very considerable one, it is true [laughter], but still I am only one man. The Democratic party of the United States again and again has pronounced itself in favor of a system of taxation of foreign imports that will yield sufficient revenue to the Government of the country, and it has never advocated any other. That is the system that I prefer, if I could see it carried out, to the English or any other system. But I prefer the English system out and out to the system which will be propagated should God Almighty for wise and inscrutable purposes afflict the American people with this Senate Finance Committee bill. I prefer anything else to it.

I might go back and charge that those gentlemen are in favor of a Chinese system. I have quite as much authority for making that averment as they have for saying that the Democratic party is in favor of free trade. Again and again they have avowed upon this floor that the effect of such and such an increase in duties would be to reduce the revenue by forbidding importation. Again and again this crowd of hungry witnesses that swarmed before the Finance Committee called the attention of the subcommittee to the fact that importations were the proper guide for the imposition of tariff duties: wherever you see a thing coming in, clap a duty upon it!

What would that result in if carried to its legitimate results? There are many ways of killing a dog besides choking him to death on butter. There are many ways of reducing revenue. You can reduce it by putting the duties to a prohibitory point as well and as effectually as you can reduce duties by lowering the charges upon imports, but it all comes to the same thing so far as the amount of money that goes into the Treasury is concerned. The reduction is made. But it lacks a great deal of coming to the same thing so far as the pockets of the people are concerned. The prices to them are raised, the cost of living to them is raised, and the taxes, instead of going into the Treasury of the country for the common benefit, go into the left-hand pantaloons pockets of the manufacturers for individual benefit, furnishing "fat" to be "fried" on all exigencies of politics.

If we put the duties to a prohibitory point, how could we raise the revenues necessary to support the Government? Should we not have to come to excise duties and to direct taxes, which is the British system, you know? It tends most directly there, much more directly there than does the Democratic doctrine.

The Mills bill is what we stood upon in the last campaign. Is there any free trade in that? There is a little freer trade in that; the impositions upon trade and traffic are not quite so great in that; but the man who could make free trade out of that and still lecture other people about telling the truth, would be certainly entitled to a patent on his invention.

All this discussion has grown out of some statements that I read in this testimony from the manufacturers themselves, to the effect that this yarn was not spun in this country, that these laces were not made in this country, and that the present duty was inadequate to force or stimulate their production in this country, and calling for an increase in duties that would enable men to start up and begin to manufacture in this country, adding another orphan to be supported at the public crib. In obedience to this mandate of the manufacturers the subcommittee have increased this duty. They have performed their duty to the manufacturers, but I claim that they have not performed it to the people.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, in our voyage through this sea of protection it may be well enough occasionally to take our latitude of departure on questions of principle.

The object has been, ever since this question was taken up for discussion during the last session, to try to put the Democrats in the position of free-traders, and the only justification for this is that they deny the doctrine of protection for protection's sake, and insist upon a tariff for revenue to support the Government.

One of the arguments that Republican politicians make to follow this charge of our being free-traders is that we seek to carry on the Government by a direct tax upon the people. That is the scare-crow that is brought up in the rear of the allegation that the Democrats are free-traders.

We may collect by direct taxation and in various ways duties for the support of the Government. Suppose we resort to direct taxation. Is there any Senator here, is there any intelligent citizen in this country prepared to advocate a tax upon land, or a capitation tax to be apportioned among the several States according to their population? To advocate such a doctrine would be to assume that a thousand citizens of Idaho or Montana should pay as much tax as a thousand citizens on Broadway in New York. I presume gentlemen are not prepared to suppose that Democrats are entirely ignorant, and that they would resort to such a policy to avoid the collection of revenue by a tax upon imports.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] refers to the idea of Democrats being free-traders and refers to his declaration during the campaign that if a Chinese wall a hundred miles high were built around this country until after a considerable length of time, still nobody would starve and we should get along very well. Suppose we adopt this policy of high protection and a prohibitory tariff, where does that take us to? That inevitably takes us to a direct tax upon the people. Does the Senator from Connecticut advocate a tariff for prohibition for the purpose of imposing a direct tax upon the people? Does any Senator on that side of the Chamber advocate such a doctrine? Yet all of them vote persistently and advocate everything that leads toward prohibition, and argue for high tariffs because they will exclude imports and reduce revenues by the exclusion of imports.

If the logic of their position is to be carried out it means a tariff that will exclude imports for the protection of domestic manufactures, for the promotion of the interests of domestic manufactures. Let them exclude the imports, and then they come exactly, by the logic of their position, to where it seems they seek to put Democratic politicians today, where Democratic politicians have never consented to go, but where Republican logic carries them inevitably. It is to this point that I desired to call attention—to the arguments so constantly used by them to show that the high duties levied are meant to prohibit importations. The logic of that doctrine carried out must prohibit imports, and when we have prohibited imports then we come to the place where they think it brings odium on Democrats to place them; that is, that they shall support the Government by direct taxation. When they get there a million citizens in an old and wealthy State or city would pay the same tax that a million citizens on the frontier would pay not worth the hundredth or the thousandth part of the property of the million in the city or densely populated State. Such is their policy.

There is no proposition to change the Constitution so as to levy a tax according to property, but if the logic of their position is carried out there is the place to which they must drift.

The only object I had in view was to call attention to the logic of the position of the Republican party and to show that it leads them to the exclusion of imports, to the exclusion of the collection of revenue upon imports, and to a direct tax upon the people.

Mr. DAWES. If protection is robbery, as I understand from our friends on the other side, is it not just as much robbery when you take the plunder to support the Government with as it is before? If protection is robbery, it is robbery whatever you do with the plunder. There is a way to impose for the support of the Government duties that have no protection in them, and why do not our friends adopt that method? If a duty that has protection in it is to that extent robbery, when there is another way to impose duties that have no protection in them, is there any sincerity in the claim that they are opposed to protection for protection's sake? Are they opposed to robbery for robbery's sake only for the purpose of getting the plunder? Is that the purpose for which they tolerate robbery, so that they can utilize the plunder? Is there any great virtue in saying that they are not for robbery merely for the fun of it, for protection's sake?

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator allow me to answer that question at this point?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. A tax to raise revenue for the support of the Government is that sort of tax that must be levied under all systems of government if government is to be preserved, but a tax for protection and for protection's sake—to transfer the property from one person to another without price and without consideration, by whatever name you may call it—is robbery.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. DAWES. I want to get along with my friends one at a time. The Senator from Delaware shall have his opportunity after I have answered the Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAY. I merely wanted to ask a question right in the line of what the Senator from Texas has just stated.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. GRAY. I wanted to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he is aware that the Supreme Court of the United States has by a decision sanctioned a very common rule of morality that inheres in all free governments, to take private property for public use, but held that there is no power in an American government, whether Federal or State, to take private property for private use.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator to keep that question until I get through with my friend from Texas and my friend from North Carolina. I hope my friend from North Carolina will not run out just now.

Mr VANCE. I shall be back in a few moments.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Texas says it is necessary to impose duties for the purpose of carrying on the Government. So it is; but you can so impose them that there will not be any of this element of protection in them. You can impose duties on tea and coffee and such like, that must be consumed, and will be consumed whatever the duty on them. The money thus received would go directly into the Treasury, and there is not any element of this robbery in that, because there is none of the element of protection to anything that is produced in this country. There is none of this wicked element of protecting the right arm of the laborer in his effort to support himself in this country in that kind of a duty, and that will support the Government. We had $18,000,000 a year on coffee, and nearly twice that on tea. That would have supported the Government before the war without anything else. There was not, as I have said, one particle of element of protection in it. We took that duty off, and the Senator from Texas voted to take it off or keep it off.

Mr. REAGAN. Not I. On the contrary, I gave notice when the tariff bill was pending in the other House that if we ever reached that point I intended to move to restore the duty on coffee.

Mr. DAWES. I beg the Senator's pardon; he was not where he could vote for it when it was taken off. I had forgotten that. But all his party in the House of Representatives voted for it. I voted against it.

I have no disposition to put the duties on manufactured articles one penny higher than is necessary to equalize the conditions of production in this country and the countries abroad. That is protection enough for me. I have no desire to go one particle further than to just put the laborer, the producer, the capital, all the conditions of production in this country upon an equality with the producer and the conditions in other countries, and I am willing then to let there be a "survival of the fittest" in the struggle.

The Senator from North Carolina a moment ago said that the only honest way to impose duties was an ad valorem way, and that every other way was a fraud and a cheat. When he was asked what system of imposition of duties he liked best, he said it was the English system. Now, the English system has two elements in it that do not exist in ours. One is that it is specific entirely; it does not in any respect conform to the statement of the Senator from North Carolina a moment before, that the only honest way was an ad valorem way. The other is that they impose taxation on articles of general and necessary consumption. Which of these is it that attracted the admiration of the Senator from North Carolina? Does he desire to have the duties imposed on articles of general consumption, that must be consumed here, whatever the duty, and can not be produced here? Is that the element of the English system which has so attracted his admiration? What is it in the English system, I ask the Senator from North Carolina (and I will yield to him that he may answer), that he does admire, if it is not these two elements?

Mr. VANCE. The principal thing in the English system of taxation which I admire is that all of the duties paid by the English people go into the treasury of the British Government. It is all honest taxation, so called, and there is no room for stealing.

Mr. DAWES. Is it because there is no element of protection in it that the Senator admires it? The Senator says that a duty for protection increases the cost to the consumer in this country of the foreign article, and enables the domestic producer to increase the price of his nearly if not equal to the amount of the duty. I have heard the Senator say that a great many times. That he does not like. That is protection. Is it because there is no such element as that in the English tariff that the Senator says he admires the English tariff? I repeat the question, what is it in the English tariff that he so greatly admires which is not in ours? What is it?

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator did not understand me before, I will repeat my answer, that the principal element in the British system of taxation which I admire is that all of the money paid by the British people upon foreign imports goes into the treasury of their country, and there is no room left for stealing.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator says that protection compels the American people to pay a good deal besides what goes into the Treasury, and he says the English system does not require anything to be paid except what is the duty imposed. According to his own definition the difference between the English system and ours is that there is no protection in theirs and there is in ours. In other words, that is a free-trade tariff and ours is not. Now, the Senator shrinks and flees from the term "free trade," but it is utterly impossible for him to define himself without defining free trade.

The Senator from Delaware wants to know if I have not heard that the Supreme Court has decided that you can not take private property for private uses without compensation, and that you can not take it by taxation except for the support of the Government. I have heard some such thing. I am inclined to think——

Mr. GRAY. That is not what I said.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator state it again, then?

Mr. GRAY. I asked the Senator if he had not heard that the Supreme Court of the United States had decided that while a government such as ours can take private property for public use, paying just compensation therefor, there is no power inherent in any government, State or national, to take private property for private use.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt that the Supreme Court have said it. If they have not, they ought to have said so. Until my friend from Delaware can have his eyes so opened as to see that a proper protective tariff is not a tax upon the consumer, it will be utterly hopeless to try to make him see the difference between that plain and simple statement of law by the Supreme Court and the plainest and simplest statement of a financial system of imposition of duties.

There is no tax upon the consumer in a properly laid protective tariff. It can not be found in the price-current of what the domestic consumer pays for his article, and it has not been in the whole history of the Government. Although my friend from North Carolina repeats it day in and day out, and the price of the article under the influence of the protective system contradicts every word he says, he pays no more attention to figures than if figures were utterly unintelligible to him. I have been told that they will not lie; that whether Democrats in discussing tariff theories or Republicans in discussing tariff theories depart from the truth, the figures do not lie; and the figures show that under the influence of a protective tariff from the time it is imposed and has opportunity to work out its legitimate effect, it has had the effect to reduce prices on every article upon which it is proper to impose a protective-tariff duty.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the observations of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. They have been very edifying and very entertaining as well. But I want to call his attention to one thing that I think he has forgotten. As he will remember, this discussion commenced with a criticism made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. He inveighed against specific duties, and gave as a reason for it that the tendency of specific duties as compared with ad valorem duties was to raise the amount of protection. Has not the tendency in this country and in other countries for the past ten or fifteen years been to a lessening in the cost of production of everything? If the ad valorem rate of duty to-day is sufficient protection and the ad valorem's equivalent should be made specific, will not the tendency be, as you lessen the cost of production, to increase the amount of protection? Therefore, is it not more just to establish a uniform ad valorem rate, because the meaning of specific duties is an increase in the tax? That is a question I should like to get an answer to.

Mr. DAWES. An ad valorem rate is a premium upon fraud. It is advertising that the more you will cheat the less duty you will have to pay.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. DAWES. In one moment. Let me state——

Mr. MORGAN. I just wanted to ask the Senator if he knew how many premiums there were in this bill on that kind of fraud? I do not suppose that there are less than two hundred and fifty premiums on fraud in this bill.

Mr. DAWES. Then there are two hundred and fifty premiums that ought not to be there.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall point them out after awhile.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt that there are propositions for ad valorem duties in the bill against the advice of your own Secretary of the Treasury, and against the advice of every Secretary of the Treasury, except the one in 1846, and against the advice of every experienced and intelligent collector at any of the considerable ports in the United States. The system of turning over, dumping into the markets of the United States the surplus of foreign production under an ad valorem system, will be increased and enhanced just to the extent that human ingenuity can devise methods to undervalue. A man with a surplus production can turn it into the markets of the United States under an ad valorem for half price, and thereby reduce the amount he is obliged to pay in the shape of duties one-half and recoup all the sacrifices in prices in what he saves in duty.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to read what Secretary Manning said upon this same subject?

Mr. DAWES. Why, every Democratic Secretary but Secretary Walker—every Secretary from Hamilton down, with the exception of Secretary Walker, so far as my memory serves me, who has discussed the question of specific or ad valorem duties has taken the ground that the only way to prevent fraud is to impose specific duties whenever it can possibly be done.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have the Senator from Vermont read in this connection what I know he has in his hand.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire merely to read what Secretary Manning said. I think the Senator from New Jersey will concede that he was as able a Secretary of the Treasury as he himself would have made, provided he had come in, as everybody supposed he would, if there was a Democratic administration in 1889. I read from his report of February 16, 1886:

A plan for the prudent enlargement of specific rates which will greatly promote the welfare of the Government and of the country, and as a matter of administration not work injustice to any class in the community.

The advantage is that under it duties are levied by a positive test—

That is, specific duties—and according to a standard which is altogether national and domestic.

Then he adds:

Whatever successful contrivances are in operation to-day to evade the revenue by false invoices or by undervaluations, or by any other means, under an ad valorem system, will not cease even if the ad valorem rates shall have been largely reduced. They are incontestably, they are even notoriously inherent in that system.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from Massachusetts still avoids my question. I should like to hear, I repeat, the Senator from Massachusetts upon that point. He answers, or attempts to answer, however, by saying that under ad valorem rates of duty great frauds may be perpetrated upon the Treasury. If goods upon which a duty was fixed by law of 40 per cent. ad valorem came in by undervaluation so that the duty did not yield more than 25 per cent. protection, the equivalent in specific of 40 per cent. ad valorem duty would be the entire amount, would it not? Then it is an increase of duty.

I want to call the Senator's attention and the attention of the Senate once more to a fact. Appended to this bill is a provision for the better valuation of merchandise and the protection of the Treasury. In that part of the bill we propose a new order of things, a new system, new machinery, under which, as I think, it will be almost impossible to undervalue goods at all. I suppose the committee will ask that that be appended as a part of the tariff bill, and I shall take great pleasure in voting for it, because in my opinion it does prevent undervaluation. It does another thing. It does away with the damage allowance on some particular kinds of goods. In that way it is a great increase of duty. It has that effect. It is an increase of protection at least.

What more does it do? It imposes a duty upon the packages and the crates in which the goods are packed, and it imposes a duty upon the cost of transportation and packing from the place where the goods are made to the port of shipment. In my opinion, to sum it all up, with the undervaluation bill which we propose to append to this bill, with the increased duties which it provides by reason of abolishing the damage allowance, and by imposing duty upon the packages and crates and the expense of transportation to the port of shipment, with the change from ad valorem to specific rates of duty, with the natural tendency of the lessening of the cost of production in this country, within two years from this date the average increase of duty under this bill for the purposes of protection to our manufacturers will be more than 20 per cent.

I know of no way of judging of the future but by the past. I read yesterday for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts a statement as to the cost of manufacturing a pair of ladies' shoes in the city of Lynn, in the State of Massachusetts, in which the entire labor cost was about 35 cents per pair. Five years ago I suppose the labor cost of that pair of shoes was more than double 35 cents, but by reason of a more intelligent application of labor, by reason of improved machinery and more intelligent workmen, the cost has been reduced. That is true as to nearly every article of merchandise that comes into this country. It is here proposed in the first place to so provide that there shall be no undervaluation. It is then proposed that we shall change from an ad valorem to a specific rate of duty because in that way the manufacturer gets the benefit of all the lessening of cost and cheapening of products abroad. Therefore I say, while I would be willing to have specific rates of duty where they can be employed, certainly upon all this class of goods which experience has shown have lessened in cost from year to year, when you fix an absolute rate of duty in that way you increase the rate of protection to a point which, confessedly in the Senator's own language, is ample, because he is ready to admit that by the duties proposed in this bill the protection is ample.

Mr. DAWES. Even if the very valuable amendments in administration embraced in this bill should become a law, and if they should work all that the committee believe they will toward checking frauds, there would be in my mind still an insuperable objection to the substitution of ad valorem duties for specific duties, and that would be this: I am opposed to the foisting upon this country of that system which exists in England, which in fact compels the producer to produce his article at the least possible price by grinding down the laborer to the lowest possible wages.

What is the course of England to-day in her manufacturing industries? She long since supplied her home market; she long since was compelled to seek foreign markets and to carry her goods into foreign markets and successfully compete with everybody else there. She must produce them at home cheaper than any other country can produce them; and the only way for her to produce them cheaper at home than other countries can was to put down the price she pays her laborers, because the raw material——

Mr. COKE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DAWES. Not now. I will pretty soon. The Senator will remind me if I forget it.

The raw material is substantially the same in all these manufacturing countries. The only great element of cost that can be changed is the cost of the labor employed in producing the article. When England undertook to compete with all the rest of the world in their markets she set about reducing the wages of her laborers. She is bringing them down to the lowest possible point. The lower she brought them the feebler was her home market, the less able were her people to consume at home, the less of her products could she find markets for at home, and the more of her products was she obliged to send abroad. It was suicide in the vain search of foreign markets, when if she had nursed her home market, if she had studied out to increase consumption at home, she would have so increased her home market as to have enabled her to have kept pace with her production at home and still keep up what she paid her laborer.

Now, if we have ad valorem duties here, the lower the cost of production abroad the lower the duty and the more the foreign producer can dump into our own markets, and the more he dumps into our own markets the less there will be for our own laborers to perform, and the less our own laborers can work the less they can consume, and so we shall hasten on to the deplorable condition the English producer is in to-day.

Mr. MCPHERSON. May I ask the Senator a question, because I do want an answer?

Mr. DAWES. I beg pardon. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is entitled to ask a question. I promised to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. COKE. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that England is paying the best wages to her laboring people of any country in the world except the United States. This is conclusively established by the consular reports and by all other evidence that we have on the subject; and especially is it true that England pays to her laboring people in the cotton-manufacturing industry wages which, when considered with reference to the value of the product, are better wages than are paid in the United States in the same industry.

Mr. DAWES. It is true that the wages of the operatives in England have been increasing for a few years past, because England could not keep her operatives in any other way. The operatives of England have come, by the steam-ship and the telegraph, to be next-door neighbors to the operatives in this country, and they know the difference and they can not keep them. Thirty thousand skilled laborers in a single year left England to find employment in this country; and the producers in England met to devise some method by which they could keep the skilled laborers at home, and the only method was to improve their condition. It is true that they are obliged to pay them more and more. They are obliged to give them better homes, they are obliged to protect them in the mills by employers' liability acts. They are obliged to take care of the children, following our example, so that they are not permitted to work so many hours every day. The reflex influence of our own system and our own policy upon England is elevating all the laboring classes there.

But while England pays more for her labor than other countries except the United States, the wages of the German operatives from the hour that they abandoned free trade and adopted the protective-tariff policy have been continually rising; so they have in Belgium; so they have in every country in Europe where they have abandoned the free-trade policy, which requires of them to produce as cheaply as possible, and therefore cut down the laborer to the lowest point possible. Wherever that is abandoned the opposite has been the effect. It is as plain as that two and two make four that if one man has two things to do he is better off than two men who have but one thing to do. It is employment that helps the laborer. It is not systems of enactment, of wages, or of hours of labor. Nothing in the world can lift him up for any given time but that system which shall secure to him the highest degree of employment and the most remunerative wages for it.

Mr. COKE. I will ask the Senator if English wages have not been going up all the time under free trade?

Mr. DAWES. I do not so read, Mr. President. English wages until within the last ten or fifteen years were going down and down until every seventh person in all England was so straitened and so short in the pay he received for the labor he performed that he had to be supported to some extent by charity—one man in seven of all the English people, all the operatives in England—until the condition of the English operative became so alarming that it arrested the attention of not only all those who were opposed to their policy, but of the English people themselves, until they are now retreating as fast as they can from the free-trade policy.

Let me ask the Senator from Texas to tell us why it is that they are flying from England and coming to this country in greater numbers every month? Does anybody go back?

Mr. COKE. I will ask the Senator if free-trade England is not paying higher wages than any of the tariff-protected countries of Europe?

Mr. DAWES. That is so. Now I want to have the Senator answer me this question: Is there a protective-tariff country in Europe which has not, from the time its protective policy was adopted, witnessed the increase of the wages of labor to its operatives? It is not comparing the English operative with other operatives; it is comparing the German operative under this system with the German operative under the free-trade system. The German operative and the operative in Belgium and the operative in France under the protective system have been finding greater employment and better pay. Why is that?

Mr. COKE. Suppose the Senator compares the wages in England under a protective tariff and in England under free trade.

Mr. DAWES. There is no question about it that England under a free-trade policy ran the wages of its operatives down to the starvation point.

Mr. COKE. That is not the history of the times.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, we are representing here in the different States a practical people who are very much interested in this subject of taxation because it comes home personally to every man; it concerns all of their interests and all of their industries. I think the Senate would be very much better employed in discussing the practical features of this tariff measure than the theories that may possibly arise out of it, and certainly better employed than in bandying epithets against either of the political parties in this country or in attempting to assign to them positions that they have oftentimes and very emphatically denied that they occupy or intend to occupy.

The statement has been made here this morning by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that he was very glad indeed to hear one Senator on this floor avow that he preferred the British system of taxation to the present bill, that he preferred what is called the free-trade system of taxation to a very high discriminative and offensive protective measure, and thereupon it was immediately imputed to us, the Democrats in the Senate——

Mr. ALLISON. I do not, of course, wish to interfere with the Senator, but permit me to say that I understood the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], when asked the question which system of taxation he most preferred of all, to state that he preferred that of England.

Mr. MORGAN. He qualified that by stating that he preferred that to any of the foreign systems of taxation, and not to the American system.

Mr. GRAY. Allow me a word. I was sitting quite near the Senator from North Carolina, and in reply to the question of the Senator from Connecticut as to which system of taxation he preferred, as to the taxation system of which country he preferred, he replied that of all foreign countries he preferred that of England.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not here for the purpose of settling any controversy between the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Connecticut. They can settle that themselves, and the RECORD will show precisely what was said. Neither am I here for the purpose of supporting or making any vindication of any statement the Senator from North Carolina has made, because he is perfectly able to vindicate himself and sustain his own opinion. But I am alluding to this subject for the purpose of getting to this proposition, that I think it extremely unfortunate that Senators of great reputation should undertake to state that the Democratic party in the United States are a free-trade party according to the British system of free trade because in certain cases we have opposed the raising of the taxes upon the imports of foreign goods so high as to make them prohibitory; and in other cases we are opposed to that system of discriminations contained in this bill by which the real substantial domestic industries of this country are broken down and the capitalized adventures of men who are engaged in amateur manufacture for the sake of making money are all the time being encouraged and propped up.

That is what I understand to be the situation, and that draws perhaps as nicely as it ought to be drawn the real line of demarkation between the views and opinions and tendencies of the views and opinions of the two political parties on this floor.

The Senator from Connecticut went on to assert in a very broad way that if we were honest enough to admit it we were all free-traders; that the purpose and object of our opposition to this bill, the purpose and object of every Democratic movement with respect of the tariff, was to bring about in this country the establishment of the British system of free trade, as it is termed, which, by the way, is not a system of free trade. That imputation, if I may call it such, has been resented and denied in every possible form and by everybody. So we are left under the denials we are constantly making to this proposition that we are either free-traders or we are fools; that we do not know what system of taxation we really advocate. We believe we are not fools, but according to the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut we are obliged to be fools, or worse, if we are not free-traders.

Now, Mr. President, a little honest dealing with the facts of history in respect of the free-list contained in this present bill and the free-list contained in the act of 1883, and the free-list compiled in various acts antecedent in date to the compilation of the Revised Statutes, will show us that there are just as many free-traders on the Republican side in the United States as there are Democratic free-traders. There seem to be, according to the views of gentlemen who make disquisitions upon this subject, two classes of free-traders in this country—one who are theoretical free-traders and who have a doctrine that they intend to pursue to its ultimate result of bringing about this British system of taxation which is called free trade, and the other, who are continually striving to put certain articles of common and prime necessity upon the free-list.

As I remarked in the outset, as we represent practical people, let us deal with this subject in a practical way, and let us measure our views and define them to the country by what we do in practice in voting on a tariff bill rather than by what we trip off from our tongues in declarations of what are our theories or our principles in respect of the general subject of tariff legislation.

When you begin with the earliest tariff law in the United States, you find that there were certain articles that it was declared by the positive provisions of the law should come in free of duty. There we find that free trade as to those articles was incorporated in the earliest tax bill in this country. More than that, going back to the Constitution of the United States, we find that in respect of all exports of products from this country absolute free trade is enjoined in the Constitution by a prohibition that is put upon the Congress of the United States against the exercise of any power by it to tax the exports from any State.

So we began by exempting exports entirely from taxation in the Constitution, and when we commenced to tax imports we at once created a free-list and declared by positive enactment of law that certain articles should come into this country free of all duties. Now, the man who put a provision of that kind in the first tariff act of Congress was a free-trader as to the articles which so came in. Who is a free-trader? One who proposes and votes that an article or articles, or all articles, shall come in duty free. That man who proposes that any article of importation shall come into this country without the payment of any duty is a free-trader.

Mr. VOORHEES. Pro tanto.

Mr. MORGAN. Pro tanto, of course. He may be a little one, but he still is as much a free-trader in principle as if he had gone over the whole schedule and put every article of American production on the free-list. The principle is precisely the same. Nobody can deny it except as to the extent or degree that it is made to apply.

We come on down to the compilation of the acts compiled in the Revised Statutes and we find, as I counted, three hundred and fifty-one classifications of articles put upon the free-list. When you enumerate the individual articles that are admitted under these three hundred and fifty-one classifications, they will run up to over two thousand. Here we had Democratic legislation and Republican legislation down to the date of the adoption of the Revised Statutes, and it swelled the free-list in this country until there was this vast mass of goods that came in free of duty by the express command of Congress.

I do not know how a man is to excuse or exonerate himself from being called a free-trader who assisted in building up that system of broad exemption from taxation of articles that came in. How very uncandid and insincere, how unjust, how unscrupulous it is to denounce another man as a free-trader for his votes upon this bill or any other bill when the accuser brings in a measure himself in which he proposes that a large number of articles shall come in free of duty? Is he not a free-trader as to those articles? And the broader and the larger he makes the compass of the admission of the articles needed in this country, only the larger, the broader free-trader he becomes.

If it is the motive of the legislation that is to decide who is the free-trader and who is not, it will be found on examination of this bill that it is a free-trade measure in many particulars for the manufacturers and a high-tax measure for the consumer, and its authors are in that sense free-traders.

Here are Democrats, here are Republicans, who have voted from time to time to increase the free-list until it has reached these enormous proportions, and until very largely more than half in value of the imports that are brought into the United States to-day come in free of all duty.

Mr. ALLISON. A little more than one-third.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not the figures before me. The Senator says a little more than one-third, which is just as good for my argument as if it was two-thirds. I am very much obliged to the Senator, for I had not the figures, but my impression was that it was more than half. I still have a lingering belief that I am correct about it, but take it at one-third. One-third in value of all the articles imported into the United States come in free of duty, and the aspect of the question is the same.

Now, whose law was it that admitted this one-third of the articles imported here free of duty? It was not a Republican law; it was not a Democratic law; it was a law in which both parties participated. All this series of enactments of which I have spoken have been sustained from time to time by the votes of both the great political parties in this country as occasion demanded.

I think if the Senator from Connecticut, instead of denouncing me and my confrères on this floor as being theoretical free-traders, or actual free-traders, had looked at the act of March 3, 1883, and had observed what was in that act, he certainly would not have felt very comfortable in making that assertion against his colleagues on this floor. It is a very unjust accusation. It is one that is denied by the facts as they appear historically in our statute-books. The act of 1883, as I count it, contains one hundred and eighty-eight different classifications of articles admitted free of duty.

The honorable Senators who have presented this bill have included in their free-list a number of articles that are now under taxation. Why have they done that unless they are free-traders? As to those articles are they not free-traders? If they are not free-traders as to those articles, why do they not impose some duty upon them? Senators, of course, are able to answer that they are not theoretical free-traders; that they do not propose to have goods come in generally and universally under a free-trade system, and that would be a theory which they do not advocate. It is directly in the teeth of their theory of protection; but when you come down to the facts, when you take articles from under taxation and put them on the free-list, I think that the common mind of this country will understandingly grasp the proposition that, as to those articles, they become free-traders. They are willing that they shall be admitted free of duty whether they are produced in the United States or not. They wish them to come in free of duty for the benefit of a certain class. If they are not to be benefited they want these articles taxed.

There are a number of articles in the bill now before the Senate that are produced in the United States in kind and yet there is a still larger number where we have articles that substitute them in the markets and in consumption, substitute them completely, and these articles, notwithstanding they are produced in the United States, many of them agricultural articles, are put upon the free-list in the bill now before the Senate. Why have the Senators gone to the pains to take articles that are now under taxation from the tax-list and put them on the free-list unless, as to such articles, they are free-traders?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, as an illustration of the question, the present law taxes jute-butts and raw jute. I will illustrate with those two articles. The present Senate substitute puts jute-butts and raw jute upon the free-list, as does the House bill. Now, neither of these articles is produced in this country, but we manufacture a vast number of articles from these two raw materials. So, then, so far from this being in the interest of free trade or a free-trade suggestion, it is an absolute provision in favor of protection to American manufacturers, and that is true of a large number of articles that have been added to the free-list by this bill. Therefore the fact that we have a free-list is not an indication that we are free-traders. On the contrary, if the Senator will examine the free-list in this substitute and the free-list under existing law, he will see, certainly, that in nine cases out of ten, if not in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the articles that are now entered as free are articles which are used by our manufacturers in producing manufactured articles in this country.

Mr. MORGAN. That is all very true, but that does not excuse the honorable Senator from being a free-trader, as I think I shall proceed to convince him.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not on that question, because I am not particular whether the Senator proves that I am a free-trader or a protectionist. I am not particular as to that.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to put the Senator on trial as a free-trader.

Mr. ALLISON. That is good.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to do that. Here is the free-list reported by the honorable Senator from Iowa:

441. Acids used for medicinal, chemical, or manufacturing purposes, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

There are many of those acids made in the United States just as conveniently and just as cheaply as they are made anywhere in the world; but because it is convenient for the manufacturers to have them free of duty the honorable Senator turns free-trader and puts them on the free-list for the accommodation of the manufacturer.

Mr. DAWES. Has the Senator the list of these acids?

Mr. MORGAN. I have not.

Mr. DAWES. I will help you put them on the free-list.

Mr. MORGAN. I am obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Massachusetts is being converted very rapidly in respect of the tariff upon all articles that are not made in Massachusetts. On the classifications of the finer goods that are made there he wants a high tariff, but when we come to the coarser grades the Senator does not want that. His theory does not accord with his practice in voting upon tariffs. I have noticed that. I am sorry it is so, for a life that has been so beautifully consistent as his heretofore ought to be preserved to the latter end of it by keeping up the movement.

I will take next "aniline salts." Can not we manufacture aniline salts in the United States?

Mr. ALLISON. Do we?

Mr. MORGAN. I have not any doubt that we do. The skill of the American chemist is quite equal to the skill of any chemist in the world, and there can be no difficulty in his manufacturing aniline salts.

Mr. ALLISON. They are not produced in this country.

Mr. MORGAN. Here is another:

451. Animals brought into the United States temporarily for a period not exceeding six months, for the purpose of exhibition or competition for prizes offered by any agricultural or racing association; but a bond shall be given in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; also, teams of animals, including their harness and tackle and the wagons or other vehicles actually owned by persons emigrating from foreign countries to the United States with their families, and in actual use for the purpose of such emigration, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

We can certainly raise here all the animals we want for any purpose, but because a man emigrates from Canada to the United States to compete with our coal miners and operatives in the factories or to compete with our agriculturists we let him in free with his—

Teams of animals, including their harness and tackle and the wagons or other vehicles actually owned by persons emigrating from foreign countries to the United States with their families, and in actual use for the purpose of such emigration, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. ALLISON. And his clothing also.

Mr. MORGAN. And his clothing also. Being the friends of the American laborer, and there being no such friends in the world of the American laborer as this committee, the honorable Senator from Iowa leading this committee first takes the clothes that the immigrant may choose to bring, it makes no difference how costly, how much of them, or where he got them, or at what price, and lets him in free with all his clothing. He comes here as an immigrant not pledged to stay. He does like the Canadians do; he expects to go back in a month or a year, or perhaps he expects, like the Chinaman, to go back or, after he is dead, to have his bones carried back to the old country. You let him in free with the clothing he chooses to bring; it makes no difference what its cost. You let him in free to labor for a year with clothing enough bought in cheap foreign markets to last him the whole time, so that he will not buy a dollar's worth in the United States. You let him in free, because he is an immigrant, and yet you pretend to be the friend of the American laborer as against the foreign laborer!

Not only so, but if he comes and brings his family, or comes by himself in the character of an immigrant, you let him in with all the "teams of animals" he wants to bring here, including their harness and tackle "and the wagons or other vehicles actually owned by persons emigrating from foreign countries" to this. A man could bring a thousand horses if he chose to do it as an immigrant. He certainly may bring a large number, and any number of vehicles he chooses to bring at any cost or expense. He can bring all he owns free of duty in the shape of animals, harness, tackle, carriages, and the like, and your bill admits him, and nobody can exclude him but the Secretary of the Treasury, who has discretionary power to make rules and regulations for the government in this country of immigration. Here is an exclusive privilege given to the immigrant from a foreign country and denied to our own citizens who need these articles to enable them to earn a living.

Now, I will take "albumen." I suppose there is enough of that produced in the United States, or else the hens have quit laying eggs. You let that in free. Why? Because certain manufacturers of india rubber, and other manufacturers, use albumen in their art. They are situated in a little nook of country up here, and they are represented by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] more than by anybody else on this floor.

Albumen comes in free of duty. What for? Why is not the honorable Senator from Rhode Island a free-trader in albumen, the product of the eggs of the country? Next:

Articles in a crude state used in dyeing or tanning not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

What are they? The tannin you extract from the hemlock bark, and from the oak bark, and from the various vegetable plants in the country that produce tannin. Why do you let that in free? Why are you a free-trader in articles to be used in tanning "not specially enumerated or provided for in this act?"

Mr. ALLISON. "Crude."

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, "crude." Why do you want them to come in if you are not a free-trader in tannin and all that? That is for the benefit of the leather-makers in the Northeastern part of the United States; and there is not a poor fellow who wants to cut bark in the mountains of Pennsylvania or North Carolina or anywhere else where these trees are found, there is not a Virginia negro who wants to collect sumac for the purpose of extracting the tannin from it, there is not a man in all this range of mountains up here that produces hemlock bark from which to extract tannin, whose trade is not directly put in competition with all the outside world by this free trade in tannin. No duty upon that. Why? Because our tanners want it in their trade.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Alabama wants to be reasonably correct in his statements.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly I do, and I shall be very much obliged to the Senator to be corrected.

Mr. ALDRICH. Hemlock bark and sumac and the others the Senator speaks of are now specified on the dutiable list.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the articles not specified are free. Where do you expect to get the balance of the tannin from? Why did you put that in? "Articles in a crude state used in dyeing or tanning." What articles come in free?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is making his statement and I will let him say.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me a moment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. He will find dandelion roots come in free. That is the compensation they give.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Rhode Island was speaking about the articles that are taxed. I am speaking of those that are not taxed.

Now, Mr. President, we have not any asphaltum; I do not know that we have, but we have substitutes for it. Our coal-fields and petroleum-wells furnish good substitutes for asphaltum.

Asphaltum and bitumen, crude, are admitted free under this free-trade bill.

Asbetos, unmanufactured, is admitted free, and yet I can show these Senators mountains of it in Alabama, where it appears cropping out of the surface for 4 or 5 miles in a stretch—crude asbestos just as good as there is in the world.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he is in favor of putting it on the dutiable-list?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not discussing what I am in favor of, but what you are in favor of. I am discussing this proposition, that you charge me with being a free-trader, and yet your committee offers a bill here that brings in articles free of duty which are in competition with articles of the exact sort that are produced in the United States in vast abundance. That is what I am doing. I am testing the sincerity of this bill. I will state my own position when I find an occasion to do so, and I think I will state it pretty carefully, but I shall take my own time and occasion for it.

I want to know now whether we are amenable to that cruel charge made by the Senator from Connecticut this morning that we were insincere, or in other words a set of men who would falsify our words when we professed that we were not free-traders in the British sense of the word at all, and that our doctrine instead of tending to free trade tended in the other direction, the maintenance of a tariff for revenue as the constitutional way of collecting money for the support of this Government.

Now, I will go a little further.

Ashes, wood, and lye of, and beet-root ashes.

Is that wood and lye of ashes? Is that what it means?

Mr. ALLISON. "Lye."

Mr. ALDRICH. Not "lie."

Mr. MORGAN. Wood of ashes and lye of ashes. Well, Mr. President, one of my very first recollections is seeing the old ash-hopper stand up in the corner of the chimney or the corner of the fence in the South where the women could extract the lye and make their soap and where they could extract a great deal that was valuable to commerce and make a better article of soap a great deal than you can find now in one of these factories, and were able to sell it at a cheaper rate than they can sell it. But this free-trade bill and the free-traders on this committee desire to bring in all of this stuff free and put themselves thereby in competition with this domestic industry all over the United States, and after doing that they get up here and rebuke me for being a free-trader.

These people have not much money, they have not much influence, they live far apart, they are not collected in corporations, they have no great capitalist industries under their control, they do not live in whited palaces upon the hill-tops, while those who work beneath them live in the valleys and scrub through their lives as best they may; they are not that class of people at all, and hence they have no friends in this part of the United States where capitalist industries have absorbed all the power that is in the land, physical, mental, moral, and monetary.

The agricultural and strictly domestic industries are in the hands of the class of people who can not, if they would, enter into combines and unify their power, but they must submit continually to such combinations against them.

Beeswax.

I suppose there is scarcely a household in the South and West where a farmer lives where more or less of this commodity is not produced. It is one of the best distributed productions that can be found in the whole list, and none of it is thrown away. There is not a hive of honey that is taken on a little farm in the whole country where the industrious housewife does not melt the beeswax down, and the first time she goes to town trade it off for a little cotton cloth, or piece of check goods, or something of that kind. But these princely manufacturers who are represented by the honorable Senator from Iowa, who comes from a beeswax country as well as the rest of us, but who belongs to a party that owes so much to the manufacturing industries of this land, a party that has so many obligations of a political character, so many papers to lift, the result of this last campaign, propose to put beeswax on the free-list instead of on the dutiable-list in order to facilitate manufactures and encourage their efforts. They know that there is no chance to form a beeswax trust amongst the producers, no chance to combine influence and power in favor of the production of this little domestic industry which in the aggregate amounts to a great deal more than your maple sugar, more than your sorghum sugar, more than the maple sugar, the sorghum sugar, and the Louisiana cane sugar combined in value in the United States. But that is the spirit of this bill. It is free trade whenever the manufacturer can make something by it, and when he can not it is protection. They use enormous quantities of beeswax in the Northern manufactories, and they want it to come in free, and the reason they do it is because they do not believe that there is any chance to organize an opposition to a taxation of that sort amongst the people who produce beeswax in small quantities in one homestead and farmstead and another.

Bones, crude or not burned, calcined, ground, steamed, or otherwise manufactured, and bone-dust or animal carbon, and bone-ash, fit only for fertilizing purposes.

I will not stop to remark upon that except to cite one fact. Two years ago it was my duty to go to the far West on the Indian Committee, and as we were passing through the Milk River region of Montana, where the buffalo were in the habit of spending their winters in order to get the benefit of the soft climate—for it was soft in comparison with the balance of the country—to get the hay; they having disappeared, we could see little mounds of bones, perhaps two or three tons in every mound, at distances perhaps of not more than a quarter of a mile from each other, strung along the railway for many miles, yes hundreds of miles, through that former habitation of the buffaloes, where they had perished. On inquiry I learned that the Indians had collected those bones and piled them up there waiting for the railroad to come and haul them off; and a large amount of bones, raw material for the manufacture of buttons and we know not what, a great many different manufactures, have been thus collected by the half-starved Indians.

These eager gentlemen, who are so decidedly against free trade, thought they would like to have these buffalo bones and others as cheap as they could get them, and they put them on the free-list; but when we come to buttons and the like, it is worth while to listen to their eloquence in preaching up the necessity for having men protected in making buttons out of these very bones that they admit free under their own bill, then have the audacity—for that is all I can call it—to rise here and charge me with being a free-trader if I want to reduce the tariff on buttons, as has been moved in the Senate. I suppose now they will think I am committing an unpardonable sin for calling them free-traders in bones. Here it is in this bill.

Free bones, to make into taxed buttons, for the interest of the manufacturer, is the free-trade theory of the majority of the Finance Committee.

"Charcoal" comes in free under this bill. Mr. President, I suppose it will be admitted that in every heavily-wooded country in the United States charcoal is a standard, staple production. Why are we asked to admit charcoal free under this bill? It is because New England has lost its timber. The manufacturing regions of New England have lost their timber. They want to get charcoal from Canada, where there is a vast amount of timber, uncut forests. They want to bring it down the coast in their ships, they want to haul it on their railways. They are obliged to have it in their factories. The sugar-refiners must have a very large amount of it also in addition to the bone-black; and even iron works in New England, in that older part of the United States, need charcoal to come in as cheap as possible, and it is a good thing to have it come in; but charcoal would never have been put on this free-list if New England had been heavily timbered. You can not afford to burn wood into charcoal in New England. You must go somewhere else to get it, and for the use and benefit of your manufacturers you put that upon the free-list and then turn around and call me a free-trader because I do not want to tax iron unnecessarily or unfairly, to the injury of the consumer.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question in regard to that matter of being a free-trader.

Mr. MORGAN. All right; I yield.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to preface my question by a single quotation from Professor Sumner, the great high-priest of free trade.

Professor Sumner, during the recent campaign, or shortly before, said that there was no person, as far as he knew, in this country who was a free-trader in the sense of proposing to have all imports from foreign countries admitted without any duty. That was not what anybody meant by a free-trader, but a free-trader was a person who did not mean to have the duties so arranged as to attract capital into any business where it would not otherwise go, or to keep capital in any business where it would not otherwise stay. Now, when we charge our opponents in this tariff matter with being free-traders, that is what we mean. In that sense of the term, is the Senator from Alabama a free-trader or not?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, Mr. President, when the President-elect of the United States puts in a letter the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts, or when the Republican convention puts it in a platform in the way he puts the question at me, I shall be prepared to answer on that proposition, and so will the Democratic party.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator prepared to answer that now? It is a very simple question.

Mr. MORGAN. I have plenty of other things to attend to just now, and I do not propose to follow the Senator from Massachusetts off in his learned quotations from Professor Sumner or anybody else.

Mr. HOAR. I thought I was putting a pertinent question which addressed itself to exactly the point which the Senator was upon. I endeavored to make it so. I understood that the Senator from Alabama complained with a great deal of indignation that he and his political associates were called free-traders. I stated to him that as I understood it the persons who charged them with being free-traders used the term "free-traders" in a certain sense, which I endeavored to explain, and in the sense in which the term was used by the great high-priest of free trade in this country, Professor Sumner, of Yale College, and it seemed to me therefore, if the Senator complained of our calling him a free-trader, that he ought to be willing to tell us whether we do him injustice if we call him a free-trader under our definition of that term.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know first from the Senator from Massachusetts whether he adopts Professor Sumner's definition.

Mr. HOAR. I do.

Mr. MORGAN. You adopt it?

Mr. HOAR. I think it is a good definition.

Mr. MORGAN. The one you stand by?

Mr. HOAR. That I stand on.

Mr. MORGAN. Now I will hear the Senator from Missouri, who has been asking me to yield to him.

Mr. VEST. If my friend from Alabama will permit me, I would like to give a definition of a free-trader from a pretty high authority. On April 1, 1870, Hon. James A. Garfield said in the House of Representatives:

I hold that a properly adjusted competition between home and foreign products is the best gauge by which to regulate international trade. Duties should be so high that our manufacturers can fairly compete with the foreign products, but not so high as to enable them to drive out the foreign article, enjoy a monopoly of the trade, and regulate the prices as they please. This is my doctrine of protection. If Congress pursues this line of policy steadily, we shall year by year approach more nearly to the basis of free trade, because we shall be more nearly able to compete with other nations on equal terms. I am for a protection which leads to ultimate free trade.

And the Republican party in 1880 elected that gentleman President of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. It does not seem to me, if the Senator from Alabama will pardon me, that it helps us in the least to get an answer to this question whether the Senator from Alabama conceives himself and his associates to be free-traders in the sense of the definition which I have quoted by undertaking to prove that some eminent Republican is or is not inconsistent with himself or inconsistent with the present attitude of the Republican party. That fact we might be willing to admit. I think there is a great deal of truth in it if I understand it in listening to it. I should like to know, if anybody will tell me—the Senator from Alabama can tell me as well as any man in the world, because he is a wise man, he is a profound student, and he is a thoroughly honest man, who never flinches from what he believes to be a conviction on a public question, and therefore it is a very great pleasure to put such a question to him, and it would be a great pleasure to have it answered—I should like to know, without a gibe or a jeer instead of an answer to my question, whether the Democratic party or the Senator from Alabama, a valued and honored leader on this floor, conceived themselves to be for free trade in the sense that they do not mean so to use our tariff as to attract American capital to a place where it would not otherwise go or keep it in a place where it would not otherwise stay.

If the Senator says he is a free-trader in that sense, then we are here to differ with him and to contend with him. If he says he is not a free-trader, but agrees with us that the tariff should be so used as to keep American capital in industries where it would not otherwise be kept, and to attract it to industries where it would not otherwise go, then the only question between us is a question not of principle but of detail. It is important to know that.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in exercising the power of taxing the American people, so far as my personal vote is concerned, I vote entirely with reference to the good of the Government of the United States, and by "the good of the Government" I mean its necessities, proper and appropriate necessities. I do not vote in levying any tax with a view by that vote and the exercise of that great power to advance any private man's interest, whether he is a capitalist or whether he is a laborer. In the casting of that vote, if a choice is presented between the encouragement of American industry and the encouragement of foreign industry, I shall always encourage the American in preference to the foreign industry.

The Senator from Massachusetts in stating his question unfortunately made it a little too narrow in regard to capital. He spoke of American capital, whether I would vote to levy taxes so as to induce American capital to go into new enterprises and to develop, as we say, the manufacturing or other power of this country. If I could confine the provisions of a tax law in such a way as that it would induce American capital to diversify itself, I should certainly make use of that power for that purpose; but when an invitation comes to capital at large, as it does under our tax laws, foreign capital as well as American capital, I am not in favor of taxing the American people for the purpose of inducing British, German, French, Spanish, or any other foreign capitalists to come here to engage in our manufacturing industries at their expense.

Mr. HOAR. Although we get back in prosperity more than we pay?

Mr. MORGAN. I have not stated that. That is an impossibility, and I do not put that in my proposition because it is impossible. But under the present law the invitation is given to capital to become invested under this high protective system of duties in a variety of manufactures, encouraged by this bill and by the law as it now exists, and foreign capital comes into this country more freely than home capital comes out of the pockets of our people to go into manufactures. I know it is impossible to trace it; statistics can not be accurately produced to prove the proposition I am now insisting upon; but I think it will scarcely be denied by any frank man that very vast sums of foreign capital come in under the invitation of the present protective system and find employment in our manufactures. We can not shut it out if we would, but our laws invite it to come here, and it does come and enjoys the benefit of the bounty that we tax our own people to raise for foreign capitalists.

It would be scarcely an overstatement to say that at least one-half of the manufacturing capital in the United States to-day is supplied from foreign countries. I know that in the town of Talladega, a town that I had the pleasure of living in from early boyhood to a later period in life, an iron foundry is now being established, with a capital of a million dollars, which is to produce one hundred tons of pig-metal per day, and there is not one dollar of American money in it. The organization is entirely foreign, the stock is owned abroad and there is not a dollar of American money in it.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] calls my attention to the great establishments near Chattanooga, of which he says the ownership is almost exclusively foreign.

Look at your railroad system, if you please. Who own the railroads of this country? Who own the bonds that control the railroads, the preferred stock and other forms of security that lie nearest to the control of the railroads in this land? Confessedly, undeniably, they are owned by the British people largely, and by German people, by foreigners. I think it will be a safe calculation to say that there is not a single existing American railway of any considerable length in the United States that has not been built by the use of foreign capital and which is not now owned in a very large part, if not the majority of the controlling power, by foreign people.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask him if he does not think that the large investment of English capital in this country is a pretty sure indication that it finds more profitable employment here than it could in Great Britain?

Mr. MORGAN. There is no doubt about that. It would not come here if it did not find more profitable employment than in a foreign country.

Now, let me go one step further. How does it find this profit? It finds it under our tax law, which taxes the agricultural, the fishing, the lumber, and the mining interests of the people of the United States, in order to pay a bonus to these men and to invite them to come here. That is what brings them here. They come for the profits. They would not come if there were no profits. It is the profit that invites them, and nothing else. They do not come from patriotism, nor is the invitation extended in this bill to them from patriotism.

The invitation is extended to them in this bill because capital needs support from foreign capital; the monopolistic power of the manufacturing corporations of the United States needs support and money from these foreign corporations; and hence it is that prices are kept up by protective tariffs, although the result is to hand over our industries, with all their earnings and profits, very largely, into the hands of foreign people. That is the effect of it. We are realizing precisely the same condition in respect to our manufacturers in the United States to-day that we are realizing in regard to the railroad systems of this country that were built with foreign capital under the protection of local corporations.

Now, when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] puts to me the question whether I am in favor of a system of laws which will create an invitation to capital to leave its accustomed channels and to embark in manufactures for the development of our resources of whatever kind they may be, I say to him that I put this limitation upon it: If foreign capitalists come in here and enjoy the benefits of a protected home market, as we call it, I say never will I consent to tax the American people in order to furnish an invitation of that kind for those men to cross the waters with their capital and come here and assume the control of our great industries.

I started out, Mr. President, to speak upon practical questions, and I have been drifted off into these theoretical questions, which, however, have a practical side to them, by the interrogatories which Senators have seen proper to direct to me. I return to the free-list in this bill. Here are—

538. Eggs of birds and fowls, and of fish and insects, and egg-yelks, unmanufactured.

They produce the albumen. The yelks of the eggs, also, are very useful in industry in different manufactures. They are found in large numbers. They are collected on the islands of the North Pacific Ocean, and they are collected also in the interior of Canada and brought into the United States in very large numbers for the benefit of the manufacturers; and yet there is not a farm in the United States, perhaps, where this is not a common product. That looks like a small matter, does it not? And yet your egg crop is worth more to-day than almost any crop that can be named. When you come to count its effect upon the sustentation of human life and the comfort that it brings to people, and the uses that can be made of this necessary commodity, you find that the egg crop of the United States is one of the most important that we have. All of that vast industry is neglected entirely by this protectionist bill, and eggs are brought in free because a few manufacturers in the North and East desire to have eggs free that they may increase the profits upon their industry.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator state more specifically what manufacturers they are, and in what State they are located.

Mr. MORGAN. Unfortunately, I was raised in the South, and rather in a backwoods country, and the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, who knows so much about the tariff that he would be excused if he knew nothing else except tariff [laughter], who has been raised, I think, in manufactures, who has been accustomed all his life to manufacturing, who understands the speed of every spindle that runs in Rhode Island, who can make a nice calculation upon the weight and value of every thread of a yard long that has been spun by a machine—that honorable Senator must not find fault with me if I am not a great adept in manufactures. I have not been engaged in manufactures, as I suppose the Senator has all his life.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator made an explicit statement, and I supposed he had some sort of idea upon which he based it.

Mr. MORGAN. I know this, and the Senator knows it perfectly well, that the yelks of eggs and the whites of eggs are used in manufactures of various kinds. I know that they are largely used in india-rubber manufactures, and is largely used in photography, and a great many other uses, and in confectionery, and I supposed the eggs that are imported from Canada are not used as edible substances at all. But why was it necessary to put them on the free-list if they are not used in this country? Was that done out of a spirit of romance, merely because the Senator could write "eggs" in the bill? No, sir; it was put there for a purpose, and a very important one, but utterly to the neglect of every person who was not engaged in some manufacture where the power of the institution could be concentrated in elections.

Then we come to—

Feathers and downs of all kinds, crude and unmanufactured.

Mr. President, if we want to encourage the people of the United States in their industries, one of the very best lessons that we could give to them would be the lessons of economy that are practiced in France and in Germany, where nothing is thrown away, where when a fowl is killed the feathers are saved for the market. If we would try to overcome that thriftless extravagance and waste that occurs in our country continually, where everything is thrown away and nothing saved, unless it happens to be some staple commodity like cotton or wool, our laws would be of some advantage to our own people.

"Feathers and downs of all kinds, crude and unmanufactured," are let in free under this bill. Why is that done when there is not a farm in the United States that does not raise more or less of feathers? This is an industry which, if it could be aggregated, would be one of the most important industries that a person could think of as well as one of the most comfortable. They are let in free for the purpose of accommodating the upholsterers, the makers of soft pillows and soft beds for people of luxurious habits; but when you come to tax the article after it is curled, or after it is washed, or after it is combed, or after it is cleaned, then you find that the tax runs up enormously upon these same feathers. It runs up so high that an ordinary laboring man can not get a pillow to put under his head. He must take some shavings or straw, or a block of wood, because he can not pay the taxes put upon feathers for the benefit of the manufacturer, he having paid no duties on the feathers he imports.

But these gentlemen go on and make their discriminations in favor of the manufacturers without the slightest attention to the wants of any of the poor people of the United States. They disdain them, and yet they speak about their affection for labor! They are willing for feathers to come free into the United States: but if you will curl them or wash them or cleanse them for the purpose of being put into a pillow or a bed it must undergo very heavy taxation, because their friends are engaged in curling, washing, cleansing, and preparing feathers for mattresses and beds, and the people of the United States at large are not.

So it is in regard to every one of these fibers and grasses here.

China-grass, istle or Tampico fiber, jute, jute-butts, manila, ramie, sisal-grass, sunn.

All of these if they are not produced in the United States—and several of them are produced with success—find their substitutes here. The cotton plant, the hemp plant, the flax plant, besides very many other textile plants that may be utilized for purposes of this kind are brought in direct competition with this free stuff that is brought in from abroad. Why is it brought in free? Because the manufacturers in the Northern and Eastern States want to have it as cheap as they can get it in order that when they go to sell the manufactured article they may make more money out of it. It is a bonus to them; it is an invitation to them to import it rather than buy the American production.

Then the committee include in their free-list:

556. And all other textile grasses or fibrous vegetable substances, unmanufactured or undressed, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

That covers the whole subject as with a blanket, so that nothing shall come in competition with them in their desire to bring in these articles free. Now we come to the next commodity put on the free-list:

527. Fish, fresh, except when frozen or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process, for preservation.

I do not wish to say any hard things about this bill, but that is the most unnecessary, the most unconscionable and unrighteous of all the discriminations that have been made in this bill. There is more in those two lines to show the animus and purpose of this bill and the alleged principle upon which it is founded than can be found, I think, in any of the schedules besides. As matters stand to-day, fish that are brought in frozen or on ice, if brought by Canadians or by Europeans or by anybody, can be sent free as far west as St. Louis or Chicago or any of the great cities and sold free of duty. That led to the complaint that the Canadians could come in here and, as they say, take our market away from us with their fresh fish. Here is the next provision, and why was it put in?

Except when frozen or packed in ice.

If a foreign fisherman catches fish on the banks of Newfoundland or anywhere out in the high seas and brings it on ice or frozen into Boston he must pay a duty upon it under this bill. If he can bring it in, however, to the port of Boston without putting it on ice or freezing it he can bring it in free. What is the effect? The people living along the New England coast depend very largely for their food upon fresh fish. That is known to everybody, and this bill gives to that little fringe of people along that coast the right to have fresh fish free of duty and brought in by Canadian fishermen, because they can be brought in and delivered to them without being spoiled, whereas if you get as far back into the country as Pittsburgh or Buffalo or Chicago your fish will be spoiled before you can get them there, and so you are obliged to put them on ice or freeze them to get them into the back country, and you are not permitted to do it under this bill without the payment of duty. The man in Pittsburgh must pay a duty on his fresh fish in order to have them on his table, whereas the man in Boston can get them free, whether they are caught by Canadians or by our fishermen.

I say that is the most unjust, narrow, and unsatisfactory discrimination that I ever saw in a tariff bill. It is something that this committee ought to take out of the bill for the sake of its respectability, for if we do discriminate in favor of American markets, let us at least abstain from discriminating as between Americans; let us not give to the man who lives upon the coast of New England the right to have his fish come in free, if they can be got there without being frozen or being put on ice, while you charge the man who lives in Pittsburgh a duty upon the very same fish because he can not get them to his table without putting them on the ice or freezing them.

Fish for bait.

Why should fish for bait come in free? That is not asked by the fishermen down on the southern coast of the Atlantic Ocean, on the Gulf of Mexico, or on the coast of the Pacific. It is asked only by a few men on a little bit of line of coast reaching from Cape Cod up to the Canadian line. They must have their bait free. Why? Why should they not pay a duty upon it as well as I pay a duty upon the fish that comes upon my table? It is because that is a peculiar industry located in a section of country that thinks the home market belongs to it, a set of people who believe that the United States belong to them just as a cow belongs to the man who expects the milk and cream that come from her udder for his breakfast-table or his dinner-table. They must have everything they need free, and these free-traders, under the guise and pretense and hypocrisy of being protectionists, whenever they can find a chance to benefit their own people, their own section, their own manufacturers, or even a few of them, do not hesitate to put discriminations of that kind in this bill, clearly for the purpose of showing to those people that they intend to protect them and give them benefits under the tariff laws that nobody else in the United States shall enjoy.

Floor-matting manufactured from round or split straw, including what is commercially known as Chinese matting.

That is admitted free.

Hair of horses, cattle, and other animals, cleaned or uncleaned, drawn or undrawn, but unmanufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act; and human hair, raw, uncleaned, and not drawn.

Now, Mr. President, what is the reason for bringing human hair in here free? Have you never heard of a widow woman in this country who would go to a wig-maker with the tresses cut from her head, beautiful and rich, and sell them for the purpose of buying bread for her children? Have you never heard of that? Have you never known instances in this country where the tastes and the affections of humanity were taxed to the last degree for the purpose of getting bread for the houseless and homeless orphan children of a poor woman? Sir, this country is full of instances of that kind; and if a woman has tresses of beautiful locks of her own hair, and should go to a wig-maker and sell them for bread, she finds that the manufacturer of wigs and scratches and frizzes and curls and bangs in the Northern country is allowed to have all the human hair that can be imported free of duty, and when she comes to consider the tax upon the manufactured article that they make from it, it is 38 per cent. ad valorem.

Then horse hair, cattle hair, and the hair of other animals is free, which is used largely in plastering and the building of houses, in the making of beds, and sometimes of clothing and carpets, interwoven with other textile fabrics, and made a commodity of great convenience and value. This is all admitted free.

I should say that the people of the United States had a pretty good opportunity to raise hair on the backs of the various animals that this country affords, but it might cost a little to have it collected in the back country of the United States, and there are poor people in the different parts of the world who devote their lives to the business of collecting hair together to put in bales and send to market. Their poverty and penury have reduced them to a condition where they are obliged to resort to these little industries in order to earn bread. Those people are convenient to the manufacturers. They collect the hair cheaper than our people are in the habit of doing such things, or perhaps could be induced to do it. The result is that hair comes in free. But when you put it into these different fabrics into which it is manufactured, and the different articles of dress, it never comes under a duty of less than 35 per cent. ad valorem in the manufactured condition.

Further:

578. Hide-cuttings, raw, with or without hair, and all other glue stock.
579. Hide rope.
580. Hides, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled, and skins of all kinds, raw or dried, salted or pickled, but unmanufactured, except sheep-skins with dutiable wool on.

These all come in free. There is not a farm, perhaps, in the United States, at least not one in the South or West, which does not during the course of a year produce more or less of hides of different kinds, and they are a merchantable commodity in any community that you go to. I suppose there is not a backwoods store or a village store in the United States that would not buy hides in exchange for goods, or even for money. Hides are admitted free. Why so? It is because the large manufacturers of leather can go to the pampas of South America, or to the steppes of Russia, or to the elevated plains of Mexico, and there they can find large numbers of hides of horses, of sheep, and of cattle that are oftentimes slaughtered merely to get the hide. They can get them of good quality and in great quantity. It is to their interest to have them come in free, and every hide that is brought into the United States is brought in competition with every farmer in the United States who has any stock. Scarcely an animal dies or is killed in this country whose hide is not saved for market. That is a valuable product, a valuable commodity. They admit them free, and the evident and only purpose is, as they say, to encourage the manufacturer. But all leather is taxed at high rates.

"Hones and whetstones" come in free, and yet the whole southern country, the mountains of the Appalachian range, abound in them.

So I might pass on through the whole of this list, and on every page of it I find article after article that is produced in the United States of just as good quality and in as large quantity as can be produced anywhere in the world, and they put them on the free-list, and every time it is done, without any sort of doubt, for the use of the manufacturer. None of these articles are consumable in their original character or quality. They are only valuable after they are manufactured, and they are put upon the free-list here by gentlemen who profess to be protectionists, and who charge me with being a free-trader.

I have gone as far into that matter as I choose to go, although I could bring forward a number of other articles that are put upon the free-list of this committee in this bill, but what I have done and said about this matter has been done with a view to illustrate the insincerity of the accusation against me and those with whom I am associated politically that we are free-traders. These very gentlemen, whenever they find it to their convenience or to the profit of the people they choose to represent, peculiarly, to put an article on the free-list, never hesitate to do it, and to that extent certainly they are free-traders.

Now, I turn to the other view taken here to-day by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who had a great outcry to make against ad valorem duties. I asked a friend to collect for me a list of the items in this bill in which pure ad valorem duties are charged, not specific added to ad valorem or ad valorem added to specific, but pure ad valorem duties, and the list is here:

AD VALOREM ITEMS.

Nos. 13, 14, 16, 19 (part), 20 (part), 25, 28 (many), 29, 30, 35 (part), 39, 65, 73 (many), 81 (many), 82 (many), 83 (many), 85 (part), 91, 99, 100 (many), 101 (many), 102 (many), 103 (part), 105 (many), 106, 109, 116, 118 (many), 131 (part), 135, 154 (many), 155 (part), 161, 163, 164 (many), 165, 171, 172, 179, 180, 182, 183, 188, 189 (many), 194, 198, 199, 202, 203, 204, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 236, 251, 259, 268, 269, 291 (many seeds), 295, 296, 300, 316 (part), 317, 318, 319, 320, 322, 325, 326, 335, 336, 337, 373, 376, 377, 378, 379 (books, etc.), 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 388, 389, 390, 392, 394, 395 (many), 396, 398, 400, 401, 402, 404, 405, 406, 408, 409, 410, 411, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 421, 425, 427, 428, 430, 431, 433, 434, 436, 438, 439, 440.

All these items are ad valorem, and beside these many others are specific and ad valorem.

I should like to know how this committee can discard as a doctrine unworthy of being put into a tariff bill the ad valorem principle when they find it necessary to resort to it in this long list that I have here before me of ad valorem rates that they have put upon the importation of commodities. Whenever it is necessary to give advantage to the manufacturers the ad valorem rate is put on; whenever it is found necessary on the other hand to give the advantage to the manufacturers a double rate, ad valorem and specific, is oftentimes put on.

This is a bill which receives the denunciations of the Senator from Massachusetts because it contains a large number of ad valorem duties pure and simple, and yet he votes for it and supports it through and through. I am not complaining that ad valorem duties and specific duties are both resorted to. I do not care to demand, as far as my vote may assist in demanding it, that ad valorem rates shall be the only rates to which we resort, and yet I am thoroughly convinced that no more fraud is practiced under the ad valorem system than is practiced under specific duties.

You take a square yard of cloth that is taxed at a certain rate because it contains a certain number of threads, and you submit that cloth to the inspection of a custom-house officer of the United States, sworn or unsworn, it makes no difference, and if he is a man who can be diverted from his duty by a little reward or a little fee, he will count the threads short, and your specific duties will lead to just as much fraud and just as much perjury as your ad valorem duties. You can not cure the disposition of men to make money by fraud and perjury by the shape in which you put your laws. It can only be done by the vigilance of their execution. I do not believe that the great merchants who import goods from foreign countries and fill up our Treasury with revenue until it overflows to the extent of one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty millions a year are engaged in swearing lies, or would lend themselves to schemes of that kind, or would tolerate them in any of their employés. I believe the ad valorem system of taxation is just as free from fraud as the specific system, and that it would be a valuable, useful, just, and equitable thing to resort to it in very many cases where we resort to specific duties. The duty would then be adjusted according to the value of the article, and not according to the whim and caprice of the legislator who may be influenced by a desire to advance the interests of his own peculiar constituency in the votes which he gives. I would remove temptation from the law-maker as the first and wisest step in this reform.

Now, it may be asked if I object to these articles going on the free-list. No, I do not object to it. What I object to is being called a free-trader by the men who put them there. When they are continually arguing in the interest of the manufacturer every time they have a chance by putting articles on the free-list, I think for decency's sake they ought to stop charging me with being a free-trader. That is my view of the subject.

When I come to define my own views about this matter, they will sum up about this way; they are not very mature as yet, but they are the result of a good deal of reflection. I am not in favor of a very large free-list; I am in favor of a free-list that will include the elementary necessaries of life; but I am in favor of low taxation upon everything that we tax at all. With a small free-list and low taxation we should accomplish for the Treasury of the United States all the purposes of good government and get all the money that the Government has any use for; we should fill up the Treasury sufficiently with revenues from year to year, and our people would not feel those unjust and discriminating burdens that carry many of them into poverty, putting them in the power of the capitalists and preventing the possibility of their ever escaping from their clutches.

When I cast my eyes over the Southern States, and the Western States also, and find that the homes throughout this land are mortgaged to the money-holders for the purpose of conducting the enterprises, the very business on which the country feeds, and with which we are clothed, I think that it is time we had changed our policy and that we had lower taxation, so that these industries could be sustained without borrowing money from protected capitalists.

I can not excuse or apologize for high taxation upon the ground that it is necessary to tax one man to make another man rich. I can see no justice in it. I am not able to appreciate that curious philosophy or political economy which these gentlemen would believe and would argue and try to prove, that it is their duty as legislators, in taxing the people, to tax one man for the purpose of increasing the profits of another, and, as is said, of bringing to the man taxed a recurring opportunity of an increase of his own wealth—a doctrine I do not adhere to, and I think it is an abuse of the taxing power and also of the legislative power.

The right thing to do is to enact a proper system of tax laws bearing upon the people of the United States with just as little burden as possible, and let every man in the United States, according to his ability, contribute his just and proper quota to taxation.

Mr. CALL. I ask leave to submit an amendment to the pending bill, to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be received, lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Mr. President, in the examination of the Senate substitute for the House tariff bill it would be difficult to go amiss in looking for instances in which that substitute aims to increase duties not only far beyond former experiences of our people but beyond what high protectionists have heretofore claimed to be necessary for industrial prosperity, and beyond what our economic history has shown to be entirely adequate to secure reasonable and just returns both to capital and labor. Such increments to taxes which high protectionists have heretofore and in our recent history considered to be extreme, which they have again and again promised to modify, and which they have once reduced, and then upon a pretext of insufficient revenue, which even if then valid has long since been continuously transformed into the opposite extreme, can only signify that our manufacturing industries, with their many allies, who, like them, have been created and supported by Federal legislation, no longer think it worth while to dally with the people, but feel themselves strong enough, though a small fraction of their countrymen, to rule by the might of concentrated and organized capital, and by their dictation to tax 60,000,000 of people just so far as they think their subjects, deluded on the one hand by misleading party battle-cries, and inflamed on the other by old war passions sedulously aroused, and by sectional and race prejudices skillfully and industriously invoked, can be made to bear without rebellion against their task-masters.

Sir, I am one of those Democrats who are willing to grant all reasonable protection to those industries which the policy of our Government, even when dictated by the stern necessities of war, has in the past established in our midst. I am willing to give such protection to these industries as will make good all inequalities in the cost of labor here and in other countries, all differences in the cost of raw materials, and all real and substantial differences of condition and circumstances which place American labor and capital at a disadvantage in their rivalry with foreign workmen. But I am not willing to erect a high breastwork of prohibitory duties behind which American manufacturers are to be freed from all international competition and all incentives thence inducing to a wise economy and to an ever-active inventiveness, and behind which they can deliberately plan the extent of their output, and at their pleasure combine to raise their prices, in utter disregard of the ability of their workmen to live and of their customers to pay. Although some of our prominent Republican statesmen have attempted to vindicate the harmlessness of trusts as merely "private affairs," and learned professors in universities have been impressed into service to vindicate both the legalty and healthiness of these economic monstrosities, yet I am one of those old-fashioned people who believe that it would be an insufferable outrage to allow a small band of capitalists in any line of trade, not only permissively under or against the law, but directly under the protection and by the aid of the law, at their sovereign pleasure, to put up their prices to extortionate rates to the actual discomfort of millions of their fellow-countrymen and to the absolute suffering of many millions more.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this cotton schedule now under consideration furnishes many illustrations of the truth that this Senate bill is seeking to establish rates which, in the light of our industrial history, are needlessly high for the protection of either capital or labor. Certainly some of them are higher than they were in the midst of the throes of our great civil war, when the greed of the protectionist, taking advantage of the most intense feeling of patriotism, and availing himself of a multitude of propitious circumstances, labored to place them as high as he thought the patience of the people would bear. Certainly now, after one hundred years of protection, many of these rates in our cotton schedule are higher than they ever were, unless possibly (though of that I am not sure) it was for a few years through that cunning and deceptive device of the minimum system under the tariffs of 1824 and 1828, when the agricultural population of our country, aroused by England's aggressions upon their interests through the hostile corn laws, sought by retaliatory laws to get even with that power.

But, Mr. President, in 1832, during the reaction against the tariff of "abominations" passed in 1828—a tariff which Henry Clay himself condemned, and the like of which with respect to its extreme rates he said in 1843, not foreseeing the favorable conditions of a gigantic civil war, we would never see again—this subtle and deceptive system of minima was measurably abandoned. Although this tariff of 1832 was intended as a rational system of liberal protection which its framers could abide by as a permanent adjustment of the tariff controversy, the rate of duties on cotton goods was fixed at 25 per cent. ad valorem, and the partial retention of the minimum system never carried any article in it over 42½ per cent., and thence down to 25 per cent. This is shown by the reduction of the specific to ad valorem rates, caused to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury after the passage of the compromise act, in order to the application of the biennial reductions to be made under the last-mentioned act. That was all the friends of high protection claimed in 1832, when the cotton industries might have justly made the claim of being "infant" industries, as being necessary for their permanent establishment and confirmed prosperity. As we all know, this duty of 25 per cent. under the act of 1832 was by successive diminutions reduced by the compromise act till in 1842 it was brought down to the low degree of 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Now, sir, it becomes interesting and instructive to inquire how cotton manufactures prospered under these rates of duty, which are indeed moderate as compared with those now existing under the act of 1883, and sought by this Senate substitute to be still further enlarged. Notwithstanding the comparatively moderate rates of duty under the act of 1832 and the reductions actually made or constantly impending under the act of 1833, the business of manufacturing cotton goods made reasonable progress during this period. Potter tells us in his "History of Massachusetts," that the Amoskeag Company began its operations on a large scale at Manchester, N. H., in 1835–'36, and that other mills were erected in 1838 and 1839. Earl, in his "History of Fall River," tells us that—

> From the panic of 1837, which affected every business center in the country, Fall River seems to have speedily recovered, since within a few years from that date nearly every mill in the place was enlarged, though no new one was built.

And at as early a date of the history of our cotton industry as 1833 Nathan Appleton, who was a large cotton manufacturer and a noted protectionist in his day, said on the floor of Congress with reference to that industry that at that early period coarse cottons could not have been imported from England if there had been no duty at all, and what is still more important to the present argument, that even on many grades of fine goods competition was little to be feared; and in regard to prints, the American goods were, quality for quality, as cheap as the English.

A general view of the progress of the cotton manufactures during this period of moderate and gradually decreasing duties from 1832 to 1842 may be had from Samuel Batchelder's "Report to the Boston Board of Trade," made in 1860, which, though it may not be perfectly accurate, still, having been made by a practical manufacturer and a protectionist, is sufficiently so to be very instructive. This report tells us that the spindles in Massachusetts increased from 340,000 in 1831 to 624,500 in 1840, being at the rate of 83 per cent. in nine years. It also appears that at this early date, and under these low rates of duties, we annually exported from 1838 to 1842 some $3,000,000 worth of cotton goods.

Then, sir, came the tariff of 1842, again intended by the full-fledged protectionists who framed it as a distinctively protective measure. Under this law, of course, the duties were considerably advanced beyond the low rates to which they had sunk under the act of 1833. If the cotton manufacturers could keep their heads above water under the compromise act from 1838 to 1842, as they evidently did, of course they could and did make large profits under the act of 1842. Let us now see what these duties were under this last-named law and how they compare with those now existing and the new ones now proposed. The general duty on cotton manufactures was fixed at 30 per cent. ad valorem, with an application of the minimum system to cotton cloths and cotton twist, yarn, and thread. But upon such twist, yarn, and thread a duty of 25 per cent. only was to be applied. I have not been able anywhere to see the duties then collected on cotton cloth, twist, and yarns reduced to a plain ad valorem rate, but I feel sure they fell far short of the 45, 49, 56, and 57 per cent. rates of the act of 1883 and the still higher rates sought to be imposed by this Senate substitute.

Notwithstanding the claims of high protectionists that the tariff of 1842 was the source of great prosperity to the country, yet the common sense of every man must tell him that a tariff which lasted only four years could not do much towards promoting the permanent prosperity of the country nor towards giving a vigorous and lasting impulse to our cotton manufactures. Especially could not this have been the case when we remember that the opposition to high protective duties was then growing and was sure to enter, as it did enter, into the Presidential contest of 1844, which was soon about to open, and which closed to the discomfiture of this doctrine; and in fact the statistics which Batchelder gives us show that the cotton spindles only increased at the rate of 31 per cent. in the half decade from 1840 to 1845, embracing three out of the four years during which the tariff of 1842 was in force, whilst in the half decade from 1845 to 1850, embracing some four years of the low tariff of 1846, when the duty on cotton goods was only 25 per cent., the number of these spindles increased at the rate of 58 per cent., showing that the natural rebound from the depression growing out of the prolonged and destructive panic of 1837 had more to do with the revival of business after 1842 than did the tariff act of that year, at any rate, so far as the cotton industry is concerned; for after the repeal of the high duties of the act of 1842 and the substitution of the low duties of 1846, the impulse the cotton manufactures had received in the previous four years was not only maintained but went forward at a largely accelerated pace.

But not only did this marked progress take place during the first years of the operation of the tariff of 1846 up to 1850, but it continued during the whole period of the existence of that tariff, and even after the duties were lowered under the tariff of 1857 and the low duty of 25 per cent. on cotton goods was brought down still further to 24 per cent.

It might as well be denied that George Washington lived and commanded our armies in the Revolution, as controverted that great prosperity prevailed and that labor received remunerative rewards in this country from 1847 to 1861, during the continuance of duties which were far lower than the most ardent tariff reformer would dream of now establishing. These facts Mr. Garfield expressly asserted in the year 1878 during a debate in the House of Representatives, and they are fully demonstrated by our census reports. With respect to the cotton trade during this period we have abundant evidence that it was exceptionally prosperous. All facts and testimony combine to prove that such was the case. Batchelder, in his report before alluded to, says that from 1845 to 1860 the cotton spindles in Massachusetts increased from 817,500 to 1,688,500, being an increase of 106 per cent. during the period of low duties. From 1840 to 1860, during which time very low duties on cotton prevailed for sixteen years out of the twenty, De Bow states that the cotton spindles in the whole United States increased from 2,112,000 to 5,236,000, being at the rate of 148 per cent.

The consumption of raw cotton in the United States during this period leads directly to the same general conclusions. From about 1845 to 1855 the consumption of raw cotton in this country about doubled. In the early years of the decade of 1840–'50, 300,000 bales were sufficient for the supply of our cotton mills. The annual demand in the years from 1850 to 1854 was for about 600,000 bales, and this increased in the five years immediately preceding the war to an annual consumption of about 800,000 bales. And one of the most significant facts, showing the great prosperity of our cotton manufacturers at this time, and the effects of low rates of duties in increasing exports, is this, that whilst the value of cotton goods exported under the high tariff of 1842 rarely exceeded $4,000,000, under the low tariff of 1846 and 1857 it reached in 1860 the very large sum of $11,000,000. The advocates of the high protective tariffs since 1862 have no reason to congratulate themselves that after twenty-five years of very high protection our exports of cotton goods in 1887 amounted to not quite $15,000,000.

Sir, it is useless to revive the old controversy as to how much of the great prosperity of our country from 1850 to 1860 resulted from the low duties then prevailing. That prosperity pervaded all branches of business and enterprise. It was evidenced by our largely increased imports and exports. After making every allowance for assumed but unproved errors in the various census reports, it can not be denied that our agricultural population then prospered as they never prospered before or since; that our manufactures increased in at least as large a ratio as they have ever done in the same length of time; that our shipping was never more numerous and never more profitably employed, and that our trade and commerce never increased in a larger ratio. In the midst of the many streams ever tributary to the mighty tide of a nation's greatness, it would be simply folly for any advocate of low-tariff duties to contend that an approximation to free trade was the magic wand that of itself conjured up all this mighty flow of national prosperity. It did no such thing. But the fact that all this wondrous growth was concurrent with the lowest tariffs we have had since 1816, shows with absolute conclusiveness that high duties are not necessary to, and that low duties are perfectly consistent with, the most solid and the most rapid national progress. And nothing can more thoroughly demonstrate the absolute unfairness, unreasonableness, and effrontery of the claim we so often hear set up, both here and elsewhere, that our high tariffs have been the prolific parent of all our progress and prosperity since the war.

Never before have so many mighty causes combined to produce mighty results; never before has human invention done more to aid in the accumulation of wealth. It has been the great era of the most transforming, vitalizing, energizing agencies ever introduced into human affairs. It has been especially the era of railroad building. Since the war immigration has brought to this country enough strong arms and busy brains to people and redeem from the wilderness eight great States, each equal almost to Wisconsin. Many, many have been the agencies contributing to our greatness during the last twenty-five years. To ascribe it all to high protective duties, as some of the especial recipients of their choicest blessings are apt to do, is just about as reasonable as it would be for one of those orators to claim that all of his strength, like Samson's, lies in his hair. If any generalization can be drawn from our industrial history beyond the one just noted, to wit, that great national prosperity is consistent with low tariffs as well as high, it is this, that comparatively low tariffs cause these great accumulations of wealth to be distributed uniformly among all classes of men and all branches of industry, whilst the high prohibitory tariffs tax the great masses of the people mainly for the benefit of the capitalists, and drain the country of its wealth to aggregate it into a few States and into a few hands in those States.

In 1860 a movement was made towards a higher rate of duties. The professed object of that bill, as avowed by its author, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], was simply to restore the rates of the tariff of 1846. But it went much further and became more distinctly protective. It is a most significant circumstance that after a trial of low rates of duty, especially on cotton goods, for fifteen years, most of the manufacturing States took little or no interest in this movement towards higher rates. They had accommodated themselves to this low rate of duties, and preferred them with stability "to excessive protection, which stimulates alike ruinous and irresponsible competition at home." Such was the language of Mr. Rice, then a member of Congress from Massachusetts, who distinctly added that "the manufacturer asks no additional protection." And Mr. SHERMAN said, in 1860, on the floor of the House, that—

> When Mr. Stanton says the manufacturers are urging this bill he says what he must certainly know is not correct. The manufacturers have asked over and over again to be let alone.

This bill was passed in the House in 1860, but did not pass the Senate and become a law till 1861. At a subsequent date Mr. MORRILL, who has given his name to this bill, stated that "it was not asked for and but coldly welcomed by manufacturers, who always and justly fear instability." The war had not then come, and by offering an opportunity to attain to excessive rates, and what is more, to give them permanency, had not excited the cupidity of the manufacturers. But as soon as they learned that these things were possible under the cover of patriotism and devotion to the Union they began to clamor for higher duties, and their cry has ever been since, and is now, for higher and still higher rates, and it now seems that they will never have any stopping-place short of the exhaustion of human patience and ability to bear their burdens.

As we have seen, sir, in 1861 they only asked to be let alone, and only submissively accepted the increased duties then imposed in their behalf. But when their superserviceable friends were bestowing upon the cotton manufacturers favors for which they did not ask, the question is, to what extent did these leaders and masters in the art of taxing their fellow-countrymen for their own benefit, called high protection, think it necessary to add to the 24 per cent. yielded by the act of 1857 to the cotton industry? They only imposed upon cotton goods generally duties ranging from 25 to 30 per cent., whilst they fixed the rates upon cotton cloths at from 1 cent up to 4 cents per yard if unbleached, and if bleached an additional sum of one-half of 1 cent per yard, and if printed, painted, colored, or stained, an addition of 10 per cent. I can not with accuracy state, but I do not believe, that the highest duty on cotton goods under this act could have reached 40 per cent., and then only upon a few articles. After an experience of seventy years in laying duties upon cotton goods it was the deliberate judgment of adepts in the mysteries of protection that about 30 per cent. ad valorem was all the protection the great bulk of the cotton industry of this country required to secure fair wages to workmen and fair returns to capital.

And now, sir, I ask, if from 25 to 40 per cent. protection was enough, in the opinion of ardent protectionists, to sustain our cotton industries in 1832, when they could with some reason claim to be infants, what is the necessity for 40, 50, 60, and 65 per cent. now in 1889, when they have advanced to the hoary age of one hundred years? If greatly less rates were deemed in 1842, by able and experienced statesmen and practical business men aiming at full protection, to be sufficient aid to cotton manufacturers to insure the successful prosecution of their business, what can be the necessity forty-six years later to grant them a larger amount of aid? And when so late as 1861 even less was asked for than in 1832 and in 1842, the tax-payers and consumers of this country have a right to demand a full and satisfactory explanation why it is that our manufacturers are constantly clamoring for more and more help. Can it be, sir, in direct opposition to the doctrine upon which aid was so long sought and granted, that the older these industries become the weaker they grow? Can it be that this boasted high protection has reared up a monster the like of which has never been before seen on land or in the sea, whose appetite increases with its indulgence, and whose capacity increases the more it consumes?

We now come, sir, to the tariff acts of 1862 and 1864. The duties upon imports were largely increased by these acts, but it was clearly stated by leading men in Congress that this increase was made in order to offset the internal taxes imposed upon manufactured goods either just before or concurrently with these acts. Mr. MORRILL said, when introducing the act of 1862:

> It will be necessary for us to revise the tariff on foreign imports, so far as it may be seriously disturbed by any internal duties, and to make proper reparation. If we bleed the manufacturers we must see to it that the proper tonic is administered at the same time.

Mr. Thaddeus Stevens also said, about the same time:

> We intended to impose an additional duty on imports equal to the tax which had been put on domestic articles. It was done by way of reparation.

Mr. MORRILL again stated, in introducing the tariff bill of 1864, as he had done in 1862, that—

> The passage of this tariff act was rendered necessary in order to put domestic producers in the same situation, so far as foreign competition was concerned, as if the internal taxes had not been raised.

This was the purpose of increasing these duties, commonly understood and declared in Congress at the time, and commonly understood and declared since by leading men of the Republican party. Time would fail me to quote the many declarations of like tenor. Notably, the senior Senators from Vermont, Ohio, and Iowa, among many other actors in those memorable scenes, have plainly declared that with the removal of the internal taxes imposed upon manufactures in 1862 and 1864 good faith required that the corresponding compensatory duties imposed by the tariff acts of those years should also be taken off.

Mr. MORRILL said, in 1870, that—

> Whatever percentage of duties was imposed on foreign goods to cover internal taxation on home manufactures should not now be claimed as the lawful prize of protection when such taxes have been repealed. There is no longer an equivalent.

Mr. SHERMAN said, in 1872, that—

> If the present high rate of duties, unexampled in our country and higher by nearly 50 per cent. than they were in 1861, are maintained on metallic and textile fabrics, after we have repealed the very internal taxes which gave rise to them, we shall have a feeling of dissatisfaction in the country that will overthrow the whole system.

Mr. ALLISON said that—

> If no gentleman does so before me, I shall move that the pending bill be recommitted to the committee, with instructions to report a reduction upon existing rates of duty of 20 per cent., and even this—> will not be a full equivalent for the removal of all internal taxes upon manufactures.

He said—

Well, these internal taxes were all removed in the years from 1866 to 1872. But in few instances indeed have these temporary duties, levied for a temporary purpose, with no pretense that they were necessary for permanent protection, been removed or in any appreciable extent modified in obedience to pledges in the beginning made and by the prime leaders of the Republican party over and over again since reiterated and publicly proclaimed. It is not mainly my purpose now to show that in honor, sound morals, and good faith the leaders of the Republican party are bound to see that these excrescences upon our protective system should, in obedience to solemn pledges, be removed; doubtless they would have done so if the powerful influence of the various combined interests feeding upon governmental favor had not dominated their minds and made them chary of provoking dangerous antagonisms. But my chief purpose in referring to the history of the raising of tariff duties in 1862 and 1864 is to show that no one then either conceived or expressed the idea that an increase of duties beyond the tariff of 1861 would have been necessary for the protection of our cotton or other industries under the normal conditions of peaceful trade, or was for any other cause demanded than by the extremely abnormal conditions of large internal taxes imposed as a war necessity upon all manufactured goods.

It was a practical concession by the party then overwhelmingly in power, more forcible than any words, that the 30 per cent. ad valorem imposed by the tariff of 1861 was a reasonable and just measure of protection to cotton goods in the years 1862 and 1864. And the burden is now upon our Republican friends to show what wonderful changes of circumstances have occurred during the last quarter of a century to reverse their old party shibboleth, that higher duties are required to foster infant industries, and the older they grow the better able they are to sustain themselves. That was the doctrine of Henry Clay, and it is the doctrine of common sense. But common sense seems to be a discarded quantity in this tariff debate, when we hear it contended that the foreign manufacturer pays the duties collected at the custom-houses in this country, and when we also hear it constantly said that our high war duties make goods lower in price, and when under that illusory cry our manufacturers have for twenty-five years been seeking, and often successfully, to have them made still higher, in order, I suppose, that goods may be made still lower; the plain logic of which position is, that the higher you can raise duties the lower the prices will be. This is an exceedingly safe proposition for the manufacturer, but surely any consumer who accepts it has bidden adieu to the last remnant of common sense.

Again, Mr. President, in 1872, in a lame and halting fashion, our Republican friends undertook to redeem their pledges of 1862 and 1864, to make a compensatory reduction of war duties, as an equivalent for the internal taxes already removed from manufactures. This was done as an act of justice to the tax-payer, with no counter-claim, so far as I know, that such a lessening of the rate of duties would injure the manufacturer. Here we have a full concession in 1872 that a 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon cotton, as well as upon many other goods, would leave such duties high enough for abundant protection. And when, in 1875, these duties were put back to their old war level, it was not claimed to have been done from any necessity of increased protection to our industries, but simply because the business crisis in the country had lessened the Treasury receipts, and it was necessary, they said, to increase the duties in order to increase the revenue. The good faith of this claim is very much shaken by the fact that when in after years, in one of the Morrison tariff bills, it was proposed to make a similar reduction of duties, a great outcry was raised that such a reduction would flood the Treasury with a still more redundant revenue. A singular institution, indeed, is a high protective tariff, which brings about precisely opposite results, according as it is worked by Republican or Democratic hands. We are much inclined to the belief, when the manufacturers saw in 1874 the House of Representatives with a large Democratic majority, they demanded of the outgoing Congress, and obtained just before its dissolution, a repeal of the act of 1872, hoping thus, as they have ever since done, to keep up all their duties to the old war rates by keeping their hold on one or more of the other branches of the Government, and thus indefinitely retaining the power to enrich themselves.

We now come, sir, to the last revision of the tariff, in 1883. If other tariffs were indirectly constructed through the influence of the manufacturers' lobby, this was the work of the lobby itself, so far as it conformed, as it largely did, to the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, which was composed almost entirely of manufacturers themselves. And so far as it was not the handiwork of that commission, it seems to have resulted from the labors of a secret conclave of high protectionists, called a conference committee, whose office for once seemed not to be to reconcile differences between the two Houses, but to adopt rates higher than either House had shown a willingness to accept, and which were in direct antagonism to that public demand for tariff reform out of which that commission sprung. They lowered the duties on coarse cottons, it is true, which, as we have seen, had required no protection since 1833, still taking care to leave a duty high enough, if occasion should serve, behind it to raise up a richly paying trust.

But on many other cotton goods, such as hosiery, embroideries, laces, trimmings, etc., they had the hardihood to raise the duties from 35 to 40 per cent. ad valorem, being higher duties than the protectionist statesmen and hungry manufacturers in 1832 and 1842 dared to ask for such interests when they could without shame claim to be infants, and higher than the manufacturers or their most zealous friends demanded in 1862 or 1864, when raw cotton and its manufactured products were both subject to Federal taxation which had been before 1883 removed. It is simply incredible that such an increase in the rates on cotton goods in 1883 could have been honestly asked for and granted. It was but another turn in the protection screw to enable its workers to press still larger profits out of the people.

But it is now, sir, in this the hundredth year of the existence of this so-called protective system, that the acme of the cotton-manufacturing rapacity and of a great party's subservience to class greed has been reached. It has taken the cotton manufacturers and their wise statesmen one hundred years to find out that certain classes of cotton goods can not be manufactured in this country without according them protection to the extent of 5, 10, 15, and 20 per cent. higher than manufacturers, tariff commissions composed of manufacturers, high-tariff statesmen of great ability and the fullest means of knowledge, in 1862, in 1864, and in 1883 ever dreamed of demanding or even of suggesting under all the combined adverse circumstances of our great civil war, or under all the false light which a tariff commission, composed of their especial friends, with endless pages of ex parte testimony, taken to make out the best case possible, could throw upon their needs.

It is needless to repeat that the disparity is vastly greater between the cotton rates sought to be imposed by this bill and those deemed by wise statesmen and ardent friends of protection to be ample encouragement to our cotton industries under the distinctively protective tariff bills of 1832, 1842, and 1861. And this is sought to be done, too, in the face of the fact that as far back as 1833, fifty-five years ago, distinguished manufacturers and protectionist statesmen informed us that plain cotton goods then needed no protection whatever, and that even then our manufacturers could successively compete with foreigners in the production of the finer grades of such goods.

To my mind, sir, this proposed cotton schedule is a remarkable legislative curiosity. General Harrison, in his letter of acceptance, striving to be sententious and epigrammatic, stated that the Democrats, in their effort to construct a bill to reform the tariff and reduce taxation, were more concerned about maxims than markets, and that the Republicans were looking more to principles than schedules. I concede that our Republican friends are diligent to a degree in studying to secure to the controlling spirits of their party a monopoly of the American market, at whatever cost to the masses of the American people. But it is equally true that, above all men who have ever studied the profound mystery of contriving and perfecting monopolies, far beyond all old English Tories, and all modern French or German tariff schemers, our Republican statesmen, under the lead of the manufacturing generals, can beat the world in the art of constructing schedules. If any proof of this assertion were needed this cotton schedule would suffice.

It is a legislative labyrinth, in the construction of which the genius of monopoly has run riot. New classifications—the favorite scheme whereby the manufacturer is ever seeking to steal the march on the people—are freely introduced. And more and more is the skill of the microscopist required to decipher the number of threads in a square inch of a piece of cotton cloth. Not only has the minimum system been embalmed in this work of art, but the minimum system drawn out fine to the highest degree. Thus, cotton yarns valued at 25 cents per pound are to be considered worth 40 cents for the purpose of taxation, and are each taxed 18 cents, which would be on the higher price of 40 cents at the rate of 45 per cent., and at the lower price of 25 cents at the rate of 72 per cent. And this kind of classification is further made to work this harsh and unjust result, that a pound of cotton yarn worth 24½ cents would only pay 10 cents per pound duty, whilst a pound worth 25½ cents would be made to pay 18 cents, 1 cent difference in the price calling for 8 cents more in the duty. Plainly here lies hid a scheme whereby some people's purses will be richly filled.

Still further, sir, what is the need of the change in the method of laying duties on Hamburg edgings, embroideries, etc., from 40 per cent. ad valorem to 45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem, and on plushes, velvets, etc., from 40 per cent. ad valorem to 10 cents per square yard and 20 per cent. ad valorem? I would be willing to lay a wager that either a fall in the general prices of one or both of those kinds of goods has occurred or is surely looked for. Thus a substitution of specific in part for ad valorem duties would enable our manufacturers to turn what they no doubt think is an honest penny, but what others might think is playing with loaded dice.

Mr. President, if the cotton manufacturers of the country were to come here and all make solemn oath that it was necessary, in order to make their business pay a reasonable profit, to increase the duties on cotton goods, as is done in this schedule, I might, after a searching cross-examination, if their testimony were not shaken, be induced to quit the fight with the single remark that the cotton manufacture of this country was a mystery I could never hope to solve. But I am not prepared, as the Senator from Rhode Island the other day said the Finance Committee did in the case of steel beams, to receive the one-sided, interested statement of a maker of steel beams or of any other kind of goods and make that the basis of taxing the people of this country, or rather of granting to that steel-beam maker or other manufacturer and his confederates the power of imposing heavy burdens upon the people almost ad libitum.

Mr. President, as the matter now stands I can never be made to believe, in the light of the industrial history of this country, that it is in any sense requisite, in order to secure reasonable profits to the cotton manufacturers, again to raise the duties beyond war rates; on cotton yarns to the extent of 8, 7, and 5 per cent.; on cotton cloths, including from one hundred and fifty to two hundred threads to the square inch, to the extent of 9, 7, and 5 per cent.; on other cloths over two hundred threads to the square inch to the extent of 7, 6, and 5 per cent.; on other cloths 5 per cent.; and to make other changes, the plain object of which is to increase the burdens of the people and the profits of the manufacturers. In the light of the fact that as far back as 1833 we could and did make as cheap cotton goods of the plainer kinds in this country as they did in England, and had succeeded in making cotton prints and many of the finer classes of cotton goods as cheaply and as good as could be made abroad, I must hold it to be demonstrated that now, fifty-six years later, with all our justly boasted inventiveness and superb mechanical skill, we should rather reduce than increase the duties on all cotton goods.

And now, Mr. President, we are told that this Senate tariff bill, which had not even been read in the Senate before our adjournment, which had only been discussed in a very general way without any attempt at an analysis of its provisions, which doubtless were not understood by fifty members of both Houses of Congress at the time of that adjournment, and which not one in five hundred of American voters knew anything about on election day, and which the chairman of the Finance Committee gave notice before such adjournment would be amended in many unspecified particulars, was pronounced upon by the people at the late election, and that we Democrats are kicking against the pricks in daring to discuss the details of the measure. The mere statement of such a proposition carries with it its own refutation. But it is only the beginning of the objections to this extraordinary position.

Such an argument, sir, comes with a bad grace from those who exhausted the resources of able minds through almost the whole of one of our longest sessions of Congress in devising side issues by which the minds of the people could be diverted from this main question of excessive tariff rates, and could be driven to vote under the impulse of sectional or race or war passions and prejudices. Never before in any political contest in this land were more bitter, constant, and unfair efforts made to substitute a reign of passion in the place of that calm discussion due to a great economic issue. The presentation by the President of a treaty with Great Britain, looking to a settlement of our fishery troubles with Canada, was made the occasion for brushing aside in a summary fashion, under caucus dictation and against the counsels of some of their oldest and most accomplished statesmen, the ancient and uniform practice of the Senate to consider treaties in secret sessions; and our doors were thrown open for the making of fiery ad captandum speeches to stir the New England heart and to lure to their standard Irish-Americans whose minds could be deluded by their sophistries, and whose bitterness could be stirred up afresh against England by their appeals. Much was heard of this outcry during the late canvass; and from their clamors one would have supposed they were hungering and thirsting for retaliation. The election is over and our friends are as quiet on these exciting topics as cooing doves.

And oh, how much was then heard of the Jackson outbreak and the Washington County riots! And how grave Senators, striving to act the part of Marc Antony holding up the gory mantle of Cæsar to arouse the fury of a Roman populace, bore aloft in this Chamber and elsewhere the bloody shirts of the negroes then and there killed, to induce the Northern people to believe that the Southern people are lawless cut-throats, and must be suppressed by voting against a Democratic President! How little note was then given to these facts, that during the last four years, in that whole vast Southern country, among many millions of people, where the whites and blacks are living together under conditions of race antagonism which Northern policy has created and is constantly intensifying, and which render it marvelous that such conflicts do not more frequently occur, partisan ingenuity and industry could only rake up two collisions between the races out of which party rancor could make capital; and that each of them began by the killing of a white man, and in one instance at least by his brutal murder.

And how unfairly and unkindly was this waving of the bloody shirt supplemented by the unreasoning and unmanly attacks upon as honorable men, as wise statesmen, and as patriotic citizens as breathe our American air, because having been Confederate soldiers and living south of Mason and Dixon's line, they dared to cross that line to discuss before Northern audiences the great economic question of the day. You who made this outcry knew full well that it had no bearing on the merits of the great question at issue. You knew then and you know now that these men are your equals before God and before the world, in all that goes to constitute true manhood. But you knew you could thus safely appeal to sectional and war passions and prejudices, and thereby win a multitude of votes. You played your card and you won your trick. But pray do not now insult the intelligence of the country by claiming that such a result thus obtained is the settlement of a momentous question like that involved in higher than war taxes in times of peace, which will aid, and, we have just reason to believe, are intended to aid trusts and combines to plunder the people. No, sir, the Democratic party will again and again appeal from such transparent deceptions to the reason and enlightened self-interest of the masses of the people.

It is true, sir, that the contest lately ended has taught us that we have no slight task before us. We are not in the least appalled by the mere result of the voting at that election. Democrats, whose party has so often arisen stronger than ever from defeat, can not be made despondent from this cause, when the change of a little over 7,000 votes in New York would have made Grover Cleveland President the second time. But our opponents have shown themselves powerful in an element of strength which they can always command far beyond our ability. They have shown how fertile they are in money resources, and that they have the men who know how and will not hesitate to use them. I must confess, Mr. President, that this is a subject which must be inexpressibly painful to every right-minded American citizen, and one which I should have hesitated to introduce before the world in this high forum. But the evil is such a notorious one that the public press teems with it, and this debate has abounded in allusions to it. I will therefore say a word upon the subject, in so far as it may be considered as one of the many side influences which controlled the late election.

The Democratic party, sir, has no political nurslings which it has built up and into whose coffers it has by its legislation thrown vast wealth, and from whom it can recoup large sums of money in the hour of its political need to aid in turning the tide of political battles. But you can not cast your eye over our land but it will fall upon vast and powerful corporations whose life was drawn from the Republican party, and which are continually looking to that party for protection and sustentation. That party, too, by granting unstinted support, which now, as ever, it is ready to increase, to our great manufacturing enterprises have built up mighty interests with vast aggregations of wealth, many of them making millions in the way of profit per annum, and ever looking to that party for further aid in their efforts to increase their gains. And as Front de Bœuf was prepared to roast old Isaac of York over a slow fire to make him disgorge a portion of his wealth, so our manufacturers, if need be, are threatened with having the fat fried out of them if they do not provide for the Republican party the sinews of war.

But in the nature of things, whenever any party, in the interest of the masses of the people, threatens to dry up any sources of the gains of these people which are deemed to be too great, it is not likely that much threatening is needed from their political allies, and they stand ready to liberally pour out their money as a simple business investment to help to sustain the party which sustains them. Thus corruption becomes organized, and in fact a part of the business scheme of very many of the business men of the country. And thus the Republican party will ever be ready, so long as the present condition of things lasts, to raise every dollar they want, not only for legitimate but for other kinds of expense. No party which relies simply upon the voluntary subscriptions of its members, unprompted by controlling business interests, can compete with the Republican party in raising corruption funds. And although I am ashamed to say that I doubt not the Democrats raised and spent all they could in November last, it does not stand to reason that in any State, more especially in a close manufacturing State like Connecticut, could they have met their opponents upon anything like equal terms in this respect.

The Republican party had the men from whom the money could be raised; these men not only had an unstinted ability to raise it, but every incentive to pour it out, and upon every principle of human nature we may rest assured that the resources of the Republican party were unbounded. And the arguments thus used, I shrewdly suspect, gained more recruits to ultra protection than the ponderous logic of their campaign orators, though not so many as their fiery appeals, the country over, to sectional and race prejudices.

But, sir, in spite of every obstacle of sectional, race, and war passions, in spite of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation to be used in riveting their burdens upon them, the battle will go on, and sooner or later tariff reform will commend itself to the good sense, the common fairness, the sense of justice, and the enlightened self-interest of the masses of the American people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], which will be again read.

The SECRETARY. In line 1320, paragraph 323, it is proposed to strike out, after the word "forty," the words "five cents per pound and fifteen;" so as to read:

323. On goods heretofore known commercially as Hamburg edgings, embroideries, or insertings, and as Egyptian and Oriental laces, composed of cotton, and stitched or otherwise wrought by machines worked by hand or other power, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary called the roll, but before the result was announced,

Mr. ALLISON said: The Senator from North Carolina having thoroughly tested the sense of the Senate on this amendment, perhaps he would consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I am the best-natured man in the body. I set up for that, anyhow. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent, the roll-call having been concluded, to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, pending which the Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I will wait until after the vote is taken on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California;

A bill (H. R. 1959) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia; and

A bill (H. R. 5009) to provide certain arms, ammunition, and equipage to the State of Oregon, for the militia thereof.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land claim in that Territory known as Polvaredo grant, No. 131; and a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a supplemental report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the foregoing private land claim; which were referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSIONS TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committeee on Rules I ask that the thirty-third rule of the Senate, providing who shall be admitted to the privileges of the floor, may be amended, by unanimous consent, by inserting, after the words "the President of the United States, and his private secretary," the words "the President-elect and the Vice-President-elect of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the thirty-third rule of the Senate may be amended by the insertion of the words which he has recited, and which will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. "The President-elect and the Vice-President-elect of the United States."

Mr. VANCE. Let us have the whole rule read, so that we may see the context.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule will be read.

The SECRETARY. The rule, if amended as proposed, will read:

RULE XXXIII.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

1. No person shall be admitted to the floor of the Senate while in session, except as follows:
The officers of the Senate.
Members of the House of Representatives. The Sergeant-at-Arms, and the Clerk of the House.
The President of the United States, and his private secretary.
The President-elect and the Vice-President-elect of the United States.
The heads of Departments.
The Commissioner of Agriculture.
Ministers of the United States.
Foreign ministers.
Ex-Presidents and ex-Vice-Presidents of the United States.
Ex-Senators and Senators-elect.
Judges of the Supreme Court.
Governors of States and Territories.
General of the Army.
Admiral of the Navy.
The commissioners of the District of Columbia.
Members of national legislatures of foreign countries.
Private secretaries of Senators, duly appointed in writing; and the Librarian of Congress, and the assistant librarian in charge of the law library.
Hon. George Bancroft.
Judges of the Court of Claims.
The Architect of the Capitol.
The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.
2. No person shall be admitted to the floor——

Mr. VANCE. I do not ask for the reading of any more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the proposed amendment to the rule will be regarded as agreed to by unanimous consent.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 5, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 4th day of January, 1889.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Leslie Cullom, of Tennessee, to be collector of customs for the district of Puget Sound, in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington, to succeed Quincy A. Brooks, removed.

NOMINATION WITHDRAWN.

To the Senate of the United States:

I withdraw the nomination, which was sent to the Senate on December 17, 1888, of Leon O. Bailey, to be attorney of the United States for the district of Indiana.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 3, 1889.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER.

T. Carlos Jewett, of Litchfield, Minn., to be a commissioner in and for the district of Alaska, to reside at Sitka, vice John G. Brady, whose term expired December 19, 1888.

POSTMASTERS.

Robert S. Adkins, to be postmaster at Kansas City, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri, in the place of George M. Shelley, removed.

Francis A. Dowden, to be postmaster at Babylon, in the county of Suffolk and State of New York, in the place of A. Ellis Hopkins, whose commission expired December 19, 1888.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 4, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ASSESSMENT OF DISTRICT REAL ESTATE FOR TAXATION.

Mr. HEARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11957) to amend an act entitled "An act to levy an assessment on real estate in the District of Columbia for the purpose of taxation;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF BARVI'S REPORT ON IRRIGATION IN EGYPT.

Mr. GEAR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House and Senate 3,000 copies of Maj. A. M. Miller's translation of Barvi's report on irrigation in Egypt.

CHICAGO CUSTOM-HOUSE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate by the Supervising Architect of an appropriation for clock dial and apparatus in the towers of the custom-house and subtreasury at Chicago, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF FISHING VESSELS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with an inclosure, in response to a resolution of the House, calling for information relative to the relief, by the Revenue-Cutter and Life-Saving Services, of American whaling and fishing vessels in Behring's Sea and the Arctic Ocean.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution on that subject was referred originally to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, but it relates to the Life-Saving Service, and I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. It will be so referred.

EMMA BIDDLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3628) granting an increase of pension to Emma Biddle; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORT ON TRUSTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the House concurrent resolution of September 21, 1888, providing for printing 5,000 copies of the report of the House Committee on Manufactures in relation to the sugar trust and the Standard Oil trust, with the amendments of the Senate thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PHELAN, for three days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. NEAL, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE, for the remainder of this week, on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a resolution ordering the printing of the usual number and 3,000 additional copies of the final report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the recent changes in the relative values of precious metals, and the minutes of evidence and appendices presented to both houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It also announced the passage of a bill (S. 870) to provide for the retirement of a certain class of officers in the United States Navy; in which concurrence was requested.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was received, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

It was also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles on the dates indicated:

On December 22, 1888:

An act (H. R. 11878) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

On December 24, 1888:

An act (H. R. 2579) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Andrew J. Smith, late colonel of the Seventh United States Cavalry and a major-general of volunteers.

An act (H. R. 6922) for the relief of George W. Graham.

On January 1, 1889:

An act (H. R. 7843) granting to Citrous Water Company right of way across Papago Indian reservation, in Maricopa County, Arizona.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. ROGERS, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill

(H. R. 5349) for the relief of James Trabue, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callahan, and the widow of John Waters; and it was laid on the Speaker's table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5751) for the relief of Margaret M. Hatch;

A bill (H. R. 10769) granting a pension to John M. Krunk.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Ship Canal Company of Nicaragua; and in order to expedite business and avoid conflict, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole be agreed to in gross, and that the amendments as to which an agreement was had to take a yea-and-nay vote be also agreed to in gross, and that the bill so amended be passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole be voted upon in gross, and that all amendments upon which there is controversy be also agreed to in gross.

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I object. The amendment ought to be voted on separately.

Mr. DUNN. In order to avoid a conflict to-day about the order of business I have asked unanimous consent to agree to each one of the amendments.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If they be voted on separately I have no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Then I ask unanimous consent to agree to them one at a time.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is right. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House. The Chair understands the request of the gentleman from Arkansas now to be that the amendments be voted on separately.

Mr. BLAND. I think we had better have a yea-and-nay vote on the amendments. This bill will go to the Senate, where, I apprehend, all these amendments will be stricken off; and this House will be asked to pass the bill in that shape. It is therefore well that members of the House should now go upon record on these amendments.

Mr. DUNN. The amendments never can be stricken off without the consent of this House.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have a yea-and-nay vote on the amendments.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that all the amendments be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has directed the reading of the amendments, and the Clerk is getting them arranged.

Mr. DUNN. I understood unanimous consent was given to my first proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair first understood the gentleman's request to be that the amendments be voted upon in gross; but upon learning the mistake, the Chair corrected it. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] now insists upon having a separate vote. The Clerk will read the amendments.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] can have a yea-and-nay vote, provided he can get a sufficient number of members of the House to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAND. There were certain amendments upon which it was agreed there should be a yea-and-nay vote in the House, and as to those amendments I shall insist on the agreement.

The SPEAKER. The agreement made in Committee of the Whole does not bind the House. The yeas and nays are never taken except by unanimous consent given in the House, or upon being ordered in the manner prescribed by the Constitution. The Clerk will read the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BAYNE:

In line 42, section 1, insert, just before the word "value," the words "fair and reasonable."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN. In order to facilitate business, I ask that as each amendment be read it be agreed to, unless there be objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas requests that as each amendment be read it be considered as agreed to unless a vote be demanded.

Mr. BLAND. I shall demand a yea-and-nay vote in accordance with the agreement.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The next amendment, proposed by Mr. HOLMAN, was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the first section:

"Provided, however, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to commit the United States to any liability whatever for or on account of said company, nor shall the United States be held in any wise liable or responsible in any form or by any implication for any debt or liability in any form which said company may incur, nor be held as guarantying any engagement or contract of said company, or as having assumed by virtue of this act, or otherwise, any responsibility for the acts or proceedings of said company in any foreign country, or contracts or engagements entered into in the United States. And this proviso shall be printed on every bond, contract, certificate of stock, or other obligation issued by said company."

Mr. HOLMAN. It was agreed in Committee of the Whole that on this amendment the yeas and nays should be taken. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. OATES. Was not that one of the amendments upon which, by agreement in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, a vote by the yeas and nays in the House was to be had?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing about the agreement in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The House knows nothing at all about that. Twenty-six have voted in the affirmative on ordering the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Count the other side.

The other side was counted; and there were 58 in the negative.

So (more than one-fifth having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BREWER. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 135, nays 36, not voting 152; as follows:

Mr. SENEY with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, for ten days from to-day.

Mr. BREWER. I notice I am paired with my colleague [Mr. TARSNEY], and therefore will withdraw my vote.

Mr. BAYNE. The pair announced of my colleague [Mr. DALZELL] did not state which way he would vote. If present, he would vote for the bill and vote to free it from all unnecessary incumbrances.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. MAISH, for the day, to attend the funeral of a friend.
To Mr. DARGAN, until Tuesday, January 8.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the following amendment, submitted by Mr. PAYSON:

Add to section 2: "All bonds, stocks, and certificates issued for or as part of the capital of the company shall be issued at the principal office in the city of New York."

And add to the above amendment the following:

"All shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities of this company shall be disposed of only for cash, to be paid into the company treasury and used for corporate purposes: Provided, That this shall not apply to bonds or securities issued under article 50 of the concession of Nicaragua to the canal association."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DUNN. There is no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the following amendment, moved by Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota:

After section 2 add the following words:

"SEC. 3. That no certificate for stock shall be issued till at least 10 per cent. of the same shall be fully paid for in money at the par value of said stock, and the money deposited in the treasury of said company, and said stock so subscribed shall not be assignable until the whole of the same shall be so paid in, and no payment on account of the capital of said company shall be made except in money, and said company is hereby prohibited from returning or repaying any part of the money so paid. No bonds in excess of the amount of capital paid and received shall be authorized or issued until such paid capital shall amount to the sum of $5,000,000. No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders, or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Every person violating or aiding in the violation of the foregoing provisions shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 73.

So (more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 75, not voting 146; as follows:

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. JONES with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, on all political questions until further notice.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. LANHAM, was read, as follows:

In line 11, section 3, after the word "company," insert "who shall also be citizens and residents of the United States."

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the vote is taken on that amendment I desire to ask that it be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. A substitute was adopted for that amendment by striking out "a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States," and inserting "the directors shall be citizens of the United States or of Nicaragua."

The SPEAKER. There is such an amendment as the gentleman from Indiana suggests.

Mr. LANHAM. The amendment which has just been read, offered by myself, has reference to the vice-president and other officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah! that is different from what I supposed.

The amendment of Mr. LANHAM was adopted.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. HOLMAN, was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 4 and 5, section 3, "and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States," and insert "the directors shall be citizens of the United States or of Nicaragua, and a majority of such directors shall be citizens and residents of the United States."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. MACDONALD, was read, as follows:

Add to section 4 the following:

"Provided, That no change of concessions heretofore or hereafter granted by the Nicaraguan and Costa Rica Governments for or in behalf of the construction of said canal which in any manner affects the rights of American citizens to the use of said canal, or which affects the right of the Government of the United States to have a voice in the governmental control of the use of same, shall be made until the consent of the Government of the United States to such change shall have been first given thereto."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MACDONALD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. BLAND, was read, as follows:

Add to section 5:

"And nothing herein shall be construed to estop this Government from asserting at any time any rights or powers that may now exist by virtue of the laws of nations or that may be acquired through treaty stipulations with respect to the right of transportation of the citizens of the United States or their property over this canal or the country through which the same may be constructed, or to transport troops or munitions of war in time of peace or war."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. CULBERSON, was read, as follows:

Add at the end of section 5 the following:

"And nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided for in this act."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. BAKER, of New York, was read as follows:

Add as new section:

"Said company shall make a report on the first Monday of December in each year to the Secretary of the Interior, which shall be duly verified by the president and secretary thereof, giving such detailed statement of its affairs and of its assets and liabilities as may be required by the Secretary of the Interior, and any false statement so made shall be deemed perjury and punishable as such. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to require such annual statement and to prescribe the form thereof and the particulars to be given thereby."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 51, noes 16.

So the amendment was adopted.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. MAISH, was read, as follows:

Add to section 6:

"Provided, That the construction of said ship-canal shall be commenced in good faith within three years."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. BLAND, was read, as follows:

Add to section 6:

"Congress hereby reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, and to regulate the toll or tariff rates for the transportation of persons or property by this company or its assigns."

Mr. BLAND. That is one of the amendments upon which by agreement in committee a yea-and-nay vote was to be had in the House. According to that understanding I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and 31 members rose in favor thereof—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. BLAND. Count the other side. No time will be saved by refusing this demand.

Those opposed to ordering the yeas and nays were 62.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the total vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 81, not voting 161; as follows:

YEAS—82.

Dalzell,	Jackson,	Randall,

So the amendment was adopted.

On motion of Mr. NELSON, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. DARGAN with Mr. SYMES, on all political questions, until further notice.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], which was rejected in the Committee of the Whole, but on which it was agreed a vote should be taken in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "act," line 41, page 3, to the word "may," in line 44, and insert:

"All shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities which the company may issue to raise the corporate capital shall be executed and issued at the principal office in the city of New York; and all such shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities shall be disposed of only for cash, to be paid into the company treasury and used for corporate purposes: Provided, That this shall not apply to bonds or securities issued under Article L (50) of the concession of Nicaragua to the canal association."

Mr. HOLMAN. It was understood that this should be voted upon as a separate amendment in the House.

The SPEAKER. And when the previous question was ordered in the House it was understood that this and another amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER] were to be included and voted upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is correct.

Mr. REED. But that is superseded by the agreement made this morning. If this does not involve any time, however, I shall not interpose any objection. If it does, I shall.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it will take but very little time.

Mr. REED. I do not think that any amendment which can now be adopted would injure the bill, anyhow. [Laughter.]

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER], and on which a vote was also to be taken in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That at any time hereafter the Government of the United States shall have the right, at its own option, to acquire by purchase the entire property of said company in said canal and its appurtenances at a price equal to the actual cost thereof, with interest on such cost at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by inserting, after the word "option" where it occurs in the amendment, the words "and with the consent of the Republic of Nicaragua."

Mr. DUNN. I hope that permission will be given to modify the amendment to that extent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois before the vote is taken upon it?

There was no objection.

The question being taken on the adoption of the amendment, the House proceeded to divide.

Mr. COX. I think there is a misapprehension in the minds of members as to the amendment. We are voting now upon the amendment as modified.

The SPEAKER. The amendment as modified by the gentleman from Illinois is now being voted upon.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 72.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. I ask the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were refused, there being 17 members only voting in favor thereof—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 160, nays 33, not voting 130; as follows:

YEAS—160.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYSON, the recapitulation of the vote was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. WILLIAMS, until further notice.

Mr. MCRAE with Mr. RYAN, for the rest of the day.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, on the pending bill.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5009) to provide certain arms, ammunition, and equipage to the State of Oregon for the militia thereof;

A bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California; and

A bill (H. R. 1959) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia.

CHANGE OF RULES.

Mr. REED. I desire to call up the proposition changing the rules.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. On that I raise a point of order and also the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas will state his point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It is, that under our rules this day is dedicated exclusively to the consideration of private business.

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by the House.

It is also provided by the rules in what manner the House may set aside this order; but until the House has set it aside—namely, by dispensing with the consideration of private business—then no other business than private business is in order. I submit that this rule even goes to the extent of excluding the reception of all reports from committees on this day, unless the bills are private bills. The Chair, of course, is far more familiar than I with the scope and intensity of this rule.

The proposition submitted by the gentleman from Maine is a proposition to amend a certain rule. While it may be in order to consider a proposition for a change of those rules that could affect the procedure of the House under this order for private business to-day, still my point is that the change proposed by the gentleman is of rules exclusively relating to business that may be considered on the first and third Mondays; in other words, public business. There is no proposition to change any rules that could affect the action of the House for the purpose of considering private business. That being the case, I submit to the Chair that while the gentleman may call up his amendment to the rules on any day except Friday, and while he may call it up after the House has dispensed with private business to-day, yet until the House does so dispense with that private business he can not call up a resolution to amend a rule that only applies to the first and third Mondays of the month. That is the point: First, that the rule dedicates to-day to private business; second, that the rule provides how the House may dispense with this order for private business to-day, and that during this day it is not in order to consider an amendment of those rules which only relates to public business and not to the procedure of the House as to private business. If the House dispenses with private business to-day, then the gentleman can call up his amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman will permit me I will state that it was my purpose to raise the question of consideration upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I had already given notice that I would do so.

The SPEAKER. While there is nothing in the rules themselves giving to the Committee on Rules the privilege of reporting at any time either for consideration or otherwise, the uniform practice of the House has been to receive reports of that committee for immediate consideration if they related to changes of the rules. And in accordance with that practice the House received yesterday morning from the Committee on Rules this report to which the gentleman from Kansas refers. It was under consideration during the whole day and at the time of the adjournment; and although this day is set apart by the rules for the consideration of bills on the Private Calender, yet, in accordance with the universal practice, questions of privilege may be made on that day as well as on other days, and the gentleman from Maine now calls up this matter as a matter of privilege. The Chair thinks that the——

Mr. REED. That it presents a matter of privilege, and the House was in the act of taking a vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state that, inasmuch as the House had ordered the yeas and nays on the motion for demanding the previous question, and a vote was being taken at the time the House adjourned, that is an additional reason why it could be called up to-day.

Mr. REED. Can the question of consideration be raised at this juncture?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raises the question of consideration, the Chair supposes, upon the demand for the previous question. That is a new question, whether the question of consideration can be raised upon a mere motion which is incidental to the motion now pending before the House.

Mr. REED. The question now pending before the House is the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the question now pending before the House is upon the demand made by the gentleman from Maine for the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. REED. Precisely; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to suggest to the Chair that the question before the House now is, whether it will consider at all to-day the proposition of the gentleman from Maine to call up this resolution. If it does consider that, then, of course, it must go on with the order for the previous question and the call of the yeas and nays. But to say that the House can be deprived of its right after an adjournment, or after a cessation has intervened, or rather after an adjournment has been taken to another legislative day, is a distinct thing; and to say that the House may not determine whether or not it will act upon the question is the point that I suggest to the Chair. I make the point of order that it is now in order to raise the question of consideration as against the first words which the gentleman from Maine utters when he takes the floor to call up this proposition.

The SPEAKER. If the question shall be raised at all, it must be raised upon the proposition pending before the House and not merely on an attempt by a member to call it up. The Chair is in some doubt as to whether or not the question of consideration can be raised at all after the House has ordered the yeas and nays upon the pending proposition.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But there was no quorum. The call for the previous question was not sustained. Thereupon the House adjourned, and now we begin a new legislative day. Say that there was an emergency appropriation bill to pass; say that the electoral vote was to be counted; say that some important matter which, in the judgment of the House, overrode anything it might have pending before it should come up to-day; my point is that the House has the constitutional right at the beginning of a new day to say whether or not it will or will not consider the question which the gentleman from Maine calls up.

Mr. REED. The argument of the gentleman as to the inconvenience will melt away at once when I make the suggestion that if appropriation bills or any great public exigency were presented the gentlemen who are now making this trouble by filibustering would at once yield, so that the argument made as to inconvenience absolutely has nothing in it, for I am sure the gentleman from Kansas would be one of the first to retrace the wrong steps which he has already taken. But I suppose he feels that there is no great public exigency, and therefore he adds to the steps already taken, others.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to ask the gentleman whether these gentlemen from the Committee on Rules can come in with a proposition which suspends the action of the House and say to us, "You must take this or filibuster?" Now, looking to the effects of this proposed amendment, I want to say to the gentleman from Maine that I have no steps to retrace; not one. I say that you have no right to block the business of this House; you have no right to deprive this House of the ability to say whether or not it will take up this business or go on with the river and harbor bill or anything else.

Mr. REED. I little expected to play the part of lamb to the wolf from Kansas. I confess some surprise to find myself in the position of an obstructor of the rules.

I thought I was proceeding under the rules of the House. The rules of the House provide a certain method of making changes, and that method of making changes applies whenever, in the opinion of the House, the rules of the House are failing to carry out the great purpose of all rules, which is to facilitate the action of the House itself. Now, the House desires, by a very large majority, to get at the public business. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], by a very small minority, desires not to. Yet the gentleman from Kansas comes forward here and really seems to believe that somebody else is obstructing business and not he! The rules, I repeat, are for a simple purpose. They are to facilitate the action of the House. It is always understood, and every rule is based on that idea, that gentlemen will act here from a sense of their responsibility as members of the House, but it is impossible to question any man's action, and therefore if the House finds that its rules are so employed as to be made means of obstruction to prevent the majority from controlling, then the House has the right to take into its own hands the change of its rules.

This proposition is so plain that nothing but a very debased condition of public sentiment would render it possible for any member of the House to make the observations which have been made by the gentleman from Kansas. I think this House has got into a condition which will astonish itself if the members will take time to consider. The very fundamental principle of our Government is control by a majority; and, however wise any individual man may be, the principle of our Government is that when one hundred and one men are on one side and one hundred men are on the other side the one hundred go to the wall, even if they are as wise as the gentlemen who are making this opposition. That is the principle upon which we go. Yet we see here day after day men taking advantage of the rules of the House to stop public business, even that business which requires a vote of two to one, so that the people of this country, as represented in the House of Representatives, have ceased to rule the country, and it is governed and controlled and its business is stopped by a very few men. Now, this concerns me no more than it does any other member of the House.

I am here in pursuance of a duty which was not sought for by me, which was not suggested by me, and in which I act only as the organ of the Committee on Rules, by direction of the chairman of that committee; and, standing here as I do as the organ of that committee, and to the extent which that committee has rights in this House as the organ of this House, I feel that the House owes it to itself, as well as to the country, to treat this question in manful fashion. [Applause.] If there is a majority against this rule let them declare themselves, and nobody will acquiesce in their decision more gladly than I will. If there is a majority in favor of it, then, under the laws of this land, that majority ought to control, and if it can not control, it ought to do what it will do, publicly abdicate its functions. Now, if any gentleman wants to help to do that, let him do it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday this measure was reported from the Committee on Rules by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. At that time the gentleman from Maine made a statement in regard to the action of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] stated his position in regard to it, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] demanded the reading of the proposition. The proposition was read and several statements were made in regard to its purport, all of which were in the nature of debate and consideration.

This proposition was stated yesterday, and the House proceeded to consider it. Thereupon the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] moved the previous question, the yeas and nays were ordered upon that motion, and the yeas and nays were actually taken, and it appeared that a quorum had not voted; whereupon a call of the House was ordered, and there the proceedings of that day, so far as this proposition was concerned, stopped. If the Chair will refer to page 330 of the Manual he will find that it is there provided that after a question has been stated and its discussion commenced, it is too late to raise the question of consideration.

Now this question, as I have already said, has been stated, its discussion has been commenced, it was discussed for a brief time yesterday, and its consideration was entered upon, and the question now is upon ordering the yeas and nays upon an incomplete vote, which was begun on yesterday but not ended, by reason of the failure of a quorum to appear. Therefore it is too late to raise the question of consideration against this privileged report. Its consideration having been begun yesterday, it is now the regular business before the House, under the rules of the House, and it is that kind of business which grows out of the very existence of this body. It is the exercise of a constitutional right. The Constitution of the United States gives to this House the right to make its own rules, and the right to make means the right to change, alter, and amend. Therefore we are now engaged in the exercise of a great constitutional right and in the performance of a great constitutionel duty imposed upon us as the representatives of the people.

What, then, is the condition which confronts us? It is that the rules of the House have been misapplied and abused. We have a rule which provides that on certain days of each month—the first Monday and the third Monday—the House may by a two-thirds vote suspend the rules and pass any proposition. Yet it is contended to-day by the opponents of this proposed change that this notion can not be made and submitted to the House for its consideration except by unanimous consent; and on four or five occasions since this session began, when we have reached the period of our business to which this rule refers—the first and third Mondays of the month—gentlemen in this House, in the exercise of what they claim to be their constitutional right under the rules of this House, have when their States were caled sent to the Clerk's desk old bills, as stale as last year's almanac, and have insisted that we should sit here for five hours as the representatives of this great people and listen to that nonsense being read, while the time of the House was consumed at their instance, and nothing else could be done. Now, I hold that it is not the constitutional right of any member of this House to say that this House shall do nothing without his consent.

We are, under our present rules, or by reason of the abuse of those rules, in this condition: that one member claims the right to say that no business shall be done on the first and third Mondays of each month unless he agrees to it. This, instead of being a claim for the rights of minorities, is a claim for the dictation and despotism of one-man power; and if Representatives here whose constituents demand of them that they shall execute their will and enact laws in their interest allow a Representative from a single district to dictate the whole policy of this House, the people of the country will hold us responsible for a failure to make the rules so clear that this abuse of power can not be exercised.

I hope, therefore, the Chair will hold that it is too late to raise the question of consideration upon this resolution; that it is now before the House; and I trust that the resolution will be supported by those Representatives in this body who believe that the American people are entitled to be represented here by three hundred and twenty-five members, and that the voice of the majority when spoken here, and when agreed to by the other legislative departments of the Government, should be the law of the land. We can not be justified by our constituents if we allow our hands to be tied and concede that one man may dictate the whole legislative policy of this Government. I believe that the proposition now presented is right in itself, being calculated to protect minorities as well as majorities, and to enable the people's Representatives to execute the popular will.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, what I shall have to say will be responsive to what has been already said on the part of other gentlemen, although it may not be strictly pertinent to the parliamentary question raised.

Gentlemen present this matter as though one man were obstructing the will of the majority of the House, and as if that were all there is in this question. Now, sir, since I have had the honor of serving in this House the present rule has obtained, and the obstructive methods referred to have frequently been resorted to on suspension days when measures are brought before the House with a limited period for consideration, preventing often the reaching of anything like a healthy conclusion. Since I have been here the House has time and again kept back from the Senate a resolution for final adjournment, with the view of escaping from the operation of that rule which allows suspensions of the rules during the last six days of a session. This suspension day has been dubbed in times past, in the House and by the press of the country, as "devil's day."

It is only in regard to this objectionable class of legislation that these obstructive proceedings have been resorted to. Certain gentlemen, on the assumption that the measures on which they seek the action of the House are overwhelmingly important, have suddenly discovered that what has existed here for a decade or perhaps for three decades is a great monstrosity. I trust, sir, that we shall not yield one single right that the minority now have in this House. The majority has the power to adopt appropriate methods for the consideration of any measure they may desire to pass. The present question relates simply to the matter of the suspension of the rules; and when the Committee on Rules comes here divided, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], with a quarter of a century of service, and the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, feel that this measure is improper, I do not think I am in bad company or liable to be arraigned and convicted before the bar of public opinion because I am sustaining what is called this "one-man power" of obstructing legislation in this House.

There are many things which a minority may do here. The rights of the minority have been carefully preserved by those who have preceded us and by the wisest men of the land. There has never been a House, Democratic or Republican, that has not felt the wholesome influences of the minority, and which has not felt the influences of obstructive tactics.

We have legislation enough. What we need is correct legislation. Wherever a measure assumes great consequence, wherever it assumes a dangerous character, it is well somebody should obstruct it by preventing it being disposed of under a suspension of the rules. I am not to be restrained and members of the House are not to be restrained by suggestion of outrage in this connection from doing what becomes really a duty as well as a right.

Dispose of it for the balance of the session; temporary; whenever an emergency arises remove any rule in the way of the wish of the majority! Sir, I am opposed to any such expedient as that. Rules have been honored with a long life of approval by wise men. I do not want to, and will not under any suggestion as to the consideration of this or that measure, become excited and alarmed about the power exercised by a few gentlemen in this House under rules we have honored for a quarter of a century.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word on the question of consideration. I am prompted to this, not so much because I object to the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules as because I desire to enter my protest, feeble as it may be, against any temporary change of the rules of the House for the accomplishment of a specific purpose, for the passage of any particular bill. My idea, sir, is that the rules of this House are made not only, as suggested by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], for the orderly conduct of the public business, but there is a greater and higher object, and that is to protect the rights of the minority, to restrain, in the language of the old law-writers, the unbridled license of the majority, to give them time for reflection, so that when passion is allayed they may return to a sense of justice if they find they have departed from it.

You will find that every writer on parliamentary law lays down as the great object in the establishment of rules the protection of the rights of the minority. As my colleague has well said, a majority can always protect itself. We live in a government, sir, where, while it is a government, as the gentleman from Maine says, of a majority, yet there are limitations on the power of the majority. Neither in the Constitution of the United States nor in the constitution of any State has the majority the right to do what it pleases.

This is a proposition to change the rules. It is not so important in its effect upon the general business of the House whether this resolution be adopted or not. I object to it because it is designed to further the passage of some particular bill which some gentleman or number of gentlemen fancy the public demand.

I should like to have the attention of the Chair. As to the right to raise the question of consideration——

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to say a word before he goes to the question of consideration.

Mr. CRISP. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House it is always in the power of a majority of the House to determine whether or not they will enter on the consideration of a question. The fact that it may be a question of privilege does not change the general rule that the majority can always determine whether or not they will consider a case or temporarily lay it aside. The only trouble I apprehend in the mind of the Speaker in this case is that, the House having already entered upon the consideration of the question, whether or not it is not now too late to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that that is not the principal difficulty in the mind of the Chair. The House had not only entered upon the consideration of the matter, but the previous question was demanded, and the yeas and nays were ordered by the House on that demand. The vote was actually being taken. Now the question in the mind of the Chair is whether when the vote is actually being taken it is not then too late to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. CRISP. Unquestionably, Mr. Speaker, during the same legislative day it would be too late. But it may be well enough in deciding this question to look a little to the matter of convenience, because the effect of a ruling must necessarily enter into the mind of the Speaker in deciding questions of parliamentary law which have not heretofore been decided. If it is too late at this stage of the case to raise the question of consideration, then the House finds itself in this position: That the gentleman from Maine alone, against the wishes of every other member of the House, may hold this resolution before the House to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House can dispose of it in a few minutes.

Mr. CRISP. But a majority may determine that they do not want to dispose of it. The same majority of which my friend speaks may decide that there are other matters to which they desire to address their attention. The fact that the gentleman from Maine stated that if there was an appropriation bill or any other matter of public importance pending in the House that he would withdraw this resolution shows——

Mr. REED. But I did not say that.

Mr. CRISP. I so understood you.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I was providing, like my friend from Georgia, for my neighbors. I said the gentleman from Kansas could get out of the way in such event.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. "The gentleman from Kansas" is not obstructing the public business in any way.

Mr. CRISP. The effect of the rule invoked by the gentleman from Maine is just this: That if the House had entered upon the consideration of the question, the previous question having been demanded and the yeas and nays ordered, that the House must proceed to transact that business before any other business can be transacted. If then the House must vote upon this question before any other business can be taken up then, as I submit, one gentleman can absolutely obstruct from day to day the business of the House for an indefinite time by calling up that resolution. The response of the gentleman from Maine to this argument is that the House can easily get out of that dilemma by passing upon the question. But that is begging the question, because the House must always have the right to determine whether it wants to pass upon it or not.

I am aware of the fact that there have been decisions to the effect that when you have entered upon the consideration of a question it is too late to raise the question of consideration; but a new legislative day has intervened, and it seems to be only right and proper when the gentleman from Maine calls up a matter coming over from a previous day that any gentleman can raise the question of consideration, that is, will the House now proceed with the consideration of the question? and it should be and must be within the power of the majority of the House to determine whether they will then consider it or not.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois for his question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask my friend from Georgia this question, whether he regards it one of the sacred rights of the minority to concede to any member of the House the privilege on the first and third Mondays of the month, when bills are introduced on the call of States, to introduce bills, not for the purpose of having them considered, because they can not be considered on that call, but merely for the purpose of having them read, to consume the whole time of the House up to the hour of adjournment, and thus prevent the House from reaching the consideration of any other order of business that is prescribed by the rules for that day? Does the gentleman think that is the right of the minority which ought to be preserved?

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Illinois asks me a question, and I can only answer for myself. I have never resorted to the practice to which the gentleman refers, and those gentlemen who have done so are responsible alone to their constituents and their own sense of right and wrong. They are in no sense responsible to the gentleman from Illinois or to his constituents.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I am responsible to my constituents.

Mr. CRISP. And if gentlemen here exercise the right given them by the rules or the practice of the House, they are responsible alone to their own people.

Mr. SPRINGER. But does the gentleman think that is a legislative right that every member of the House ought to have?

Mr. CRISP. That depends altogether upon the rules of the House. Under the rules of the House, existing as they do to-day, and, as I am informed, since the very first Congress met, it is the right of any member upon the introduction of a bill to have it read. It is the right of all members of the House to present bills which may be of vital importance to their constituents. You must not forget that the introduction of a bill is the exercise of a very important right of the people of this country.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Georgia knows that the introduction of bills on Monday can not be for the purpose of consideration, but for reference only.

Mr. REED. Oh, I do not think the gentleman from Georgia is serious.

Mr. SPRINGER. And there would seem no necessity for occupying the time of the House in reading these bills.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman is begging the question. This is a proposition to reduce the opportunities afforded to members to introduce bills. The gentleman from Illinois may say that they are not introduced for consideration, or he may say that you can introduce them by unanimous consent. That is true, but in such case the introducer of the bill is dependent upon the consent of all the members of the House, and must get it before he can exercise a right which is of importance to himself and to his constituents.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Will not your construction of the law permit one man, on the first call from the first State reached on the list, to consume all of the time of the session in the introduction of matters which he may require to have read?

Mr. SPRINGER. He may take up the time of the whole Congress.

Mr. HEARD. Yes, I will say consume the whole Congress in the introduction of such matters by requiring them to be read.

Mr. CRISP. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the question.

Mr. HEARD. It is it exactly.

Mr. CRISP. It is not the question before the House. The gentleman assumes that members will do certain things because they may do so.

Mr. HEARD. They are doing it.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman says they are doing it. I do not know about that. I am not aware that that has been done to any extent.

Mr. REED. Well, rather.

Mr. CRISP. I am aware of this fact, Mr. Speaker, that certain gentlemen on both sides of this House have certain measures which they wish to pass. I am aware of the fact that there is quite a number of gentlemen on both sides of this House who are opposed to these measures.

Mr. REED. And that some other members have pet measures which they want to call.

Mr. CRISP. Not at all.

Mr. REED. It is the same thing——

Mr. CRISP. This is the difference, Mr. Speaker, between doing something——

Mr. REED. To not permit a majority to pass a measure.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Maine says that he believes that if there are 101 men on the floor of this House who favor a measure and 100 against it, that the 101 ought to have the right to do anything they please towards the passage of such bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Why not?

Mr. CRISP. The objection to that is this: That the minority have certain rights which they can exercise under the Constitution of the United States. If in the exercise of these rights they obstruct the passage of a bill, who can complain?

Mr. REED. I suppose we can change the rules.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Georgia, what right have the minority but to discuss and submit?

Mr. CRISP. That kind of argument will not hold in a country where the written constitution is the supreme law. Under the Constitution of the United States one-fifth of those present have got the right to put on the Journals of the House the vote upon every question.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Then what right has the majority if it can pass this measure?

Mr. CRISP. The majority has the right in the House, and under the rules of the House as they have existed from time immemorial——

Mr. REED. But the rules of the House have not existed from time immemorial.

Mr. CRISP. But the rule that allows a member frequent opportunities to introduce a bill, every week, perhaps, has existed for many years.

Mr. REED. But not from time immemorial.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman is frank he will state, or at least he will not deny, that the object of a change in the rules at this time is to permit the passage of certain bills under suspension of the rules.

Now, just a word or two more, for I have already said more than I had intended. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] will find we live in this country under written constitutions. These constitutions are made, not to protect the rights of majorities, but to protect the rights of minorities. They are to protect the life, liberty, and the property of the citizen—against what? Amongst other things, against the unbridled acts of majorities. The gentlemen will find on reading the Constitution of their country that a minority of only one-fifth of this body can cause to be put upon the record the vote of every member who votes on any question. They will find that it requires a majority of the whole House to pass any bill. If demanding the yeas and nays on any bill defeats its passage, who can complain? If refusal to vote by a minority defeats the passage of a bill, who can complain?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Does the gentleman from Georgia think that in this House or any legislative body under the Constitution of the United States the minority should dictate to the majority?

Mr. CRISP. Oh, I submit to my friend that that is begging the question. I am replying to the proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], that a majority may do what it pleases and that a minority must gracefully submit. I submit, sir, that constitutions are made to protect minorities, that rules are made to protect minorities, and I say to the gentleman that in this country, country of majorities though it may be, we find this anomalous state of affairs, that the incoming President of the United States is elected by a minority of the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side, and cries of "Oh, no!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. And I suppose the State of the gentleman from Georgia and several other States at the South might have made the minority much more striking if they had seen fit. It is to their forbearance that the country is indebted for the minority being so small.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to know whether this discussion as to the rights and powers of majorities and minorities is germane to the question now under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is replying to an argument made on the other side.

Mr. LANHAM. Extending even to the question of Presidential majorities and minorities.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia seems to have referred to that merely as an illustration.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I have only a word or two more to say. I shall not undertake to follow the gentleman from Maine now, but I hope on an early occasion to have something to say upon the question which he has just raised here. The gentleman from Maine need not be disturbed about Georgia. I can assure him, and the other members of this House, and the people of this country, in the utmost sincerity, that in no State in the Union is the right accorded by the laws and by the people to all classes of voters to go to the ballot-box and deposit their ballots for the candidates of their choice more freely and fully than it is in Georgia.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And for the minority to rule.

Mr. REED (to Mr. CRISP). You distinguish Georgia from the rest of the Southern States, then?

Mr. CRISP. I do not, sir.

Mr. REED. Credat Judæus.

Mr. CRISP. I do not distinguish Georgia from the other States, but I am one of those who try to talk of matters that I know something about. I know something about Georgia, and therefore I speak for Georgia. I am not one of those, who being two or three thousand miles away, presume to criticise a community in relation to matters of which they know nothing except what they read in a partisan press. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do know Georgia, and therefore I undertake to speak for Georgia here.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think there is some confusion here as to the rights of minorities and majorities. I think it ought to be understood what constitutes a minority. I hold that one man is not the minority which the Constitution contemplates.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. What is?

Mr. SPRINGER. The rule contended for here is that one man has the right to dictate all the legislation of this body, and this House has no right which one man is bound to respect.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel it incumbent upon me to detain the House with a recital of the reasons which induced me to differ on this question from a majority of the Committee on Rules—a bare majority; but I rise to combat a thought which seems to have taken possession of some gentlemen here, that with the responsibility of the majority should be given the power to ride over the minority rough-shod. I assert that any one who will take the trouble to read the history of the enactment of the rules of this House from the First Congress down, will find that the governing principle in their formation has been that they should be made to protect the minority from any despotic power claimed for a majority. The majority can on all occasions take care of itself; and the theory of our form of government in its legislative relations provides for rules to prevent injustice to a minority.

Mr. SPRINGER. What constitutes a minority, in the gentleman's judgment?

Mr. RANDALL. The rules say what shall be the respective rights of a majority and what shall not.

I say here that I can well remember much wrong, in my judgment, which would have been done but for the obstruction allowed by the rules of the House, while on the other hand I do not recall ever having known any serious harm to come from the exercise of those rights which the rules have given to the minority. I state distinctly that upon this occasion and upon all occasions which may arise hereafter, I shall adhere, so far as I may be able, to that principle which guided our forefathers in the formation of the rules which have been handed down to us—the principle of protecting a minority in this House against the undue acts of an arbitrary and despotic majority. [Applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether he thinks it is the right of a minority consisting of one man to say that no business shall by done in this House unless he agrees to it? Is that "the right of the minority?"

Mr. RANDALL. I answer the gentleman that I can imagine great hardships to come from the vicious or unwise purpose of a minority in that connection; but I say that I would not change the rules to meet any particular case of that kind, because I believe that such a change might do still greater harm by giving the majority the right to override the minority.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did not the gentleman himself favor in a former Congress a change of the rule which then made every Monday suspension day? The gentleman himself succeeded by the aid of the majority he represented in this House in limiting that right.

Mr. RANDALL. I did everything I could to make the rules so that the minority would have the power to prevent wrongful or unconstitutional legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman has succeeded in making the rules so that one man can prevent anything being done here unless he wants it to be done—if that be the "right of a minority"—then I have but little respect for such a right.

Mr. RANDALL. What any individual member does under the rules he does on his own responsibility.

Mr. SPRINGER. But one member has no right to take the responsibility of dictating all the legislation of this great body.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret the course which this discussion has taken. There is an evident effort on the part of gentlemen opposed to certain measures to give a partisan aspect to this debate. I trust that anything which may be said may not influence in that view the minds of members, because the question now before us is in no sense a partisan question. It is a question of the orderly conduct of the business of the House.

Neither is there involved here any question of what may properly be called the rights of the minority. Minority rights in this country are guarded by a written Constitution. The rules of this House are not for the purpose of protecting the rights of the minority, but to promote the orderly conduct of the business of the House. They can have no other object. It is because in their application they have been perverted from the purpose for which such rules are intended that we have this great trouble to-day. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] undoubtedly thinks that the obstruction which the rules at present allow to be exercised operates only for the prevention of unwise or unconstitutional measures. But, sir, I have been here for twelve years, and during that time I have seen more honest measures killed by the operation of these rules than dishonest measures defeated.

A declaration that in order to prevent the passage of bills which are unconstitutional it is necessary to stop the whole business of the House of Representatives and deliver its work over to the hands of any noisy minority is a reflection upon the integrity of the members of this body. Representatives here, if they were allowed to act upon their responsibility, would give to the country better work than they do to-day. The present system consists in skillful maneuver by the assistance of a minority to kill bills which the wisdom of the majority of the House regards as suitable and proper. They are made for that purpose and they are used for that purpose, and it is the stronghold of the older members. They know what the rules are; they know how they can be used to murder bills the majority believe in, and they use that power mercilessly. It has been the history of the legislation of this country from the very inception until now that we have changed rules constantly if the old rules were found to impair the will of a deliberate and determined majority.

The sole object of making rules at all, I repeat, is to facilitate the orderly management of business, and if a rule is put in solely for the purpose of enabling one man or twenty men to obstruct the action of the majority, I say that is a violation not only of the Constitution of the United States, but of the principles of human liberty as expounded by our forefathers. No such doctrine as that stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] can be found in the pages of the Federalist. No such doctrine as that can be found in the writings of Thomas Jefferson. No such doctrine can be found in the writings of any believer in human liberty in this land. [Applause.]

Who are we? We are the representatives the people have chosen, because we are supposed at least to be honest, to be manly, to be straightforward, and here we are put under rules where a few can govern us, and we get into the habit of trying to dodge every question by the assistance of the rules of the House. [Laughter and applause.] If this is the courage-center of the United States—and I have not looked at it with much closeness—we know what we have. To-day there is not a man who listens to me who does not know the effect of the rules of the House on the members is to make them less manly and less courageous. [Applause.] Who does not know that a few men who understand the rules can block almost anything which the majority wants? Why, take the case in point. The great majority of this House, to the extent of two to one, desire to go on with the public business on suspension day. Under color and by the aid of a rule of this House certain members propose—for it would be unparliamentary to refer to what they have done after I have characterized it—certain members propose, by the introduction of bills in which they have no interest, simply to prolong the time and wipe out that day, and thereby stop two-thirds of this House from doing business. This is evidently so, because their very action in opposing the new rule shows they know the House is two to one in favor of the bills they oppose.

And yet the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] with this plain example in front of them, get up and talk about the rights of the minority. Why, right here is the tyranny of the minority. They have no rights in such a case as that. What right have they to stop the business of the people? Was there any tyranny ever greater than that, that one man should be allowed to do this? [Applause.]

And what is the remedy we propose? Simply for the rest of the session no bills shall be introduced on two Mondays in a month. All the other Mondays are open for the introduction of a thousand bills, not one of which can ever be reached for action. And the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] seriously, and soberly, and without a smile, or a ghost of a smile on either corner of his mouth, talks about the deprivation of the right to present a bill which might deeply affect his constituents. If he has not got them all in, he never will. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. We have nearly twelve thousand bills in now.

Mr. REED. I should like to address myself now for a moment to the question before the House. [Great laughter.] The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] has already stated what is the real point. He says he raises the question of consideration. It was not I who called this matter up. It came up automatically [laughter], and it would have come up before had it not been for the unanimous consent given to the transaction of the Nicaraguan business.

That unanimous consent having exhausted itself, this question comes up, and it comes up because we are executing the order of the House, which was to proceed with the yeas and nays. We had partly executed that order of the House and found there was no quorum, whereupon we adjourned; and the question comes now just where we left it on yesterday, and there can by no possibility be a question of consideration. The whole argument of the gentleman from Georgia upon that point is just as good an argument in favor of raising the question of consideration in the midst of debate upon a proposition as it is now. It is an argument of the same character. It is an argument from the inconvenience of the thing. But there is no real inconvenience. We can dispose of this question at once, as we can of any other question when it is before us, and then, after passing upon the question and disposing of it, we can go on with the business of the country.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. Suppose you enter upon the consideration, say of the river and harbor bill. The House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole, proceeds with the consideration for a time, the committee rises, the House adjourns, and another legislative day comes. I suppose the gentleman from Maine will admit that the question of consideration of that measure can be raised?

Mr. REED. Beyond all peradventure.

Mr. CRISP. If in that case, why not now?

Mr. REED. Because this presents a very different question. We are now executing an order of the House. In the case the gentleman cites no order had been made, and the House in his supposed case was not in the midst of yeas and nays. You can not raise a question of consideration in the middle of yeas and nays. You are trying to interpose your question of consideration after the order for the yeas and nays on the part of the House; and the gentleman must remember that it is a well-known parliamentary rule when the call of the roll has been commenced nothing can interrupt it. It can not even be interrupted by the arrival of the hour of 5 o'clock. The hour of adjournment does not stop it.

Mr. CRISP. But that is not the question. The gentleman is aware of the fact that under our rules the intervention of another legislative day interferes with many propositions that can not be interfered with except by such intervention.

Mr. REED. And this is one that can not be so interfered with.

Mr. CRISP. I think it can, and therefore I invoke the same rule in this case that applies to so many other similar cases.

Mr. REED. That is you undertake to invoke a rule and apply it to this case that is applicable solely to a different case.

Mr. CRISP. Not at all, but I do invoke that rule which on the arrival of another legislative day gives the House the right to say whether it will proceed with the consideration of a measure or whether it will not proceed with it. That is the sole question presented here.

Mr. REED. This is very different from the order of business to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. SPRINGER. And the limitation which the gentleman from Georgia makes in regard to the river and harbor bill is not applicable, because the river and harbor bill is in the Committee of the Whole, and can not be reached in the House at all, except by an order to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss at length the question which has been raised on the part of the gentleman from Texas as to the consideration of these bills on the Private Calendar, but wish to refer briefly to the pending question. The resolution presented by the gentleman from Maine comes over as a matter of privilege from yesterday. It is before the House regularly, and what remains of the unfinished business of yesterday comes up and attaches to that proposition. The Speaker has rightly stated that the yeas and nays having been ordered on the demand for the previous question, that was the unfinished business; and the House was about to go on with that call when the gentleman from Texas intervened with the question of consideration as to business upon the Private Calendar. I presume that the Speaker will decide that question properly in the interest of the orderly transaction of the business of the House, which is, of course, the business of the country.

We have debated, somewhat irrelevantly perhaps, and with some little apprehension of the future, what is to be the result of the change in the rules proposed by this resolution, and as to how minorities, not simply now, but possibly in the next Congress, may fare under action similar to that of to-day. I will not go into that question now. All I propose to discuss is the question with reference to that condition of our rules. As they now exist and as proposed to be amended by this resolution, they permit one member, and that is one of the special grievances complained of here, to interpose an obstacle to the transaction of the public business on certain days in the month, by having bills read until the hour for adjournment shall come, and thus prevent the transaction of the other business prescribed by the rules for those days. The question here presented involves the rights of majorities and minorities somewhat, as we have been told in this debate, although I must confess I can not see the relevancy of the question as thus far presented; for, according to my idea of our system of public policy here with regard to legislative enactments, a system adopted at the very formation of the Government, the minority and the majority are one. By our theory if not our practice, and, thank God, it is the most shining of all the jewels in our crown of sovereignty, we have the acquiescence of the minority in the will of the majority on all occasions; so that even if the minority be an imposing factor, yet when the vote is taken here under the rules of the House, there is no majority or minority as distinctive elements of the legislative will, but there is unanimity in the political order, the minority bowing to the will of the majority, and the vote becomes unanimous.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask, when the minority prevent a vote from being taken, what then is the condition?

Mr. COX. If it does prevent it, it is, I suppose, a privilege accorded under the Constitution. Oh, yes! It is one of the limitations——

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Pardon me a moment just there. Is the gentleman quite sure that is in the Constitution or in the rules?

Mr. COX. Well, if it is not it ought to be. I will take occasion to read it up again some time. [Laughter.]

Now, we have a great deal of talk here in relation to the rights of the minority. I never saw, and I have been here some time, any special advantage, except on three or four great occasions, where public or personal liberty was at stake, when this obstructive filibustering policy brought any good.

But we have generally seen that the men who have inaugurated these filibusters are the first men to retreat and retrace their steps. I believe in facilitating business, the business that we come here for; and although I do not know as I am now instructed whether I will vote for the Oklahoma bill and the bill of the gentleman from Ohio, and I may not vote for these bills, there are other bills pending, matters involving other interests besides these, which demand that we get rid of the bill or bills or the rule which prevents the proper consideration of measures which we must consider. Now, the minority come up and say, "We must be protected against the majority riding rough-shod over us," to use the language of my friend from Pennsylvania. Gentlemen behind me say, "We must protect the minority from undue embarrassment on the part of the majority." Now, who is to decide what is undue legislation?

Mr. REED. These three or four gentlemen who are interposing.

Mr. COX. I do not know how many there are; but when the minority have once spoken under the rules their duty is only to secure a proper record of their vote. Now, as it is laid down here in the history of our rules and the rules drawn from English parliamentary practice, I never saw it held that a minority were to be protected from a majority except in pursuance of the rules of the House. There is such a limitation. Whenever, by the caprice of a bad Speaker, or by the capriciousness of members, our rules are broken, then, and then only, can this power be invoked; but not in pursuance of the rules. When the rules are pursued the minority are supposed to be safe.

Now, what is the proposition here? Why, to change the rules; not to break them. To make them conform to an orderly expedition of business, and to do that we have to break up one of the worst abuses which I have ever seen in connection with parliamentary life; and that is this puerile, small, little, uneducated idea of trundling up to the Clerk's desk a great big bill or bills to be read on Monday. This calls for no intellectual force [laughter and applause]; not as much intellect as it would require for a prize fighter. [Renewed laughter.] They send the largest bills up here to be read, and call that statesmanship [laughter], and deliberation, and carrying on the business of the country. [Renewed laughter.]

I am glad that the Speaker and gentlemen here, irrespective of party, come here and say we will break down that abuse and make the rule conform with what is good order and a business proceeding; and then there is no minority which will not be protected. The majority will be held responsible to the people. By our theory of representative government the minority and the majority become one, even as the thought of God is one. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to what I think is a precedent for this case——

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman from Kansas permit me to call the attention of the Chair to a matter on which I think there has been a decision of the Chair? On page 95 of the Calendar I find this statement:

A bill to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national-banking associations. January 12, considered. Yeas and nays ordered on previous question on the engrossment and third reading. January 31, continued to February 14.

I am informed that the gentleman in charge of the measure has repeatedly attempted to call it up. The question of consideration was raised, and the Chair held that it might be, notwithstanding the previous question had been ordered.

The SPEAKER. That bill came up in the hour for the consideration of bills, and the hour being consumed it became unfinished business.

Mr. CRISP. There has been a ruling——

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Georgia seems to transgress his rules.

Mr. CRISP. It has been frequently held that the question of consideration might be raised against a privileged motion. That being so, the fact that the pending resolution is privileged cuts no figure, and the question before the House seems to be on all fours with that heretofore decided by the Speaker.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, that is the case to which I was about to refer as one which has been ruled upon. The facts in it were the same as in the one pending. The demand for the previous question had been made, the yeas and nays were called, a quorum was not developed, and the House adjourned. On subsequent days the question of consideration was repeatedly raised, and held to be competent, by the Chair, as I remember. If so, it seems to me that ruling would be an exact precedent for this case; because it does not matter whether that bill came up on a motion to suspend the rules or whether it came over from the morning hour as unfinished business. The question is not how it got before the House, but what was its attitude when before the House, the yeas and nays having been called upon the demand for the previous question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word or two in regard to this general question. This is a government by the majority, but it is not a government by majorities exclusively. It is a government of majorities and minorities; of a majority under check of a minority; not of a majority unchecked, but of a majority as checked by the minority under constitutional or parliamentary provisions.

The amendment to the rules proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is this, that on a given day, namely, suspension day, a day which is an anomaly in all parliamentary proceedings, a day which performs the capital operation upon all rules, suspends them all——

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Not now, please. I say, Mr. Speaker, that on the Mondays to which this resolution applies the House acts under anomalous and extraordinary rules, namely, that the previous question at once be ordered on the measure proposed by a member; in other words, the motion to suspend the rules is an ordering of the previous question. The right is given to the minority to make simply one motion, a motion to adjourn; but they have no right to move an amendment to the measure, and they are limited to fifteen minutes' discussion. On that day you lay aside common procedure and privileges and suspend all the rules; you do not allow a bill to go into the Committee of the Whole under five minute debate and amendment, or to be carefully discussed and perfected; not at all. You suspend all that, and you at once bring the minority to vote upon a measure involving, as in the Pacific railroad bill, $60,000,000, with only fifteen minutes' discussion, or at the rate of $4,000,000 to the minute, and without the power to amend. That is what suspension day means.

Now it is proposed that on this day, when the ordinary rights of the minority have been thus obliterated, when a minority is so restricted that it can not discuss a question fairly and fully, and can not even move to amend, it shall be still further deprived of what small ability remains to it under the call of States to impose some check upon the majority. My observation has been that when the minority are permitted discussion, when gentlemen are permitted to offer amendments and to support them, then in due time there is but little disposition to filibuster. If the pending proposition applied to all the proceedings of the House on all days I should not object, but it applies to suspension day. I regard the whole system of suspending the rules on that day as an infamous parliamentary outrage, and the proposed destruction of the rights of a minority on that day as inexcusable and dangerous. Therefore, under these circumstances, I shall certainly claim the right as one man to do just what any other man can do here, namely, make a motion or demand the enforcement of any rule.

Gentlemen talk about a "majority," and about the power of "one man" to stand in the way of a majority. Can more than one man make a motion at the same time? The majority does not submit it; only one individual. Not till action is taken can the matter of majority or minority be developed. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] or any other one member makes a motion to pass an appropriation bill he is only exercising a right which I equally possess and claim for myself as one man, namely, the right to make a motion. I have that right under the rules. It is inherent in the office I hold, and in no wise dependent upon the will of other gentlemen; and to say that I am to be deprived of that right because numbers of other gentlemen may feel that I am unwise in exercising it is upon the part of those gentlemen not only to arrogate to themselves all the wisdom they have but to attempt also to take against my will the small part that I have. Now, while my wisdom does not amount to much, I want it understood that it is mine; it is for me, and not for them, to determine when and how I shall avail myself of the rules, and I want it distinctly understood that I will exercise that right precisely as I please, more especially when you attempt to gag a minority on suspension day.

Look for a moment at another anomaly and hardship of that day. The measures then considered do not come up on the Calendar or by the direction of the House. The very function of the Speaker enables him by a choice in recognizing members to say what bills shall be considered and what shall not be considered. And all that I have to say on this subject applies simply to the office and not to the present occupant of the office, because I have the highest regard for the gentleman in the chair [Mr. CARLISLE].

But here you have, on suspension day, this function exercised by the Speaker, a right given to one man—a "one-man" power—to call up any measure he designates; it may involve a hundred million dollars, it may involve seats in the House, it may involve the gravest and most important legislation. Now, to say that you will wipe out the limitations which at present characterize suspension day, and will further destroy the few rights which the minority still have under our rules is, it seems to me, going too far. If one man in the chair can exercise that power under the rules, then one man on the floor may equally exercise such power as the rules grant him. And while it requires no great statesmanship to introduce a bill or to call for the reading of it, nor to vote ay or no, yet it does sometimes require some statesmanship and some courage to fight bad measures, even in this way, and when we are confronted with picked measures, which are, in my judgment, detrimental to the interest of the people, I propose to fight them, even though I have to resort to the reading of a bill or to the simplest parliamentary methods.

We are not mere babes here. We all look a little bit ahead. And all of us very well know what lies beyond this proposed amendment. This resolution carries much more than appears on its face. It means the passage of at least one enormous bill and its passage, how? After discussion? No. Under the right to amend? No. But simply under fifteen minutes' debate, and then a compulsory vote of yea or nay. It is easy to swim with the current, to go with the majority and talk loftily about the wisdom of the majority, but that clothes no man with the right to criticise a minority or take away its parliamentary power. I have the same right to be in a minority that another gentleman has to be with the majority. And I protest vigorously against any increase of the present autocratic power of the majority on suspension day, or any further destruction of the ability of a minority to apply checks and brakes on that day.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to indulge in debate on the parliamentary features of the question now under consideration, but I feel it due to myself to make one or two remarks in reply to observations which have fallen from gentlemen criticising the conduct of those members who have sought to avail themselves of their rights under the rules of the House. The rules of this House, Mr. Speaker, adopted for the orderly conduct of business, are weapons of offense as well as defense, and for one I do not intend to be driven from a proper resort to them—and by "proper resort" I mean resort which commends itself to my judgment, not to the judgment of others, as proper—whether I use them on the offensive or on the defensive side of any question.

I am responsible to my constituents alone for my conduct, and however puerile it may be in the estimation of some gentlemen who appear to set themselves up as special critics of the conduct of others, I do not intend to surrender this right. I shall bow to the rules of this House with all due respect so long as they subsist in their present form; when they are changed I shall bow respectfully to the change. But while the rules now existing continue in force I shall avail myself of my right as a member of this House, whether these gentleman regard the method exercised under the rules as an intellectual performance or not, to make use of such method whenever I see fit. I shall exercise this right regardless of criticism, manfully and openly, either for the purpose of opposing or promoting any measure I may deem it right either to oppose or promote, and more especially whenever I see fit to do so in the defeat of legislation which I believe to be unjust, iniquitous, and unholy.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. For what I shall say, Mr. Speaker, I alone am responsible. I have been informed that what I am about to say will not meet with the approbation of some of my particular friends. But I wish to call to mind this fact, that we have been in session now some weeks and nothing has been accomplished. Why? Because some few men have taken advantage of the rules (I make no objection to that) and have prevented any legislative action.

Now, regardless of the question immediately before us, and hardly knowing how far it may go, I have a word or two to say in the expression of convictions in which I have been very earnest in years past and shall be in the years to come.

I should like to know—I should like to have somebody tell me—what it is in this body but our representation of the people at home that gives us any power at all; and if this representation of the people at home is to be defeated by one man or two, then what is there in legislation that is worth contending about? Any man who has looked at the history of this country, or dreams of knowing anything about what a representative government is, must understand that a minority has no rights at all except the right to discuss, the right to protest, and the right to vote, while the majority has the right to decide. If anybody can tell me any other rule than this, I shall be glad to know what it is. I have stood here day by day anxious to learn what our laws were to be; and I have found out, Mr. Speaker, that we have no laws unless four or five men who do not know any more than I—four or five men of similar capacities to my own—say that it shall be so. I protest against this; and from this time on I have no mercy for it and no mercy for them.

Mr. Speaker, will some of these gentlemen—the gentleman from Georgia, or the gentleman from Pennsylvania, tell me what, in a representative body, a minority right is? I do not mean that anybody will turn his ears away from any suggestion or argument which may be submitted by a minority; but can any one tell me what a minority right is as defined by law—as a lawyer or a student of the Constitution would learn it?

Now, Mr. Speaker, in contending for the rights of a majority, I do not mean to speak of a party majority; I am very far from suggesting that; I mean the majority in favor of any bill—not a party majority. Why should not such a majority pass the bill and be responsible for it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The question here is for the decision of the Speaker of the House. With the fact of the passage of bills you, sir, have nothing whatever to do. It is a singular argument to my mind in discussing a naked question of law, a question as abstract in its consequences as any other question of law, gentlemen should undertake to point out its effect on the legislation of the country.

There were two questions presented here in the beginning of this debate. The first was, does the character of a privileged question adhere to this resolution to-day? and if it does, the next question is, what is the present status of the matter? I do not wish to discuss the first subdivision of the question. The Chair has already decided it. I say in deciding the first question the Chair has virtually decided both questions. In other words, having arrived at the conclusion the Chair has already announced, that its character of privilege adheres to this resolution and is projected over into the next day or any other day whenever the manager of it sees fit to call it up, he has, in my judgment, decided against this point of order.

This resolution comes here, therefore, in what condition? What is its status after it is called up? I say it is here exactly in the condition in which it was when the hammer fell on the adjournment of the House yesterday. What can you take away from it? What element of its status can be stripped away by the adjournment of the House? If you take away from it the fact the previous question had been demanded and the yeas and nays had been demanded and called and the House was simply engaged in procuring a quorum, you may as well take away the fact that a bill was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time, and go along its pathway and undo the legislative steps which have already been taken.

Now, my point is that the Chair having decided, and having decided properly, this resolution is here as a privileged question, called up as a matter of privilege, it comes up in exactly the same condition in which it was laid down; and if that is true, then the question of consideration can not be raised against it.

The SPEAKER. So far as the Chair is advised this is entirely a new question. The general rule of the House is that the question of consideration can be raised against any proposition when reached on the Calendar or called up, even though a privileged measure.

In the present instance the question is this: This resolution was reported from the Committee on Rules yesterday as a matter of privilege and its consideration entered upon. The previous question was demanded by a member and the yeas and nays ordered by the House, and the vote was actually being taken; in fact, according to the recollection of the Chair, two or three efforts were made to take a vote and secure a quorum, but they failed. Now, when the matter is called up again to-day, still being a matter of privilege under the rules of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] raises the question of consideration against it; and the Chair rules, though he announces this decision with some hesitation and some doubt, that under the circumstances the question of consideration can not be made against it.

Mr. REED. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 21, not voting 196; as follows:

During the roll-call, on motion of Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. HARMER, for the rest of the day.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. KETCHAM, for the rest of the day.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending the announcement of the vote, I desire to ask that my colleague, Mr. O'NEILL, be granted indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). No quorum has voted.

Mr. REED. I move a call of the House.

Mr. WILKINS. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and a joint resolution of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CRAIN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 245) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a board of engineers to select the most eligible point on the coast of Texas where a safe deep-water harbor can be secured and maintained in the shortest time and at the least cost—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: A bill (H. R. 11958) for the relief of Mary E. Jones and Fanny Burgess—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BLISS: A bill (H. R. 11959) granting an increase of pension to Abraham Dally—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE: A bill (H. R. 11960) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Aberdeen, Prairie County, Arkansas—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 11961) for the relief of William B. Burnet—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COX: A bill (H. R. 11962) for the relief of William Karger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 11963) for the relief of Sarah A. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ENLOE: A bill (H. R. 11964) for the relief of L. T. Williamson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JOSEPH: A bill (H. R. 11966) for the relief of Edward D. Loshley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANE: A bill (H. R. 11967) granting a pension to William V. Cronk—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN: A bill (H. R. 11968) to increase the pension of James Chambers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 11969) for the relief of the heirs of A. G. and B. P. Lee—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CROUSE: Petition of Michael Marchelroad, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition of Elisha P. Minshaw and of Daniel H. Wilson, of Cherokee County, and of Thomas Caldwell, of De Kalb County, Alabama, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Memorial of the board of county commissioners of Grand Forks County, Dakota, for amendment of the act of July 30, 1886, restricting special legislation in the Territories—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Petition of Robert P. Porter, late first lieutenant Company A, Third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, for correction of record of service—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEWTON: Petition of P. C. Berry, heir of J. M. Berry, of Richland Parish, Louisiana, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Papers in the case of Joseph Grantham, of Clark County, Virginia—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, for an appropriation for the construction of houses at Point Barrow, Alaska, and East Cape, Siberia, for the protection of those engaged in the whale fisheries, and for repairs to the steamers Bear and Thetis—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition of Joseph Grantham, of Clarke County, Virginia, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTSON: Petition of Palina Vignes, of St. Landry Parish, Louisiana, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions against the passage of the international copyright bill were received, and severally referred to the Committee on Patents:

By Mr. ABBOTT: Of William A. Fields, of Hillsborough, and of W. A. Garner and Philip H. Hale, of Fort Worth, Tex.

By Mr. BURROWS: Of J. J. Goodenow, of White Pigeon, Mich.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Of Brussey Biven, of Phelps, N. Y.

By Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON: Of C. B. Pendleton and of Frank H. Stout, of Florida.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Of Charles F. Heller and others, of Reading, Pa.

By Mr. FITCH: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

By Mr. FULLER: Of E. M. Ricker, of Riceville, Iowa.

By Mr. GROUT: Of Brush & Brown, of Cambridge, Vt.

By Mr. MERRIMAN: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

By Mr. SPINOLA: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

By Mr. STRUBLE: Of W. H. Wonder, of Whiting; and of A. C. Satterlee, of Hall, Iowa.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 5, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

JOSEPH E. BROWN, a Senator from the State of Georgia, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ANDREW M'DONOUGH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 19, 1888, a report of the Adjutant-General of the Army in regard to the date of enlistment and discharge of Andrew McDonough, late a soldier in a New York regiment in the Mexican war; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF JOSEPH NEUMANN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting, in pursuance of the act of Congress of July 18, 1888, making appropriations for the Agricultural Department, and for other purposes, a report by Professor Joseph Neumann, of San Francisco, Cal., upon the results of his study of and experiments with the wild native silk-worm of California; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DETROIT RIVER AND ST. CLAIR FLATS.

Mr. CULLOM. A communication was sent to the Senate in answer to a resolution of the body some time ago from the Secretary of War, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, without printing. It is a pretty important document, and I ask leave to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will indicate the document, the order to print will be made.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a communication from the Secretary of War in relation to the St. Clair Flats, in answer to a resolution which I myself introduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the common council of Seattle, Wash., praying for the admission of Washington Territory as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT.

Mr. PADDOCK. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in regard to the employment of a stenographer, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and are hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer under the resolution of the Senate of December 20, 1888, the expenses of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Ship-Canal Company of Nicaragua with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3770) for the relief of Daniel W. Boutwell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3771) for the relief of John Wagner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3772) granting a pension to William Watkins; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3773) to reconvey certain lands to the county of Ormsby, State of Nevada; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

VENEZUELAN AWARDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer two resolutions, parts of one series, really one resolution, and I ask for their present consideration.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the Senate, if not in his judgment incompatible with the public interest, any correspondence between the Government of the United States and the Government of Venezuela, or between the Secretary of State and owners of Venezuelan certificates of award or their attorneys in regard to the exchange of ratifications of the claims convention of December 3, 1885, between the United States and Venezuela, since the message of the President of the United States to the Senate of April 25, 1888.

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what steps, if any, have been taken by the Government of the United States to collect the monthly quotas of the customs receipts due to the United States under Venezuelan law on account of the Caracas awards, or to ascertain what disposition of the said monthly quotas has been made by the Venezuelan Government since the passage of the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, requesting the President of the United States to open negotiations with Venezuela for a review of the said awards.

MINING OPERATIONS IN NEVADA.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be instructed to inquire if any interruptions in mining or obstruction of mining operations have occurred in the State of Nevada on account of prosecutions recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and instituted in the name of the United States; and if so, to ascertain all the facts and circumstances connected with such prosecutions; and for that purpose said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLUMB. I think the resolution had better lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rules, and be printed.

INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. In pursuance of the notice I gave yesterday, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 122) declaring the sense of Congress in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let it be read at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not desire, unless some Senator wishes me to do so, to say anything in regard to this matter.

This joint resolution is a statement of a line of public policy adopted by the United States nearly seventy years ago. It has been announced in a more or less formal manner by almost every President of the United States since that time in the annual messages to Congress. It has always been sanctioned in various ways by Congress. It is the simplest declaration of public policy, that the Government will not view with satisfaction the establishment by any foreign government of the control over the construction of any canal across the Isthmus of Panama or in Central America.

The declaration is in a very moderate and simple form. I think the joint resolution ought to be agreed to unanimously by every member of both Houses of Congress, and I have no doubt it will receive the approbation of the President of the United States.

To discuss the subject at length would be very interesting, but we should have to go into a long and elaborate history, and I have not deemed it necessary to do so on this occasion.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations whether there are any special reasons at this time for the reassertion of this principle? I shall vote for the resolution; I think it is right; but I do not know of any special call in the conduct of foreign governments for it. If the Senator does I should be glad to know it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state the occasion that gave rise to the introduction of the joint resolution.

Undoubtedly the Panama Canal scheme is laboring under very great embarrassments. It has recently, in a measure, failed or suspended, and the authorities of France have provided for its suspension. A great many French people as well as Americans and Englishmen and people of other countries are interested in the building of the Panama Canal under a local charter. The Government of France has hitherto always disclaimed any connection with the enterprise as a government, but it has been conducted by the private management of De Lesseps and others under a Central American company. However, recently, on account of the failure of De Lesseps and the necessity of large sums of money being raised, it has been proposed by a friendly power, the Government of France, that it should itself assume the construction of this canal or undertake some control or ownership or jurisdiction over it, or exercise some power which is inconsistent with the established doctrine of the American Government.

We thought that under those circumstances it was but an act of friendly caution to express the opinion so often expressed in this country that the Government of the United States would not look with satisfaction upon the exercise of any such power. To use the language of the resolution, for it is very simple—

That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America, and must regard any such connection or control as injurious to the just rights and interests of the United States and as a menace to their welfare.

It was thought by the Committee on Foreign Relations, this public fact being known as a matter of history, that we should at least say that we can not allow the French Government to proceed to assume an act of authority or power over this canal as a government; and we announce our well-known decision upon the subject. That was the occasion. If there ever was an occasion demanding the exercise of the announcement of this doctrine it is now.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if the French Government did not disclaim some years ago any intention to participate in the work against the protest of our Government?

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe in the administration of Mr. Hayes, by Mr. Evarts the attention of the French Government was called to the position of the United States in regard to this subject-matter, and the French Government then did disclaim any purpose at all as a government to control or deal with this question; that French citizens, like the citizens of America and all other countries, contributed means and money, but that they had no governmental jurisdiction or power over it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I thought I observed some ten days ago, perhaps two weeks ago, that the French Chamber of Deputies had expressly refused to lend the assistance of the government to this canal company, and I was impressed with the fact that the French Government was really declining to assert its authority, if it had any, or to extend authority over it. Still, that does not affect the propriety of passing the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the subject of party contest and party demand in France. There are certain interests in France that would undoubtedly favor the project of the government assuming the construction of the work; at least, we have every reason to believe so. But at all events it is well enough for us to announce our opinion about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, whether there was any minority report or any dissent in committee from this resolution or concerning the necessity of its immediate passage.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was no minority report. There was some conversation, but it was hardly in the nature of dissent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All the members present concurred.

Mr. SHERMAN. All present concurred in the report.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say, in response to what the Senator from Indiana has said about the probability of the French Government refusing to take charge of this canal, that there is a very strong party in France which insists that the government shall take charge of it. I do not think there can be any question that when the people of France realize that unless their government does take charge of it the entire money put into it will be lost, they will compel the government to take charge of it unless we interfere. That has been apparent, to people who have studied this question, for the last three years. I had the honor nearly three years ago to assert on the floor of the Senate that we should be compelled to meet the question whether we are willing that the French Government should take charge of the canal and complete it or not. I think the resolution is perhaps not timely, because I think it ought to have been passed long ago.

Mr. VEST. I am compelled to state with entire frankness that I do not see why this resolution has not come here before this time, based, as it is, upon the reasons given by the Senator from Ohio. As the Senator from Colorado has just remarked, it has been very well known that for more than two years past great exertion has been made in France to secure the assistance of the government towards the Panama Canal enterprise.

As is known, the Nicaragua bill has just come to us this morning from the House of Representatives with most important amendments upon it, put there by the House, and whilst that debate was pending in the House of Representatives this resolution was introduced in the Senate.

Whilst I indorse the general principle of the Monroe doctrine as enunciated in the pending resolution, I think with the Senator from Colorado that it is untimely, and I must be permitted to say that it seems to me very much as though the resolution is an adjunct to the Nicaragua Canal scheme, to which bill as it passed the Senate I have very grave and insurmountable objections, and for which I shall never vote unless amended as it has been in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can dissipate the Senator's alarm about that by looking at the date. As far as I know this is the first time the subject of Nicaragua has been mentioned in connection with the pending resolution. The failure of the Panama Canal scheme occurred, I think, in the first week or two of December. It was looked upon as a doubtful enterprise for some time, but the failure occurred about the first week or two of December. On the 19th of December the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] introduced this joint resolution. The Committee on Foreign Relations thought best not to act upon it until after the holidays, so that public attention being called to the importance of the resolution, if there was any objection to it we would probably hear from it. Therefore, after the holidays were passed, the Committee on Foreign Relations took up the question and found that they agreed that the time was opportune, that the occasion was important, and that it ought to be promptly reported; and I hope it will be promptly passed by both Houses, without respect to the Nicaragua Canal bill, which, I imagine, in the course of things, will go into a committee of conference, and the differences, whatever they are, will be either adjusted or the bill will fail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to say with absolute candor to my friend from Missouri, as I was the author and introducer of this resolution, that the subject of the Nicaragua Canal bill to which he alludes was not in my mind at all when I offered the resolution. I prepared it and it was presented to the committee, and we considered it, having no other relation to it than it has to the Panama Canal or any other intervention of a foreign power in that passage way, if it be one, between the two oceans. So I beg him to dismiss from his mind the suspicion or any apprehension he may have that this is intended to have or that it can have any bearing upon the question of the passage or non-passage of the Nicaragua bill.

The joint resolution was induced in its introduction by the circumstance that I thought the honor and candor of the United States required us in a formal and friendly way to restate the American doctrine upon this subject before our friends and neighbors, the Republic of France, had been drawn into an official support of the De Lesseps scheme at Panama, so that they could not say to us afterwards, "You sat silent and acquiesced in our engaging in this enterprise, and you ought not now to complain;" and that the honorable thing to do as between friendly nations was for us to say now in a friendly and temperate way how we should regard the intervention, not only of France, but of any European power in the matters to which the resolution alludes.

I ask on the passage of the joint resolution, when we reach that stage, the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. When I said this was not a timely resolution, I did not desire that anybody should think I thought it should not have come here now. The fault I have to find, if any, with the committee is that it did not come here long ago. It ought to have come here and there ought to have been a declaration from this body or from the Government somewhere to the French Government (as I understand there was from the executive department of the Government, but it should have come from the legislative department of the Government long ago) that we would not permit this canal to be constructed by a foreign government.

If we had done that we should have saved the French people a vast sum of money. I doubt very much whether there was a man in the United States who had carefully examined this matter who did not know when the canal was begun that if it were ever completed it must be completed by governmental aid. I think we have waited a good while to do this, and it ought to be done now, because it is better to do it now than not to do it at all.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I hope the joint resolution will not be adopted. If there is any reason which can be vindicated upon argument and proper consideration for prohibiting any great work of beneficence to mankind I can not see how it can be brought to bear upon this question.

The construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama is a work that will promote the welfare of every human being in the world. That this Government should interpose obstacles upon the plea that it may promote the extension of monarchical institutions or the systems of government that prevail in Europe does not address itself to my mind with any kind of reasonableness.

The Monroe doctrine was predicated entirely upon the assumption that the system of European governments might be promoted by their colonization upon this hemisphere. This country is now strong enough to defy without fear of results any efforts of that kind; and it can control the matter in its diplomatic relations without preventing or obstructing the construction of this great work necessary to the commerce of the world, necessary to the cheapening of the articles of necessity, of human consumption, to every human being in this country and in every other country.

Why should not the Panama Canal be built? Does it interfere with the power of this country? Does it in any way interfere with any of its public policies? Does it increase the power of the French or any other government to restrict the extension of republican institutions or the colonization of this country by people of republican sympathy and friendly to our form of government? Its influence in that respect amounts to nothing.

In my judgment, for us to interpose any obstacle, to say that any European nation shall not contribute as a government to the construction of a great public work, is going back to the barbarous ages.

Sir, for one I am free to say that I shall regard with pleasure any effort on the part of the French Government or any other associated power to build this great work, which can only promote the welfare of every family and every human being, and increase the number of their comforts, and cheapen the productions which are necessary for them.

Mr. President, I hope that we shall not be bound by the prejudices and fears which originated years ago when this country was weak now when we can defy the world, that we should be restricted within narrow limits by European colonization upon the western hemisphere. Sir, if France should establish a monarchical government in Panama or Central America, and this country should see fit to declare that it should not be done, it would disappear in a moment. But what connection has the construction of this great work with the establishment of monarchical systems or institutions on this hemisphere?

It is not difficult to see that it has none whatever. The question of the construction of a water way over the Isthmus of Panama for the commerce of the world, and the question of monarchy or republic, of aristocratic or democratic institutions, have no connection with each other. It is even difficult to see how any one can even make a pretense to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Let the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall vote for the joint resolution with a great deal of pleasure. I regard it as a very important and a very necessary step for us to take. We have very grave and very momentous domestic problems, the solution of which requires that no power, certainly no European power, shall have any influence or control on any part of the North American continent; I do not care whether it be a monarchical government or a republican government.

I think our position and our interest require that we should so act that American influence and American power shall predominate in all parts of the North American continent, not only south of us but north of us. For that reason I shall vote with great pleasure for the joint resolution.

Mr. REAGAN. I should be glad, if agreeable, that the joint resolution may lie over a little while so as to let us have time to look at it. It bears upon a very interesting and important subject.

The governments of Europe as well as of America for the last two or three hundred years have been trying to find a passage way through the Isthmus. The project under the control of Mr. De Lesseps has gone on until many millions of dollars have been spent in trying to force a passage way through the Isthmus of Darien.

It seems to me that it is deserving of great consideration, after having permitted that work to go on until such a large amount of money has been expended, whether we should now declare it against the policy of this country to permit it to go on. What would we mean by such a declaration? Is it simply to interrupt the financial operation of carrying on that work, or if we make such declaration, is it that we mean to carry out the logic of the declaration and prevent the execution of the work?

The joint resolution presents such grave questions that it seems to me there ought to be a little time to look at it, and I trust it will be permitted to go over until the next meeting of the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio to allow the joint resolution to stand over for a week.

Mr. SHERMAN. The joint resolution has been pending here two or three weeks already. If it is to be acted upon, it ought to be acted upon promptly. I supposed that it would receive a unanimous vote without any further delay. If it is put off, it will interfere with the tariff bill. I got the consent of the Senator from Iowa to call it up this morning, and to put it over now would interrupt business and delay it. I trust, therefore, the Senate will not postpone it. Is there any doubt about it? The General Government of this country has passed time and time again upon the question.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that there are some of us upon this side of the Chamber who have very decided opinions in regard to this matter, and we should be glad to have an opportunity to mature them and express them in a more full form than we have been able to do to-day with the joint resolution suddenly called up in this way.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator from Ohio does not see proper to let the resolution go over, and demands a vote now, I will state that I just came into the Senate and did not know of the intention to move such a resolution, but I shall feel compelled, unless time is given to consider the resolution, to vote against it, because it seems to me it is too great a problem to be precipitated upon the Senate and passed without due consideration.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Texas has just said, that this is too important a matter to be considered here in the few moments that are allowed by the intermission of the consideration of the tariff bill.

The policy of the United States in regard to the interference of foreign governments on the North American continent is one that has been pretty well established, and I do not know whether this joint resolution is in exact line with that policy. Viewing this subject in its economic aspects it seems a very monstrous thing that after many millions of dollars, nearly $100,000,000, I believe, have been expended in the prosecution of this great work of uniting the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans, making a great highway for the commerce of the world in which all the civilized peoples of the earth are interested, in regard to one of those great schemes that are the advancers of the civilization of the world, we should seek to interpose by our protest without great consideration any obstacle to the consummation of so great a work.

This work at the Isthmus of Darien has so far been prosecuted, I believe, by the private enterprise and wealth of citizens of Europe and of the United States. Whether we should take any steps to oppose the control by the governments of Europe or the interference or co-operation of the governments of Europe in this great work is a matter to be very gravely considered.

I should like time to consider it in all its bearings, and would feel compelled, if the vote is forced now, to vote against the joint resolution, not knowing how I should feel called upon to vote if we had time for mature consideration. Certainly it seems to me that we should not press the resolution at this time unless some very important exigency is made apparent to the Senate for a declaration of the policy of the United States in regard to the interference of foreign governments on the territory of the North American continent.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I was detained from the Senate by illness for more than two weeks, and the same cause prevented me from attendance on the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which I am a member. So I do not know the situation in this case. I do not know whether the resolution has been to that committee or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution was reported yesterday from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not aware of the fact. I have not had any opportunity to examine it except as I saw it in print in a newspaper.

My impression was that the last clause was inopportune and premature. I refer to that part which instructs the President of the United States to communicate the declaration of Congress to foreign countries. I think that the diplomatic functions of the United States are intrusted by the Constitution to the President of the United States, and that it is his privilege (it would be the privilege of the outgoing administration and also of the incoming administration) to shape for itself and without any distinct reference to the opinions of Congress what would be the policy of that administration upon a great subject of diplomatic intercourse between other countries and the United States. What we do here, whether we do it in the form of a joint or concurrent resolution—I suppose this is a concurrent resolution——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. What we do in the form of a joint resolution here is to endeavor to embody as a part of the law of the land our opinion upon a question of policy in respect of the application of the Monroe doctrine to some part of the American hemisphere. It would be very much better, if the Senate and House are determined that they will express an opinion to a foreign government, that they should do it in the form of a concurrent resolution rather than a joint resolution, which under our Constitution has the force and effect of a law. It would be an unfortunate category that we would find ourselves involved in if a law should be put upon the statute-book at this time which was declarative of the policy of the United States in regard to the particular enterprise which we are considering, the construction of a canal by the authority and through the intervention of a foreign government, and after we had come to that resolution and put it in the form of a law the incoming administration would not see proper to execute it, but would fall back upon the constitutional powers, which unquestionably will belong to the incoming President, to shape that policy so far as his administration is concerned for himself.

I think that we ought not to go further in any declaration that we make than to adopt a concurrent resolution, because, after all, any declaration that we may make upon this subject is only a matter of opinion, not binding upon any subsequent Congress, not binding upon the outgoing or the incoming President, unless the outgoing President should see proper to put his signature to the joint resolution and thereby become compromitted in respect of its terms and his duty of acting upon it.

It seems to me that this is wrong; that we are going too far; that the Senate of the United States is usurping to itself, in the form and shape that the resolution now is, a part of the diplomatic function of this Government intrusted by the Constitution to the President of the United States.

The declarations of the Senate upon subjects of this kind, whenever they become in the least degree practical and obligatory, are declarations that must command the support of two-thirds of this body; otherwise they are of no validity. I think it is decidedly premature that we should undertake now, in the form of a law, to forestall whatever action the Senate might see proper to exercise hereafter, after the 4th of March, for instance, when quite a considerable body of new Senators are to be here. The furthest we ought to go in this direction would be to declare what our opinions are upon this subject and let them go for what they are worth. I think those opinions would be worth a good deal in the impression that they would make upon foreign countries. They would be somewhat in the nature of a restatement of the Monroe doctrine, to which I am a firm adherent.

But I object to putting these opinions in such form as would trammel any part of the Government of the United States in the legitimate exercise of its constitutional powers hereafter. I do not think that it is a proper thing to be done. The Senate of the United States is too much given to attempting the control of the diplomatic enterprises of this country. When this resolution goes, as it is required to go by the last clause in it, if I remember it correctly, to the foreign countries as a declaration of Congress, approved by the President of the United States, it goes as a measure originating in the Senate of the United States and expressing the opinions of the Senate and of the Congress of the United States if it shall become a law.

The requirement that this shall be sent to foreign countries is equivalent to a demand on the part of Congress that the President of the United States shall not only conform his diplomatic action to the expressions that are contained in this resolution as to matters of principle, but that he shall go further than that and commit himself to it absolutely and commit the Government to it absolutely. It is a forestalling of diplomatic action on the part of the President of the United States in his future intercourse with foreign countries.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. President, that while we are entirely free to express our opinions, and will be entirely free always to express our opinions, we should abstain from putting them in this mandatory form. It is not a part of our province to command the President of the United States to make any special communication to foreign countries in respect of a matter which is the proper subject of diplomatic conference and discussion, and when we assume to ourselves the function of this instructing and commanding the President of the United States to observe a certain line of diplomacy, and communicate it as an authentic matter established by the votes of the two Houses, it occurs to me that we may very well question whether we are occupying that precise attitude under the Constitution which is assigned to us in respect of our diplomatic functions and diplomatic power in this Government. I do not believe in the policy or the propriety of our taking in hand the diplomatic action of the Government of the United States, and thus, through legislative action on our part, requiring it to be communicated by the President of the United States in solemn authentic form to foreign governments. I think there is danger in such a movement as that, and that we had better not make it.

Now, sir, I am heartily in accord with the first part of the resolution, and have no hesitancy in expressing the opinion, as it is expressed here, that it is the duty of the United States to intervene to prevent any foreign government from getting any such hold upon this western hemisphere as will give it, in consequence of its committal to a certain line of enterprise, governmental authority that it does not now possess. I very well understand, I think, that if the Government of France should, for the purpose of relieving the necessities and distress of Mr. De Lesseps and of his coadjutors in this work, come in as a government to aid them by any assumption it may make of the responsibilities he has already incurred and under which he has failed so far—I can very well understand that the Government of France in such a proceeding would necessarily exercise its governmental functions in Panama. You would have to make room for the authoritative action of two governments there before France could carry this enterprise into execution.

The Government of Colombia, with its present power and authority, its sovereignty over that country, would be forced to yield, either by treaty engagements, concession, or in some other way, to the governmental authority that France might choose to exercise in promoting this enterprise in Panama which the French Chamber would decree that government should engage in. That would necessarily, it seems to me, sooner or later bring about a conflict of authority between the governments; and I can not fail to understand that the weak power of Colombia would succumb to the greater military power of France in such an event as I have stated, and that the ultimate result would be French domination in Panama, and perhaps an extension of that domination to other States in what is now the Republic of Colombia.

So I would resist in the beginning, I would resist always, the intrusion of a trans-Atlantic government into Panama for any purpose of a governmental character connected with the construction or, if you please, the operation of a canal. But that is not the question that is presented upon the face of this resolution to my mind, or at least it is not the only one. That question, which is a very clear one to my comprehension, is embarrassed by the form in which this resolution is presented and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is embarrassed by the fact that it is a joint resolution when it should be no more, at least, than a concurrent resoluion. It is further embarrassed by the fact that it is a dictation to the executive branch of this Government that it shall observe in respect to this matter a certain line of policy which cuts off all negotiation or explanation, which cuts off in fact all diplomatic intercourse between two governments on this point. It is a dictation, a direct and mandatory dictation to the President of the United States, not only that he shall conform his policy to what is here prescribed, but that he shall make a communication of that policy in solemn form to a foreign government; and that is an attitude which I think the Congress of the United States has no right to occupy at this particular moment upon this particular question. I think the circumstances would have to be very extreme to justify such action in any case whatever.

So, Mr. President, if the resolution is pressed in its present form I shall vote against it.

Mr. REAGAN. If I may be indulged one moment, I wish to say that the resolution, it seems to me, needs something to explain the meaning of the particular words in it before we commit the Senate and the Government of the United States to its adoption. It is:

That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien.

Now, sir, what is meant by "connection?" If Senators mean that we shall look with disapproval on any attempt at political control on this continent, then I am ready to agree with them fully; but it seems to me that if we had time to consider this question it would be worth while to reflect on the distinction between aid given an enterprise presented by a corporation made up of citizens of France, the United States, and perhaps other countries, where no political control is intended. I understand there has been some proposition for action by the French Republic; I do not know how that is; I am ignorant of it; but if this language means that the French Republic should in no way guaranty bonds to aid this company in carrying out the great work in which it has spent so many millions of dollars, and in which the world at large and the United States have such a large interest, I must dissent from it.

It seems to me that the language is too broad, too unrestricted, to be justified at all; that it does not discriminate between pecuniary aid to a commercial enterprise like that and the assumption of political control over the enterprise or the territory through which it passes. And, Mr. President, the memories of a hundred years ago ought to inspire us with some respect for the French people. The knowledge that it is the only prominent Republic in Europe ought to give us some sympathy with that Republic. We ought not to be willing to offer an unnecessary offense to a government which has under the greatest trials proven itself the greatest friend of this Republic.

It seems to me, sir, that the very broad general language used here would be calculated to offend the sense of right not only of France but of any other government or people, unless it is restricted so as to simply limit the declaration to political control.

I do not know how many millions have been spent in the construction of the Panama Canal, but its completion will work a larger revolution upon the commerce of the world than the completion of the Suez Canal did. I do not know to what extent there has been diplomatic correspondence with reference to the action of this company on that canal, or whether there has been any; but whether there has been or not is not material to the view I take now, that it would be going too far for us to make a pronunciamiento against any connection of that or any other government with the construction of a ship-canal—I will omit the word "control"—with the construction of a ship-canal across the Isthmus. No country is so much interested in the success of that work as the United States. Here we stand on the half-way ground between Western Europe with all her vast wealth and commerce and the teeming millions of Asia. It places our country in the gateway of that great commerce; and shall we uselessly, shall we unnecessarily, shall we officiously attempt to interfere with and arrest the progress of that work?

I feel very sure that the introducer of this resolution and the committee who reported it would not lend themselves to a mere stock-jobbing proposition to discredit that work in order to increase the value of the stock of an enterprise engaged in by another concern. I can not conceive that they would be influenced by such a consideration as that. I am disposed to guard the rights of this Government upon the continent of North America as declared in what we call the Monroe doctrine, but the Monroe doctrine never went to the extent that this resolution goes. It looked to the exertion of political control on the American hemisphere, not to any mere effort to aid in an enterprise to develop the commerce of the world and promote the welfare of mankind.

I regret that we are to be called upon to act and vote upon a question like this without at all having had time to consider it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, in whatever view this resolution is considered, it ought not to be passed by this body without careful consideration. If there be anything in the resolution of sincerity, if it is intended to declare a public policy on the part of this Government, we should be careful to see whether it does not enunciate a ground for war on the part of other people, and of unjust war, a war in which we could not be sustained by the moral sentiment of the age and the world. What is it that this resolution declares?

That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America.

What harm will the construction of a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or Central America do to the people of the Isthmus of Darine or of Central America that we shall say to them, "You shall not if you desire it have the aid of any foreign government to construct this canal?" What harm to the people of Europe will a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or Central America do that we shall say to them at the point of the cannon's mouth, "We forbid the construction of a ship-canal or the connection of any European government with the construction of that canal?" How can we in the face of the world sustain ourselves in defying every foreign government upon a proposition of this character, and saying to them, "You shall not do that which the people of Central America or the Isthmus of Darien require, and which their welfare and happiness require shall be done?"

These people have a sovereign government of their own, in all respects resting on the basis of their own sovereign will, as our Government does on the sovereign will of our own people, and on the ground of rightful authority of their own people, which we have declared in the face of all the world that we will respect and honor.

And we say further by the passage of this resolution not only that we will deny to them the right to do that which the interests of all Europe and of every man in America require to be done, namely, the construction of that canal, but also that we will make war upon them and on all Europe, and thereby prevent the construction of a canal required by the commercial interests of every people in the world and of every man, woman, and child in the United States. In whose interest is it that commerce shall be obstructed by preventing a canal or water way across the Isthmus of Darien, or that the transit across the Isthmus shall be in the hands of a private corporation either here or abroad? Is it in the interests of the people who consume the articles which will be the subject of that commerce, or is it in the interests of monopoly, of oppression, of privileged classes, of private individuals? Why, Mr. President, there can be no question or doubt upon that subject. The opposition to the construction of a ship-canal, whether by one form of associated effort or another, is a movement in the interest of the few against the many, against the progress of civilization, and against all the best interests of mankind.

Why talk about the Monroe doctrine to preserve this continent for popular government, and under cover of it propose the most gigantic monopoly in the interests of aristocracy the world has ever seen?

It is attempted to be justified here by alluding to the Monroe doctrine, by saying that we are opposed to any European people in any form of government exercising or acquiring any influence upon this hemisphere. Mr. President, is there anything in that proposition? What do you mean by influence? Who now control the social, commercial, the industrial interests everywhere in this hemisphere outside of the United States of America? Foreign nations and European nations, European money, European commerce, European social influence. We have none whatever over them. If it is to be asserted that no European people shall do it, it is a mere idle declaration, because to-day the commerce, the financial interests of every people upon this hemisphere, except the people of the United States, are within the control of European governments.

Why, then, issue a brutum fulmen? Do you propose to make war to annex forcibly those people? I have no opposition to the project of annexation, but whatever we do let it be done sincerely, and not as mere vain braggadocio and an untruthful assertion. You do not control it, you do not propose to assume military or political control of it. What is it that you propose in this resolution? Why, only to say that no European government shall contribute anything to a work of great international necessity. It is to have no "connection" with such a work. Why should not a European government have connection with it? If you wish to prevent any injurious effects from French influence, or English influence, or German influence, or European influence—and I can see no injury whatever to come from it—why not say that the great canal across the Isthmus of Darien or Central America shall be controlled by the nations of the earth, under some form of international commission, so that neither separate and selfish national policies nor private interests or monopolies may advantage one people over another in the use of that great artery of commerce?

Mr. President, the people in all the Gulf States are greatly interested in the construction of this canal. They are interested to prevent its arbitrary use to their exclusion and to their injury; but this resolution does not look in that direction. It does not affirm anything as to the proper use of the canal. Its only effect and apparent purpose is to prevent the construction of any canal across the Isthmus of Darien or Central America, except a canal in the interest of some particular corporation designated and created in our own country. What man is there, what Senator here, that can give a reason why the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama or Central America, properly used, would not be a benefit to every citizen of the United States? There can be none given. The assumption is that a foreign government might make an improper use of it.

What is the answer to that proposition? The sensible answer is to introduce a resolution here that the canal shall be under the control of some international regulation in which this Government shall have a voice, with power to prevent it from being so used. That is the reply to that which is the only possible reason for the adoption of any resolution on this subject. So far from doing that which the Senate resolution proposes, as a civilized people, instead of saying that these people of Central and South America shall have none of the advantages of industrial development, of civilization, of railroad interests, or of the great combinations which produce these public works, instead of saying that they shall not have them unless they can get them without a "connection" with European governments, we should be willing to come forward and contribute our part as a government if we wish their friendship. This resolution asserts a right to deny to the people of Central and South America and all over America any assistance from any European government in any of their public enterprises. It is entirely indefensible, having no foundation unless it be the idea that these people are not strong enough to resist any demand, however capricious and unreasonable, that we may make of them. When the day comes to require it, whatever is necessary will be done to prevent any foreign government that may have acquired influence or connection of any kind with the people of this hemisphere from the use of that influence unfriendly to our people. We may then assert our right to a voice in securing whatever the interests and the welfare of this people may rightfully demand to be done. But to say now, after nearly a hundred years of vain and false assertion, that no European government shall have any connection with or any influence upon this hemisphere, industrial, commercial, or political, is to repeat a false assertion in the face of the fact that every day the influence of European governments upon this continent has been increasing over the governments and the people of this continent and the hemisphere. It is not only vain but it is ridiculous. In Mexico, in all Central and South America our commercial reports, the reports of commissioners which we have sent there state the fact that to-day the governments upon this continent and their people outside of the United States are dependent upon the influence of European governments and their connections with their affairs. They largely shape even their political relations and their policy as states. It is to our shame that it should be said, but it does not need to strengthen us in those directions that we shall declare that no great industrial improvement such as a canal across the Isthmus of Panama shall be constructed.

Why, Mr. President, if there be one work in all the world which the civilization of this age demands, which the future welfare of the population that is now inhabiting our country and is soon to increase to such vast numbers requires, it is this canal. If there is one thing in the world that is absolutely necessary to the population that shall soon cover the whole of Mexico and Central America, largely derived from Europe, if there is one thing in the world that is necessary to the comfort of all of Europe and all of Asia, it is the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama, no matter by whom it is done, whether it is by governments or private associations; and the only important thing is how shall that canal be managed so that it shall be used fairly and justly and equally in the interests of all nations and upon terms easy for the commerce of the world that is to bear the cost of the construction and maintenance of it, and that means easy to the consumers of the products of that commerce, wheresoever they may be.

It is the one great work of the age, and De Lesseps has immortalized himself as a man who stands high on the list of human benefactors. What has the Suez Canal done! What a contribution has that great work made to the welfare of mankind! How it has altered commercial relations, how it has disturbed some of the great connections of commerce and of transportation and business, has been pointed out by Mr. David A. Wells in his able review of this question. While the disturbance from this cause has been a present loss, it is a future gain the proportions of which can hardly be estimated to every man, woman, and child in the world. This other great work of his should be encouraged instead of being discouraged by the idle assertions of this resolution, which are utterly untrue, for no Senator now dares to assert that he would pledge this Government to an offensive war for the purpose of preventing the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama; but if that resolution is sincere that is what it says if it says anything and if it means anything. If you wish to deter a foreign government from any connection and control over the canal why not say "any improper control," any "arbitrary control," or "political control?"

The construction of the canal and the improper or unfair use and control of it, either for commercial or political purposes, are very distinct and different things, but this resolution assumes that they are the same.

It is easy to adjust these relations. The old idea was to assert that no forcible control or domination by European governments should be had on this continent; and certainly it was very wise policy to declare that no hostile action of any European government should establish its monarchical and aristocratic system upon this continent against the wishes of the people. In view of the historical relations of the races in Panama and Central America, of the conquest of Spain, and the forcible occupation of the different portions of this hemisphere by European nations, it was proper that this Government, a republic based upon another and different system, and recognizing the right of the people alone to rule, should interpose to prevent the forcible exercise of sovereignty over them by a European power; but how can we, maintaining the doctrine of free speech, of free institutions, and the right of every people to their own government, say to these people, "You shall not have any connection with European governments if you desire it?" What wisdom or what policy is there in that?

The Monroe doctrine never went to that extent. It would have been absurd. It is a violation of the very principles upon which this Government is based, the principle that a people have a right to choose their own form of government, and the right of a people as an independent people to establish their own connections with foreign people. It was never asserted, and you can not put that as a predicate for this resolution asserting our right to say that the people of Panama and of Central America shall not accept the aid of a foreign government for the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama, and that we, the people of the United States, will make war upon them to prevent them from doing it. Our own Declaration of Independence asserts the right of every people to establish their own form of government and manage their own affairs; and to say that it threatens, menaces our existence and our welfare for a people to exercise the right of self-government and of managing their own affairs, with this declaration of our own right of sovereignty and independence, is to stultify ourselves. The Monroe doctrine made no such statement as this. The wise men who directed our public affairs were too near the war of the Revolution, in which they had risked their own lives to maintain a contrary doctrine, to have made such a declaration.

Mr. President, there is no reason from any point of view, either of the future growth and prosperity of this country or the friendly relations with other countries, with South America or Central America, the friendly relations of this country with the people of Europe, why this resolution should be passed. It defies equally the beneficence of this work itself, the welfare of the people of this country or of the world, and the right of all the nations and governments of the two Americas. There is no point of view in which this resolution is not utterly indefensible and without a solitary reason to support it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the objections made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to this resolution are rather technical in their character, and it seems to me are not very important. The form of the resolution is a matter, to me at least, of indifference, although I think the proper way is to put it in the strongest form, to give it the highest sanction possible. A joint resolution is the act of the President, the House of Representatives, and the Senate; and as this is a declaration of public policy, it ought to emanate from all the branches and departments of the Government that participate in making laws from the President down. If a concurrent resolution only was adopted, it would be simply the expression of the opinion of the two Houses of Congress, to which the President would not have to assent. His assent would not be called for, nor would it be proper for him to assent. I do not see any difference whether it shall take the form of a Senate resolution and only be the expression of the opinion of one body, a very important body, though, in making treaties, or a resolution of the two Houses, or of the two Houses conjoined with the President. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] draughted this resolution, put it in the form of a joint resolution, and so it stands.

I think there is nothing in that point, but I am rather surprised that the Senator from Alabama should take the ground that we can not dictate the policy of the President so as to restrain him to some extent in the direction of his negotiations. We can not take from him the treaty-making power; no one proposes to do that; but Congress can define the policy of this Government upon any question within its power, clearly so; and it is rather surprising to me that the Senator from Alabama should seem to care so much for the power of the President, which is purely an executive power, sharing with us, it is true, the legislative power only to a certain extent. When Congress (which includes the President) declares a public policy, the President is bound to conform in his negotiations to that policy; otherwise he would violate the will of the people as expressed in Congress. There is not anything, therefore, in the point made by the Senator from Alabama as to the form of the resolution.

I am absolutely indifferent about it as a member of the committee, but as the committee reported it as a joint resolution I hope it will so stand, because it combines the strongest form of expression in which we can declare this public policy, that is, by a joint resolution of Congress instead of a mere concurrent resolution or a resolution of the Senate alone.

As to the matter to be declared, I am happy to say that the Senator from Alabama agrees with me entirely. I find that he introduced a resolution in 1881 which was finally reported unanimously from the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which he was then a member. I will read the first part of the report embodying the resolution:

That the subject embraced in the resolution is one of great national importance, and worthy of the most careful consideration.

This report was made by Mr. Burnside from the Committee on Foreign Relations May 16, 1881. I will say that was the time when De Lesseps was beginning his work on the Panama Canal. It was the subject of discussion, and a correspondence had occurred between the then Secretary of State, now present, a member of the Senate [Mr. EVARTS], and the Government of France, in which France disclaimed any purpose to exercise any power or control over the canal, and the matter proceeded upon that disclaimer. Then this resolution was introduced by the Senator from Alabama:

Resolved, That the interests of the people of the United States of America and the welfare and security of their Government are so involved in the subject of the construction of ship-canals and other ways for the transportation of sea-going vessels across the isthmus connecting North and South America that the Government of the United States, with the frankness which is due to all other peoples and governments, hereby asserts that it will insist that its consent is a necessary condition-precedent to the execution of any such project; and also as to the rules and regulations under which other nations shall participate in the use of such canals or other ways, either in peace or in war.

This resolution in some of its provisions goes further than the proposition now made to the Senate. The present resolution simply declares, in language which I think can not be made plainer—I will read in connection with the resolution just read:

That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America, and must regard any such connection or control as injurious to the just rights and interests of the United States and as a menace to their welfare.

It must be perceived that the resolution of the Senator from Alabama was much stronger, much more comprehensive than the language of the resolution now before us.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to ask a question? I want to ask him about the resolution he has been reading, whether it was a concurrent or a joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. A resolution of the Senate, as I understand.

Mr. GRAY. Did it pass the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. That I am not prepared to say. I am reading from the report. I do not know. The Senator from Alabama can say. It was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand the Senator from Ohio to say that is a resolution that has passed the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Delaware must understand that I am now replying to the Senator from Alabama as to the form of the resolution, not whether another resolution was formerly passed or not.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator will pardon me for interrupting him. The resolution he has just read is a matter of interest, and I asked for information whether the resolution he has read, offered in 1881, passed the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not able to inform the Senator, because, as I said before, the correspondence which had gone on between the two governments made the question a comparatively unimportant one, as the French Government announced in the most decisive manner its purpose not to interfere with the construction or control of the canal, and as a matter of course that ended the matter. I do not believe that the resolution passed the Senate, but it is in the form of a Senate resolution. I quote from the report:

This resolution was unanimously reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations by Hon. William W. Eaton, its chairman, at the last session of the Senate, but was not acted upon for want of time, and was again brought before the Senate at this session by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Whether it was passed or not I do not know. I merely show that the form of the pending resolution is less objectionable than any other proposition which has ever been made on this subject.

I am surprised at the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. He says that this resolution simply declares that nobody shall aid; that the Government of France shall not aid the construction of this canal; that nobody shall aid; that, like the dog in the manger, we are standing here and will not build this canal ourselves and will not let anybody else build it. That is not the position I wish to occupy. I should like to see all the peoples of the world contribute by voluntary means, by private corporations, by any agency whatever that does not involve governmental control, in the construction of the Panama and Nicaragua Canals. I believe the construction of both of these canals is a necessity of the progress of our country and of the continent of America, and that in time, however far distant, it will be accomplished.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather not in the midst of a sentence.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Just in that connection I wish to ask the Senator a question. According to my understanding of the statement of what he would like, he would be perfectly willing to have all the nations connected with the construction of this canal, but no foreign governments to have any control of it, as I understand. If this resolution should be amended by striking out the words "construction or," where they appear in the fifth and seventh lines, it would seem to me to make it much less objectionable, and I suggest that change to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. Whenever a government like that of France, or the United States, or Great Britain, steps in and is allowed to assert its power to do a thing as a nation, to assist in the construction of a public improvement in another country, the assertion of that power by the government can be followed by the exercise of the power of defending that improvement. Therefore, as a matter of course, if you once yield the ground you occupy and say that the Government of France may step in and guaranty the loan of the De Lesseps company and furnish the money, then by all the laws of war and of peace the Government of France may follow that money and protect it and defend it against all the powers of the world. If you allow it to be done, if you allow this rule which you were so anxous to observe for seventy years to be once broken down, you depart from the old idea that no longer shall foreign governments exercise a domination or power in this hemisphere except so far as they then exercised it; when you abandon that doctrine you abandon all the safeguards of the future.

So far as private contributions to these enterprises go, I make no objection. I think that Mr. De Lesseps is entitled to the greatest sympathy. Indeed, I am very sorry he can not go on and finish this work, if it is possible to be finished, though I have some doubts whether, without the expenditure of a fabulous sum, a canal can be made from sea to sea across the Isthmus of Panama. If he can do it, everybody will be glad.

What I object to, and what this resolution objects to and expresses the opinion of the people of the United States upon, the general opinion of this country, is that any European government, whether republican or monarchical, shall step in there and have control and power over this canal. That is all there is of it.

I do not think that the passage of this resolution would have a bad influence. I think it would have a friendly influence. The Government of France evidently hesitates about action, and if we only open the door a little wider they will step in, in sympathy with their citizens who have invested their money here, and then you will have one of the great European powers planting its flag and its money and its commerce on that narrow isthmus between the Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans. That is against the policy declared by Mr. Monroe, reaffirmed by General Jackson, and in more or less distinct form by every President of the United States from that time to this, especially by Mr. Buchanan, who maintained it, and also by the administration of President Hayes and by the declaration of General Garfield in his inaugural address. But the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] proposes to abandon that policy. It seems to me that it is not wise to do so. For one I am ready, in any form in which it may be presented, whether in the form of a resolution of the Senate or of a concurrent resolution or a joint resolution, to declare that the public policy of our fathers shall be the policy of the future.

I have so much respect for the Senator from Alabama that when he asserted that he would like to relieve the President of the United States from joining in this declaration, I should be very glad to say, "Very well. If that is all the difficulty in the way, and that will let the President out and relieve him from that responsibility, make it a concurrent resolution." It will be just as strong in effect, but I do not think it is the best, nor do I doubt but what the President of the United States will upon an examination of the question be very willing to underscore his name to the action of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, as I remarked awhile ago, I have not had an opportunity to look over the history of this transaction and recall all the facts connected with it that I should like to be possessed of in this debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I do not interrupt the Senator, I should like to make one remark further, which I intended to make before I sat down, and that is that so far as I am concerned—I am but one member of that committee who reported this resolution—I shall be willing to let this go over until Monday and let the Senator, who is not at present prepared to consider it, examine it, but I do not think we ought on a question of this kind to procrastinate.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall be glad to let it go over until Monday, but before I take my seat I wish to make an observation.

As I remember the history of this matter, in 1881, when the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] was Secretary of State, the President sent in a very urgent and decisive declaration of policy on the subject of this Panama Canal and the general question of transit across the Isthmus by a ship-canal, which seemed to require some response on the part of Congress. As I remember, Mr. Eaton, then a Senator from Connecticut, was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and he brought in a resolution at one session of Congress, which went before the committee and was reported back favorably without any further action, I believe, on the part of the Senate, and at the next session the same resolution, or one perhaps a little modified and in the form just read by the Senator from Ohio—a resolution of the Senate, not even a concurrent resolution, as I recall the fact—was presented, and that resolution was reported back unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Relations at that stage of the proceeding and was not acted upon, as it should have been. The Senate ought then to have made its declaration, which is in terms, I think, equivalent to the declaration found in the first of these resolutions. I do not see the difference. There is no marked difference certainly, but we did not respond as a Senate to that resolution or to the suggestions made by the then Executive, Mr. Hayes. It would have been very fortunate, I expect, if we had then taken that ground, for perhaps it would have checked at that time the expenditure of large masses of money. Of course we do not care so much about that as far as the United States or the people of the United States are concerned, but it would have avoided the committal of the people of a foreign country to an enterprise that was always impracticable and in such a way that it was very apt to draw the Government of France at a later day into the support of that measure.

Now, we find that that canal has been constructed in part after an expenditure of largely over one hundred millions in money—I do not know how much, but it must be considerably over one hundred millions of money—and we encounter the question——

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was not all spent on the canal, my friend will allow me to state, for a very enormous sum, as the statistics show, was spent in the United States for some purpose or another.

Mr. MORGAN. I know. I understand there was a syndicate in the United States for such purposes as we know not of, to operate in conjunction with Mr. De Lesseps in the promotion of this canal project. I understand that.

When that money had been expended the people of France were very much concerned in it, and to them it is a very serious and practical matter, and we interpose a resolution here—to which I do not object; I do not object to an expression in it—which is to the effect that notwithstanding the people of France have got into this embarrassing attitude about this canal and the expenditure of money upon it, the Government of France must not assume to control and construct it, as a government; otherwise we will hold that that is a violation of the Monroe doctrine, or whatever doctrine you may please to call it, the essential doctrine of the people of the United States in respect of the intervention of foreign governments upon this hemisphere. We look upon it as a step which once taken can not be recalled, but will be advanced upon and will result in the political domination of the Central American isthmus.

Now, however, the Senator from Ohio will allow me to suggest that there is a very serious difficulty in the way of passing a joint resolution——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Alabama will pardon me for suggesting as this matter is to go over until Monday—and I consent to that with the hope and understanding on my part that it will be finished then—that this is business which if done at all ought to be done promptly and finished, as the other ought to have been. I think if my friend will withhold his opposition to the second section of the joint resolution, I can convince him from reason and from historic precedents that it is not only important in point of dignity and the impression of the whole body of the Government of the United States, but that it is entirely consistent with the constitutional attitude of the President of the United States as regards his relations with the two Houses of Congress. I think I can convince my friend that that second section is important as a matter of substance and is correct in respect to the relations that exist between the two Houses and the President.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator from Vermont, then, adhere to his determination to press this as a joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is my present duty to do that, and I think I can convince my friend between now and Monday, and that he will be satisfied that it shall go in that way, and that it is right to do it in that way.

Mr. MORGAN. I intended to offer some amendments to the resolution, but at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, as the matter is to go over, I will not offer the amendments until later.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Ohio to allow the resolution to stand over until Monday week. I shall be compelled to be absent next week, and I feel some interest in the matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is impossible.

Mr. SHERMAN. This declaration ought to be made promptly or not at all. I have no objection to a postponement to Monday next, but can not let it go beyond that.

Mr. CALL. I do not know that it will make any difference, but as I can not be here on Monday, I will now add a few words to what I have already said on the subject.

The Senator from Ohio in the discussion of this joint resolution and the reasons why it should be passed has not, in my opinion, given a single one which touches the merits of the question. He says that this resolution does not object to any connection whatever on the part of a foreign government, but only to the improper control or use of this canal when built, that he would be in favor of a control by the nations of the earth, the commercial peoples, fixing the terms upon which this canal should be used, and that this resolution does not mean to say that we will not do it ourselves as a government and that no other people shall, although the people of Panama and Central America may, in their sovereign right and capacity, demand it, but that it means something else. Then this body owes it to its own dignity, to its own intelligence, the Senator from Ohio owes it to his own great reputation that he should express the resolution in that way. It says clearly—

That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European Government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America, etc.

Mr. President, is it dignified for those who represent and control the sovereign powers of legislation, of peace and war, of a great nation in this age, to put forth a declaration of this kind, that this Government looks with serious disapproval upon any connection of a European government, at the solicitation and request of a sovereign people independent themselves in all the powers that we possess, with the people of Central America and of the Isthmus of Darien, and that we deny to them and disapprove of their acceptance of any connection with any foreign government in this great work of constructing a highway for all the world? We are supposed to use language for intelligible purposes. Who can justify such a declaration? What portion of the argument of the Senator from Ohio upon this resolution pretends to justify or defend that proposition? But it is plainly asserted in the resolution.

Have not the people of Central America the right to accept aid from a foreign government in the construction of this canal? Have they not the right to negotiate for a connection with France, as they have done, by the exercise of their sovereign power as a people? Who denies it? But this resolution says that it is a menace to the people of the United States that the people of Central America should in their sovereign legislative national capacity accept any connection of a foreign government in the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Darien. That is the unquestionable language of the declaration, and what does that mean but a sovereign declaration of this people by the two Houses of Congress, unless it is a false declaration, that we will make war upon the people of any portion of this hemisphere, upon the people of Central America especially, who shall exercise their powers in such a way as to bring about a connection of that kind with a European government? And that is the declaration that we are told is the Monroe doctrine. I deny it.

The doctrine of our fathers never asserted a proposition of this kind. They never asserted our absolute right of domination over the people of this hemisphere, over the people of Central America, and we know that this is a false declaration and is not intended, and ought not to be intended, to be observed. We know that a European government has forcibly established its domination, since the Monroe doctrine was proclaimed, over a part of Central America, and maintains it in full and absolute and undisturbed sovereign power to-day without war on the people of the United States, without our support of that declaration, if it was intended so to apply, and it has existed for years and years in British Honduras.

Mr. President, after submitting to that, when a great work of beneficence, which can only be opposed in the interest of private corporations and private monopoly, in the interest of the oppression of the people, we can not now assert this doctrine. You can not make this comport with the dignity of the Government of the United States. Shall we, having submitted to this violation of the Monroe doctrine, as declared by this resolution, when a great work for the benefit of the civilization of the world, for the better comfort of every human being, is commenced and partially built, intervene and say we will thrust the Monroe doctrine in your face, and we deny the right of the people of any of these governments to accept of any connection with or aid from any European government in the construction of this great work?

That is the question. It is not a question about the doctrine of our forefathers. That we have not maintained that as the doctrine of our fathers the history of the country establishes. It is not true; it is a mere assertion. The Monroe doctrine in its terms declares that the Government of the United States is opposed to the domination—that is the word—the domination, not the connection, not the contribution of any foreign government, not the expenditure of its money, but to the domination upon any portion of this continent where it had not previous to that time obtained power and control.

But, Mr. President, it is said if the Government of France expends its money in the construction of this canal it will have a right to defend the rights which it has so acquired. Well, that may lead to war. Has not the Government of France or the Government of England the right to defend the rights of their citizens in all these countries of Central and South America when they have invested their money there, as they have done under the treaty regulations with those countries, and would not that lead to war? There is nothing in it; whether it is the money of the people or the money of the government is the same thing, and South America and Central America and Mexico are full of the money of British subjects and French citizens and German subjects today, and there is none of the money of the people of the United States there. They are doing the work of civilization under treaty regulations and under the exercise of the sovereign power of the people of those several governments to-day; and the assertion that we propose forcibly and by war to forbid it is equally unwise, equally untrue, and unjustifiable in every view of public policy.

The Monroe doctrine has nothing to do with the question of the construction of a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or Central America. The interest and dignity of the Government of the United States have nothing to do with it except that they should promote it, should expend their money for it, should encourage it. There may be some question of wise public policy in saying that it shall be controlled by an international commission, by regulations established by the nations of the world, and the resolution of the Senator from Alabama wisely so declared.

But that is a different thing from this resolution and this enunciation. I should be willing to support such a proposition as that. The interest of mankind may require it. The progress of this country may require it. Our States on the Gulf of Mexico, and all the other States of the United States, especially California and the Pacific coast, are vitally interested in the great fact of the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama. When the comfort of every citizen and of the family of every producer upon the Pacific coast of the United States demands this interoceanic connection, when all the interests of our people favor it, and nothing opposes it except the interest of a few private corporations engaged in transportation by rail and rival canal enterprises, when nothing else opposes it, for us to say that we object to the construction of it, or of any foreign, European government being connected with it or aiding it in any shape or form is suicidal. For myself I wish to say that while I know nothing about the syndicates said to have existed in this country, and never heard of them before, connected with the De Lesseps enterprise, I consider that the great work of the age. I regard the construction of this canal across the Isthmus of Panama, if it be practicable—and upon that we have no right to express a prejudiced judgment; it has been pronounced practicable by the most distinguished engineering ability of the world; it has been undertaken, like the canal at Suez, in the face of opposition and criticism, and it has had the support of the best intelligence and the highest ability—as highly desirable and of the first importance to the people of the United States and of all the world. So far from obstacles being interposed, we should invite and encourage European governments to do the work, and should join them and assist in the work.

It may have been improperly and uneconomically managed, but it is the great work of the age. If it be possible to accomplish it, no amount of human labor, no amount of human effort or of financial ability should fail to be expended upon it.

Mr. President, I shall welcome for one the aid of any European government or the aid of any private corporation or of any individual citizen in any great public work which will benefit the great masses of mankind. I wish these old fictions that related to the barbarous ages had disappeared. This is the age of industrial triumph. This is the age of intellectual success. It is the age of benevolence and beneficence. For this country to undertake to say that we will deny the right of the people of Central America to accept of any aid, of any connection with any European government in the construction of the great works necessary for their industrial development and for the industrial development of all the peoples of the world, is, I think, going back to the dark ages, and unworthy of that Government and that people which should be foremost in all that advances civilization, the arts of peace, the triumphs of mind over matter, and the subjugation of the earth and the seas and all the elements to the use and comfort and happiness of all nations and peoples of the earth.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I desire for a moment to call attention to the broad distinction between the resolution before the Senate and the Monroe doctrine as expressed in the note of Mr. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State, to Mr. Lowell, May 8, 1882, and I quote from Mr. Frelinghuysen an extract from Mr. Monroe's message of 1823. Mr. Frelinghuysen said:

In 1823 Mr. Canning, with the concurrence of the cabinet of London, informed Mr. Rush that Great Britain could not see with indifference the intervention of foreign power in Spanish America, or the transfer to those powers of any of the colonies, and suggested a joint declaration to that effect by the United States and Great Britain. This suggestion grew out of the relations then existing between France and Spain, their attitude towards the South American republics then struggling for independence, and the injuries to the colonies and commerce of Great Britain which would result from a successful prosecution of the policy of those two governments. President Monroe did not adopt the proposal for a joint declaration; but in his message of December 2, 1823, after stating that it was our policy not to interfere with the internal concerns of European powers, speaking of the war which the revolted colonies were carrying on against Spain, and of contemplated interference by the "Holy Alliance" in behalf of the latter, said, in language which has gone into history under his name, thus.

Now comes the language of President Monroe:

"But in regard to these continents circumstances are eminently and conspicuously different. It is impossible that the allied powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness, nor can any one believe that our southern brethren, if left to themselves—would adopt it of their own accord. It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition in any form with indifference."

That is, the South American republics—

So we see that the Monroe doctrine had reference exclusively to the political control of the Spanish colonies of South America, to the political influence and interference of the governments of Europe, and of the Holy Alliance, which was composed of several of the powers of Europe. If we have a precedent on which to predicate such a resolution as that before the Senate, it is probably based upon the idea of enforcing the Monroe doctrine. It will be seen that it goes far beyond the Monroe doctrine and excludes any connection with a commercial enterprise which may not involve the exertion of political influence or the control of American governments. I thought it right in the brief consideration of this subject to call attention to the distinction between the Monroe doctrine, which relates to political influence and control, and the mere aiding in a commercial enterprise of this kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being House bill 9051.

Mr. GRAY. I ask unanimous consent to offer at this time, for the purpose of having it printed, an amendment intended to be proposed to the joint resolution (S. R. 122) declaring the sense of Congress in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be received and printed.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the amendment be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the joint resolution by striking out the first section and inserting in lieu thereof:

That any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America which involves any political control whatever of the territory through which such canal passes, or interference with the government or system of government of any portion of this continent, will be viewed by the Government of the United States with serious concern and disapproval, and will be considered as dangerous to our peace and safety.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. VEST presented two petitions of citizens of Boonville, Mo., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Missouri River at that place; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL. I present the petition of A. Berger, M. D., of Tampa, Fla., in relation to the introduction of epidemic disease in the State of Florida, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD, as it is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the petition which he presents may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLISON. What is it about?

Mr. CALL. It relates to the introduction of epidemic disease into this country, and is a matter of general public interest.

Mr. MORRILL. It had better be printed in pamphlet form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed as a document, if there be no objection. Shall the petition be referred to a committee?

Mr. CALL. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BATE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3774) for the relief of Maggie B. Chapman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 3775) for the establishment of a light-ship with a steam fog-signal at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3776) for a customs commission; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3777) to authorize the board of county commissioners of the county of Whitman, Washington Territory, to issue bonds and to build a court-house and jail, and to sell and acquire real estate for such purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Territories.

CLASSIFICATION OF GILL-NETS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all rulings of his Department made within the year last past relative to the proper classification in existing revenue laws of gill-nets made by machine in Scotland and imported into this country, and especially used in the salmon fisheries on the Pacific coast.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill had better be printed with the amendments and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. TURPIE. I offer the following amendment to paragraph 322.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 322 the following:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act all persons or corporations engaged in the manufacture or making of the articles mentioned in this section shall pay to the persons employed by them an increase of 10 per cent. upon wages they are receiving at the time of the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I look upon paragraph 322 as one of the most sweeping in the bill. It reads as follows:

322. On cotton damask and on clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, including hemmed handkerchiefs, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

After the very able and instructive speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] yesterday evening I may be safe in assuming that this manufacture is one of the largest and oldest in our country. It originated during the colonial period, and has continued to increase to this day.

I presume that the object of increasing the rates upon this class of goods in paragraph 322, which is now under consideration, is to enhance the price of the articles at first hand. It may probably be, if it has not been already asserted, that this is for the exclusive benefit of those engaged in the manufacture of these articles—the persons or corporations so engaged. I am willing for the present to take that presumption as unfounded, and to say that in good faith the paragraph was offered for the purpose of benefiting labor, for the purpose of adding to the wages of the men and women employed in manufacturing the articles therein named. I wish, therefore, that this purpose be "nominated in the bond," or, in other words, named in the bill.

I am aware that very much can be said upon the subject and against the policy of legislating on the question of wages, but just as much can be said against legislating upon the price of commodities. This being an old-established industry, further legislation therein is not sought for the purpose of collecting revenue; neither is it sought for the purpose of protecting the hands engaged in the manufacture of the article. All these things have been settled long since. It must be legislation per se upon the subject of the price of commodities, and if this legislation upon the price of commodities can be right and justifiable, legislation upon the price of wages ought to be equally so.

It is assumed that this measure is for the benefit of labor. I think it may be taken for granted that we can make this section at least conform to that assumption by enacting expressly that the increase in the price of the commodities shall not be exclusively for the benefit of those engaged in the manufacture, but shall also inure to the benefit of their employés, though I await the defeat of this amendment with great composure since all amendments seem to be doomed to the same fate.

We have heard a great deal said lately here about home things and about the necessity and propriety of encouraging the use and manufacture of home things. Who has uttered a word against home industry? What is home industry? Our home in that sense is nothing less than the portion of this continent lying within the jurisdiction of the United States. It embraces every foot of territory covered by the law and flag of the Republic, and it includes all the industrial enterprises and affairs of that wide domain. They are all inmates of this home, and equally entitled to our favor and regard.

Who upon our side, here or elsewhere, has attempted to disparage any of these home industries? What American has not taken a just pride and felt his blood quicken and his heart glow in reading of the splendid achievements of the genius, ingenuity, and skill of our countrymen in arts as in arms?

What, then, is the use of all this homing psalmody, and what is its true intent and meaning? Is it that while we are invited to join in the anthem of "Home, Sweet Home" in this Chamber, the beneficiaries of this bill are to be at liberty to absorb the substance of our people for the benefit of the exclusive aristocracy created by the policy of this bill, an aristocracy of machinery, with perpetual pensions chargeable upon the customs-list, with their stars and garters provided for in the Statutes at Large?

Then we are entertained with a very fanciful picture of the present condition of the American laborer, artisan, and mechanic, represented to be so fine that if we give it entire credence it is impossible to conceive how his condition could be improved even by imposing upon him the enormously additional taxes herein provided for. It is said that the rate of wages here is greatly higher than it is in any part of Asia, Africa, or Europe. It always has been so, under all kinds of tariffs and under every kind of administration. I trust it will always remain so. We think that the whole legislation of the country ought to be directed to maintain and secure that superiority. But supposing wages here were three times higher than they are in any part of Europe, is that any reason why a portion of such wages should be taken from the man who earns them and merely tossed into the dividends of an incorporated trust without return and without consideration?

The central idea of a prohibitory tariff is not the exclusion of foreign merchandise. That is simply a pretense. And it is not the protection to home labor. That is another pretense as groundless and as inexcusable as the one first mentioned.

Those monopolists propose to charge a tax of 40 per cent. ad valorem upon the cheapest kind of cotton fabrics. They will send to Ireland for the finest linen, and to France for the finest silk, and to Belgium for the most delicate hose and trimmings for their own use. They care nothing about the protection of home labor or home products. They care no more for these than for the procurement of governmental revenue. They simply use these two things as pretexts to increase their own privileges and chartered rights under this bill and similar measures.

Of course the monopolist says, "I am an American and consequently entitled to the home market; I have my establishment and employ my men here, and ought, therefore, to have the option, the use, and the advantage of the American market." But the moment he gets possession of that field he turns his attention to stripping the inhabitants. What he desires is not the use of the American market, but to revel and riot in the abuse of it, such as 100 per cent. upon hoop-iron and 250 per cent. upon table and pocket cutlery. What he really desires is not protection for the sake of others, but prohibition for his own. He would protect protection. He would paint the very lily. What he wishes is the uncontrolled and unlimited opportunity; the unfair, the unjust advantage of this market, so that the tariff trust and its allied syndicates may have absolute command of both the price of wages and the price of commodities.

This is his demand. He moans and mourns about the pauper labor of Europe, but what he means is, "Let us charge our own prices for our own goods and compel the people by law to buy and to pay accordingly." Now, sir, it is as to this demand that we of the Democratic party say, if anything be wrong in the world, it is wrong; if anything be dishonest and dishonorable, full of self-seeking, low design, unworthy of this home, unworthy of humanity, if there be anything indescribably mean and mercenary, sordidly corrupt and corrupting, it is this demand of the monopolist that he shall be by law authorized to tax without limit the wages of our people and to fill with unearned shekels the treasury of his corporation.

I am admonished, however, to be brief by two considerations. In the first place, the honorable Senator from the State of Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], in the beginning of this discussion, informed the Senate that, as to the general principles of the bill, they had been decided by the vote of the Senate upon the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to lay the substitute upon the table, and at the same time the honorable Senator informed the Senate that, as to the details of the bill, he and his colleagues felt themselves bound to follow the recommendations of the committee, and thus far this has come to pass. But this was an instance in which the seer had the power to fulfill very largely his own prediction, and it does not argue a very marvelous endowment of prophetic vision. It rather intimates that all discussion is futile if not presumptuous.

But there is a second consideration. I am not very certain but that myself and others upon both sides of the Chamber who have engaged in the debate have done so in violation of a very old and well-established rule of this body. It is very true that the Senate has occasionally in public legislative session considered the stipulations of a treaty, but never without having resolved to do so in advance. It might be well enough for us before we proceed further to determine whether or not there was a treaty concluded last summer upon this subject between high contracting parties or their duly accredited plenipotentiaries, in which it was agreed upon the one side that the choice of the electoral colleges for President should be controlled in a certain interest, and on the other it was bargained that in exchange the entire taxing power of the Government should be bodily transferred to the party of the first part. I confess, sir, that some of the provisions of this bill have a very close resemblance to what I should deem to be stipulations in such a treaty. I am not as yet myself prepared to say that I shall advise or consent to any of the provisions in this instrument.

As to the whole measure in its totality, using words already used in this presence, I regard it as a cowardly surrender of one of the great constitutional prerogatives of the Government to the dictation of an unprincipled cabal, who seek in it only their own aggrandizement and a forthcoming dynasty of unrestricted pelf and pillage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. I do not believe that it is a proper thing to do, or that it is in the power of this Government to undertake to regulate the compensation between employers and employés. I think it would be a great misfortune for us to undertake to distribute the benefit of these duties to the employés in the factories of this country. I am opposed to these high duties being paid to the manufacturing interests of the country. I think they are wrong; and I am opposed to any attempt on the part of Congress to interfere with the contracts between labor and capital. That is a private matter which the parties themselves should settle.

For this reason I am compelled to differ with an amendment offered on this side of the Chamber, and I shall cast my vote against it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to paragraph 322:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act all persons or corporations engaged in the manufacture or making up of the articles mentioned in this section shall pay to the persons employed by them an increase of 10 per cent. upon wages they are receiving at the time of the passage of this bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 324, as follows:

324. Plushes, velvets, velveteens, and all pile fabrics composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, 10 cents per square yard and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. In lines 1323 and 1324 I move to strike out the words "ten cents per square yard and twenty" and insert "forty" in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 1323 and 1324 it is proposed to strike out "ten cents per square yard and twenty" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

324. Plushes, velvets, velveteens, and all pile fabrics composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, which has just been read.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMPTON (when Mr. BUTLER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], but it has been arranged so that he and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] are paired together, and therefore I vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], but with the liberty to vote to make a quorum. Understanding that it is necessary that I vote to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. HALE. I have a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. EDMUNDS (after having voted in the negative). If I correctly understand it now, my vote is not necessary to make a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it be not, I beg leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Berry,	George,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Payne,	Walthall,
Call,	Gray,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Allison,	Evarts,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Manderson,	Spooner,

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hearst,	Pugh,

Butler,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Vest,
Chace,	Hale,	Pasco,	Voorhees.
Colquitt,	Harris,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

325. Cotton cords, braids, gimps, galloons, webbing, goring, suspenders, and braces, any of the foregoing which are elastic or non-elastic, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

326. All manufactures of cotton not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I offer a proviso to come in at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of paragraph 326 it is proposed to add:

Provided, That upon no article in this schedule shall there be collected a higher duty than 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I announce for the day the pair between the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAMPTON. My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I repeat what I said a moment ago, that I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. I very much fear that there is not a quorum yet voting, and therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague [Mr. FARWELL] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. EVARTS (after having voted in the negative). I voted "nay," but I do not see the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in the Chamber, and as I am paired with him I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] if his colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is now paired with any one? I had a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], but in the last few days it has been transferred to another Senator, and I desire to know how the pair stands now.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know. My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] has been paired part of the time with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. Whether he is now or not I do not know.

Mr. HAMPTON. I was paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], but the pair was transferred to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], as arranged between the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and myself, allowing us to vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL. Under the statement of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] that the pair has been changed so that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], I now cast my vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Berry,	George,	Payne,	Vance,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE J.—FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE.

327. Flax straw, $5 per ton.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out "$5 per ton" and insert the word "free," so as to put flax straw on the free-list. I have not been able to find that there is any importation of this article or that there is any necessity for putting a duty on it, except as a matter of form. It does not affect any particular interest, and, unless this is a sort of show business, to put on a duty just because it is a duty, I can not imagine any reason for it. If there is any reason for it I should like to know it. None of this flax straw is brought into this country, and the manufacturers testify, and I have examined the evidence, that it does not affect them at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 327, line 1332, it is proposed to strike out "$5 per ton" and insert "free;" so as to read:

Flax straw, free.

Mr. VANCE. By the testimony of a number of witnesses who appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance, I find that the flax straw in the Western States, after the seed is obtained for the making of oil, is burned up or spread out upon the ground for manure, thrown away. One witness, Mr. Edwin A. Hartshorn, of Troy, N. Y., says:

> The flax fiber now wasted in the Western States and Territories is of great value. It is far superior to jute in strength and durability, and can be made a source of large profit. The native word for jute in India, where it is grown, is equivalent to our "sham" or "humbug," and its cheapness is its principal merit. It can be sold cheap, because it is grown and cleaned by cheap labor.
>
> The farmer in India is quite content with 6 or 8 cents a day for labor, and can live on rice at a daily cost of less than 2 cents. Hence it is possible to purchase good clean jute at 2½ to 3½ cents a pound, delivered in New York, freight, duty, insurance, and all charges paid.
> At these prices it is not strange that the Western farmer makes the most money out of his flax crop by burning the fiber up. It is, however, only a question of labor-cost, as this wasted fiber is excellent material for carpet yarns, twines, cordage, canvas, burlap, toweling, crash, and many other goods.
> The flax fiber now wasted in Minnesota and other Western States and Territories is of great value.

Mr. President, there has been a duty standing all the time upon the statute-books of $5 a ton on flax straw, and the farmer saw fit to burn it up rather than take the $5 duty and the price of the foreign article added, which would enable him to compete. If he would not prepare any flax straw for market at the old duty of $5 a ton (but we got all of our supplies, or most of them, from abroad), why keep the duty on unless we need the revenue?

It seems to me that there is no earthly use, as was said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in this duty, for, in the face of the duty, we have the testimony of these witnesses that they continually burn up the flax straw after they have extracted the seed. There can be no use for this duty except it be because we have got into such a habit of taxing ourselves that we should not feel good unless we had a tax on everything that we use.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] having been transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], I vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Repeating the statement of my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], but being at liberty to vote when it is evident that my vote is required to keep the business going on, I vote "nay."

Mr. HAMPTON. My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. BATE. I announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is absent and paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. MITCHELL. As I announced, I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], but the pair was with the understanding that I could vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Hampton,	Reagan,
Berry,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Blackburn,	George,	Payne,	Walthall.
Call,	Gray,	Ransom,

NAYS—24.

Cullom,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Teller,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—37.

Beck,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Blair,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Stanford,

Daniel,	Hearst,	Quay,
Eustis,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 328, as follows:

328. Flax, not hackled or dressed, $20 per ton.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out "$20 per ton" and insert the word "free."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 328 it is proposed to strike out the words "twenty dollars per ton" and insert the word "free;" so as to read:

Flax, not hackled or dressed, free.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the overwhelming weight of testimony on this subject from the manufacturers themselves is that flax not hackled or dressed should be upon the free-list, that there should be no duty upon it at all. I know there has been a great deal of assertion, particularly in the Northwest, that the imported flax from abroad comes in competition with the flax raised in the United States, especially in the Northwestern States, but that is not true. The flax that is brought from Scotland and the Netherlands principally into this country for manufacturing purposes, and which is used in the New England manufactories for linen and flax thread and other manufactures of flax, is a very different article from that produced in the United States. Not one pound of flax that is raised in the Northwest is consumed by the New England manufactories. It is used for some very coarse carpet and for the covering of furniture, but even that is a limited manufacture. The imposition of this duty benefits neither the flax-raiser nor the manufacturer. Some flax is raised in the State of Missouri, and a very inconsiderable portion now compared with what was raised there twenty-odd years ago.

There have been two factors which have almost eliminated the culture of flax in the Western States, and particularly in the State of Missouri, which was one of the largest flax-growing States prior to 1861. In the first place, I think the overwhelming reason which has done away with the culture of flax and hemp in my section of the country has been the introduction of jute and jute-butts, which have taken the place of manufactures of flax and hemp for the covering of cotton-bales and for other textiles in which flax and hemp were used. Another reason which has operated with us in my State, rather local in its character, is that we can not induce free labor to go into the culture of hemp and flax. When there was slave labor in Missouri and in Kentucky the hemp and flax culture was much larger than it is now. There is no culture in the world as hard upon physical life as that of hemp and flax. When we had slave labor in Missouri the slaves would be hired upon a hemp farm on the Missouri River for $75 more annually than upon a grain farm, because it was the most wearing and exhaustive labor, and there never was a machine made on the face of the earth that entailed as much physical exhaustion as the old-fashioned hemp-rake that was used in the hemp and flax fields.

I speak after deliberate examination of this question, and I do not think that a majority of the Finance Committee will controvert the position. I reassert the proposition that putting this duty of $20 a ton upon flax benefits neither the flax-raiser in the United States nor the American manufacturer, and if it does not there can be no conceivable reason for putting this duty upon it. Instead of being a benefit to the American manufacturer, it is an absolute detriment. It handicaps him to that extent in his competition with the foreign manufacturers, and at the same time there is no compensation in the duty to the raiser of flax in the Northwestern States.

I quote now from page 821 of the testimony of the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance. Here is the testimony of a committee of flax manufacturers from Paterson, N. J., signed by a number of them, John Stephen, James W. McVeigh, and others, a committee representing that flax interest. Here is what they say:

> Now, what we would suggest in the way of assisting us would be to increase the duty on dressed line, threads, twines, and yarns, or failing that, take the duty off the raw material. The flax grown in this country not being suitable for the making of threads and fine yarns, it can not compete with Irish, French, Dutch, and Belgian flax, all of which are required in the making of those fine goods. The large importation of manufactured goods (especially the finer grades) proves that we have not protection enough, for although we sometimes have depressions because of accumulated stocks, still there is never any decrease of the foreign importation.

But the point which I propose to emphasize is that the American flax does not at all come in competition with the foreign flax, and the foreign flax is absolutely necessary for the manufacturers of the United States.

In the debate had in the House of Representatives upon the Mills bill, a member from Massachusetts living in Worcester, representing a district more interested in flax manufacture than any other in the United States, made the following statement:

> I will again remind the gentleman that this is a question of flax and flax fiber, and I do not propose that he shall leave that question and take up any side issue. I stated in the interest of the largest consumers of flax and flax fiber in this country that there was no flax or flax fiber raised by our farmers that was a raw material for that manufacturing interest. They do not raise fiber that is fit to use, because their primary object is the ripening of the seed; and, second, if they do undertake to raise it for fiber, there are climatic conditions in our flax-growing States unfavorable to the business, and they do not succeed in producing a fiber fit for the manufacturers of New England in the linen industry.
> The gentleman has gone away from the matter before the House to the duty on manufactured goods, taking up that question before its time. When we come to that part of the bill I am willing to discuss it with him.
> But now the question is upon a raw material with which the farmers of this country have no possible competition and which should be made free. The farmers of the West will not lose a penny if flax straw and fiber are put upon the free-list. It is not a question of sugar; it is not rice; it has nothing to do with the side issues the gentleman raises. It is the question solely of the free raw material for a heavily-taxed industry. It is a useless tax, because we do not want the money and the tax does not benefit any grower of flax in this country.

That assertion was uncontradicted in the whole of that acrimonious debate, and I undertake to say that the testimony is absolutely conclusive in regard to the truth of the statement. Yet right in the face of these statements and of petitions from manufacturers asking that this foreign flax come into the country free to assist them to make cheaper goods for the American consumer, $20 a ton is put back upon it.

What has been the experience of the people of the United States in regard to the removal of duty from the raw material? Some years ago the duty was taken off of hides and they were put on the free-list, and what was the result? I have the statistics here before me. The leather industry was languishing in this country prior to the taking off of that duty. Hides were put on the free-list. What has been the result? A steady increase in the amount of manufactured goods and of exports of leather manufactures, until in 1887 we exported from this country over $10,000,000 worth, and last year, in 1888, within a fraction of $10,000,000 worth.

We had the same sort of experience in regard to cotton. Cotton was put upon the free-list, and the cotton manufacturers of the United States to-day are in a flourishing condition. The only losses in the factories that amount to anything, except in sporadic instances, have been in the woolen factories. Not longer ago than two days a manufacturer said to me, "I am interested in a woolen factory and in a cotton factory in the same town, and if it were not for what I make in the cotton factory I would be a bankrupt by reason of my losses in the woolen factory."

What sort of reason can be given that would stand an analysis for a single instant for putting the duty on flax at $20 a ton, when manufacturers come here and almost unanimously ask that the duty be taken off, and when it is beyond any sort of successful contradiction that no farmer in the United States is benefited to the extent of a dollar by keeping it on? Here is the testimony of Messrs. Murphy and Anderson, of Paterson, N. J., who are flax-dressers, in regard to this matter:

> Mr. Felix Murphy, of Paterson, N. J., flax-dresser, said:
> "Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the importation of dressed flax now leaves 900 men around Paterson idle. Barbour Bros., of Paterson, N. J., one of the leading firms in the flax business in this country, import 45,000 pounds of dressed flax weekly, and 10,000 pounds of rough flax. The duty on dressed flax is $40 a ton, and the duty on rough flax $20 a ton. We are desirous that the duty shall come off the rough flax, so as to induce the manufacturers in this country to import all rough flax and get it dressed in this country. The next leading firm in the flax business is Finlenson & Co., of Grafton, Mass. That firm imports all its dressed flax, and does not import any rough flax at all. It imports 18,000 pounds of dressed flax weekly. That would give employment to about 500 men—I mean the converting of rough flax into dressed flax."

And so it runs through the whole testimony, the point of their testimony being that they want the duty taken off of rough flax in order that it may be dressed and hackled in the United States and thereby give employment to American workmen, which I understand to be the great cry of our friends upon the opposite side of this Chamber. They say that they want more opportunity for American labor, more chances for the development of American industry and American enterprise. Yet from the very same persons who invoked this principle and used it in the canvass we find the extraordinary proposition that this raw material shall be taxed, which does not assist by the duty upon it a single farmer to the extent of a dollar, but does handicap the manufacturer.

Mr. President, look at what we are able to do even with the duty upon the rough flax. I see from the export tables of 1887 and 1888 that upon flax, hemp, and jute manufactures of bag twine and all other of these manufactures we exported in 1887 $1,402,118 worth, and in 1888 $1,391,216 worth. The imports show these facts: In 1888 we imported $1,802,084 worth of flax. From Scotland we brought in $404,584 worth. From Ireland we brought in $573,220 worth. That was imported as rough flax for the purposes of the manufacturers, showing beyond any sort of question that the American-raised flax does not suit the purposes of the manufacturing interests in New England. About that there is no sort of question.

So upon every phase of the question the argument is overwhelming in favor of putting this raw material, rough flax, upon the free-list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 328 it is proposed to strike out "$20 per ton" and insert "free;" so as to read:

328. Flax, not hackled or dressed, free.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAMPTON. My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. BATE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Berry,	George,	Morgan,	Vance,
Call,	Gray,	Payne,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Walthall.

NAYS—23.

Cameron,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.
Chace,	Hale,	Pugh,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Quay,
Daniel,	Hearst,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

329. Flax, hackled, known as "dressed line," $40 per ton.
330. Tow, of flax or hemp, $10 per ton.
331. Hemp, $20 per ton.
332. Cables or cordage, and twine, including binding twine, composed wholly of manilla, or sisal-grass, 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether the qualifying clause in line 1340, in paragraph 332, refers to the words "cables or cordage, and twine," as well as to the words "including binding twine."

Mr. ALDRICH. They were intended to do so.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is rather a faulty construction.

Mr. ALLISON. To make it certain, say "all of the above" or "all the foregoing."

Mr. MITCHELL. Say "all the above."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert the words "all of the above," in line 1340, before "composed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in line 1340, before the word "composed," the words "all of the above;" so as to read:

332. Cables or cordage, and twine, including binding twine, all of the above, composed wholly of manilla, or sisal-grass, 1½ cents per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With a comma after "above?"

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. VEST. In lines 1340 and 1341, I move to strike out "1½ cents per pound" and insert "25 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in lines 1340 and 1341, to strike out "1½ cents per pound" and to insert "25 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

332. Cables or cordage, and twine, including binding twine, all of the above, composed wholly of manilla, or sisal-grass, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I wish to call attention to the fact without argument, for I know what has been the result heretofore. In 1888 we exported of this article of flax bags $235,351 worth, of cordage $733,050 worth, and of twine $270,478 worth. We imported of the two articles of bags and cordage for the same year $6,531 worth as against an export of nearly $1,200,000 worth. Besides this we exported of all other articles of flax $152,337 worth.

It seems to me that under that state of case there is no necessity for this increase of 1½ cents per pound. I take it for granted that it is an increase from what I see here.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to say to the Senator that the only objection I have to his amendment is that it will increase the duty, particularly on binding twine, which is an article of universal consumption in the West and ought to come in at a very low rate. The rate fixed in the bill on binding twine is from 12 to 15 per cent. I think that it would be an increase also on cordage and on cables.

Mr. ALDRICH. Most certainly it would. The present valuation of the importations of cables and cordage varies from 7.7 to 11.6 cents. It would be an increase of at least a cent a pound on all cables and cordage.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I will withdraw the amendment until I examine it further. I am very certain that one part of the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island is not correct, although it is possible the Senator from Iowa may be correct.

Mr. ALLISON. I know I am correct on the question of binding twine, because I made a special examination of the matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Missouri will examine the table before him he will find that the unit of value on importations of cordage last year varied from 7.7 cents to 11.6 cents a pound. Twenty-five per cent. would therefore be from 2 cents to nearly 3 cents a pound duty.

Mr. VEST. That would not apply, however, exclusively to the article of cordage.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would apply to cables and cordage. Binding-twine costs quite as much as either of those.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; I withdraw the amendment. Let the paragraph be passed over, and I will ask the liberty of recurring to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn and the paragraph will be passed over. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

333. All manufactures of flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, or of which flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, valued at 5 cents per pound or less, 2 cents per pound; valued above 5 cents per pound, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In line 1346 I move to strike out all after the word "act," and to insert "25 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in line 1346, after the word "act," to strike out the words—

Valued at 5 cents per pound or less, 2 cents per pound; valued above 5 cents per pound, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

And to insert "25 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

333. All manufactures of flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, or of which flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have not the slightest idea that the amendment which I propose will be adopted. The announcement made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in the beginning of the discussion of this bill, which was referred to by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] a few minutes ago, that the intention of the majority was to follow the committee on all these questions, of course settles this; and it makes no difference how palpably wrong we may show a provision in the bill to be, I am satisfied there will be no change upon any motion of ours. Senators in this body, representatives of sovereign States, representing millions of the consumers of this country, have offered amendment after amendment, and each one has been steadily, persistently, and consistently voted down. It matters not what the reasons given for any change may be, it matters not how plainly it may be shown that there is no necessity for any particular provision to remain in the bill or how clearly it may be shown that there is no necessity for raising any item of revenue, still, as the Senator from Missouri has just shown in the flax schedule, the majority go persistently forward and adopt the recommendations of the committee without regard to right or merit. There seem to be some people in this country more fortunate than the members of the Senate.

In an article published in the Manufacturer, a periodical published, I believe, by the Manufacturers' Club, bearing date the 1st day of this month, I find the following:

AMENDMENTS TO THE SENATE TARIFF BILL.

The committee appointed by the textile section of this club at a special meeting some days since, after a conference with manufacturers from New York and New England, agreed upon the following amendments to the Senate bill, and laid them before the Finance Committee of the Senate on the 19th ultimo. The committee have reason to believe that these amendments will receive favorable consideration.

Then come paragraphs 320 and 321 of the tariff bill as the Manufacturers' Club intend to have them amended. Yesterday the Senate in considering the bill reached those paragraphs, and the Senator from Iowa stated that they would pass over them, as the committee would perhaps have some changes to make in connection with those paragraphs. It seems that the committee appointed by this club when preparing an amendment to the bill can have it considered. The inflexible rule suggested by the Senator from Ohio does not count when the proposition to amend the bill comes from the manufacturers, but when the representatives of the States and the people stand here and offer amendments there is no attention whatever paid to them, and they are voted down steadily.

I notice in that same paper some admonitions given to the majority as to what was expected of them in another paragraph, which I shall now read:

It is well for the iron manufacturers of this country to keep an eye on the Senate tariff bill as it moves along towards its passage.

Says this paper:

Mr. PLUMB, of Kansas, wants reduction of the duties on structural iron, and as he is threatening to make trouble unless his wishes are heeded, there is some talk of appeasing him by arranging a compromise over the metal schedule. It may be important to satisfy Mr. PLUMB, but it seems to us even more important to satisfy American manufacturers of iron and the American people who voted in the late election for maintenance of the protective system. The Senate can not make any serious cut in the iron duties without betraying the trust of the people in the party controlling the Senate. There is no necessity of any kind for compromising with Mr. PLUMB, because there is no necessity that the Senate shall pass a tariff bill at all. No objection could be made if it should adopt a good measure; but if it can pass a bill only by making sacrifices of American interests to gratify the whims of such persons as Mr. PLUMB it had much better drop the whole business at once and permit the work of tariff revision to go over to the next Congress, where indeed it properly belongs.

This comes from the same high authority which first agreed on amendments to paragraphs 320 and 321 of the bill, and which, it would seem from circumstances that occurred in the Senate on yesterday, are likely to be adopted. The same paper has, among other interesting things, the following. In speaking of the great services of Mr. James M. Swank, the secretary, I believe, of the Iron and Steel Association, it says:

During the past year, in connection with the Industrial League, which is also managed by Mr. Swank, it has sent out—to all parts of the country 1,387,864 tracts or pamphlets, many of which were written by the general manager.

Speaking of the organization of which he is secretary—

Yet the distinguished Senator from Vermont stands in his place in the Senate and tells us that tariffs imposed upon goods do not increase the cost to the consumer, and the Senator from Massachusetts tells us that the only object in levying a tariff is to make the price of articles consumed by American consumers cheaper. Yet here is the secretary of the Iron and Steel Association sending out 1,300,000 pamphlets in a year for the purpose of securing cheap goods to the American consumers. The association of which he is secretary of course has no interest in circulating these pamphlets, but they are all unselfishly sent out for the public good.

I happen to be one of the fortunate recipients of one of these million three hundred thousand pamphlets distributed by Mr. Swank, and I think a good deal of what might be vulgarly called the "true inwardness" of this bill can be found in a half page of that tract. I propose to call the attention of the Senate to it. I read from page 23 of the pamphlet. It is stamped on the outside in red ink "Please read this." It is styled "Our Bessemer Steel Industry," and seems to have been sent from the American Iron and Steel Association.

Mr. VANCE. How is the word "steel" spelled?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. He spells it s-t-e-e-l.

Mr. VANCE. That is wrong. Why did he not spell it right?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is like a good many other false pretenses.

"The tariff revision which is needed" is the heading of the particular article which I now propose to read, and it proceeds as follows:

Let those who have in their hands the welfare of American industries beware that they do not imperil their very existence. Let them beware that they do not recklessly fan that spirit of discontent among the workingmen of this country, the consequences of which, were it fully aroused, no patriotic citizen would willingly behold. Duties on many manufactured products, instead of being too high, are now too low to be protective. The industries of this country are to-day far from being in a highly prosperous condition. Some of them are in a state of depression, and a leading cause of such depression as now exists and of such apprehension as prevails is found in the increased importations which the present tariff makes possible. Another cause of depression and apprehension is found in the late message of the President and his threat of tariff reduction. If our legislators would invite prosperity for our country for many years to come, and at the same time would reduce the surplus in the Treasury, let them increase duties and not reduce them.

This is precisely what is done through this bill. I simply read these things to show the animus running through this entire attempt at tariff revision, so far as the other side are concerned. But while we are on the subject, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] a day or two ago was stating that it was a difficult matter to find where political parties stood, and that he had been unable to find out what the Democratic party wanted on this question of tariff reform, it may not be out of place for me to call attention to the official declarations of the Republican party upon the question of tariff taxation from 1872 down to their last official declaration. In 1872 the seventh section of their platform was as follows:

7. The annual revenue, after paying current expenditures, pensions, and the interest on the public debt, should furnish a moderate balance for the reduction of the principal, and that revenue, except so much as may be derived from a tax upon tobacco and liquors, should be raised by duties upon importations, the details of which should be so adjusted as to aid in securing remunerative wages to labor, and to promote the industries, prosperity, and growth of the whole country.

From that it would seem that they recognized the fact then that the purpose of levying tariff taxes was to raise revenue and not for private tribute. At that time I take it a Republican convention could not have been induced to have openly declared that it was in favor of any such purpose as the latter. In 1876 section 8 of their platform, reported by Mr. HAWLEY, said:

8. The revenue necessary for the current expenditures and the obligations of the public debt must be largely derived from duties upon importations, which as far as possible should be adjusted to promote the interest of American labor and advance the prosperity of the whole country.

In 1880 they said in section 5 of their platform:

5. We affirm the belief avowed in 1876 that the duties levied for the purpose of revenue shall so discriminate as to favor American labor.

And "Applause" was put in parenthesis after that declaration.

Mark you, Mr. President, here was a declaration by this national convention of the Republican party in 1880 that taxes levied for revenue should be so adjusted as to give labor some protection. The leading purpose was public revenue to the Government. But in 1884 a new light seems to have dawned. They had begun to change materially their position and to tend towards the declaration that the prime purpose of levying national taxes was for private tribute instead of public revenue. Hear it. Section 4 of the platform adopted in 1884 was as follows:

4. It is the first duty of a good Government to protect the rights and promote the interests of its own people. The largest diversity of industry is the most productive of general prosperity and of the comfort and independence of the people. We therefore demand that the imposition of duties on foreign imports shall be made not for revenue only, but that in raising the revenues for the Government such duty shall be so levied as to afford security to our diversified industries and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer to the end that active and intelligent labor, as well as capital, may have its just reward and the laboring man his full share of the national prosperity.

In 1888, as we all remember, came the broad, unqualified declaration that—

We favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system.

Here, Mr. President, there is written in the official declaration of their party the fact that in 1872 they began with a declaration that whatever taxes were necessary for public purposes which were not raised from tobacco and liquors ought to be raised by a tariff tax. They affirmed again and again that the purpose of levying a tariff was public revenue, and that it should be so adjusted as to favor their industries. But now for the first time comes the declaration made by the Republican party, and sanctioned by its Committee on Finance in the Senate, that the purpose of a national system of taxation was to increase the gains of the manufacturers, and they propose to increase taxes when they propose to reduce revenues.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator state in what resolution or in what language he finds his authority for the statement which has just fallen from his lips, that the convention held in 1888 declared for protection in order to increase the profits of manufacturers?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think that the Senator from Connecticut did not do me the honor to listen carefully to what I said. I said, or intended to say, that the declaration of the convention of 1888 was that they favored the entire repeal of the internal taxes rather than surrender any part of the protective system, and that the conduct of the Finance Committee here and the action of the majority in the Senate says "as plain as a whisper in the ear" that the purpose of this system is to increase private fortunes, to levy these taxes for private tribute and not for public revenue. I have just read from the words of Mr. Swank that the way to make this country prosperous is to decrease revenue by increasing taxation, and your tariff is carrying it out in every provision of the bill that we have under consideration.

Mr. PLATT. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to have him——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is no interruption.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the Senator give me this opportunity to say that as I understand this question, the whole talk to which we have listened for the last week or fortnight, to the effect that the purpose of protection and the purpose of this bill is to increase the profits of the manufacturers, which are already excessive, has no foundation in fact, not the slightest.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have no objection to my friend, the Senator from Connecticut, making a declaration of that sort, but there is high authority for saying, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and I propose now for a moment to weigh his declaration by the action of the Finance Committee.

In the paragraph under consideration the proposition is that—

All manufactures of flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, or of which flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, valued at 5 cents per pound or less, 2 cents per pound; valued above 5 cents per pound, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

According to the analysis submitted to this body, and which I presume is in the main correct, the divisions under this paragraph are analyzed as follows: We have "bags and bagging except bagging for cotton" at 2 cents a pound. In paragraph 334, which we have not yet reached, the provision is that burlaps not exceeding 60 inches in width shall be taxed 30 per cent. ad valorem.

In the report made by the Committee on Finance they stated that no friend of the Mills bill was heard by that committee. They heard manufacturers and their friends, and among them they heard a manufacturer of jute bags. He stated on the last page of his testimony, and he was cross-examined by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa, that if you put a tax of three-quarters of a cent on burlaps, then he wanted a tax of 1 cent a pound on bags; that this difference was necessary to his protection. Then the Senator from Iowa said, "If we make a tax of 1½ cents on burlaps then you want 2 cents on bags?" He answered, "Or 1⅞ cents." He was hardly willing to go to the extent the Senator from Iowa proposed.

This witness testified that he was a large manufacturer of bags, the very article that is included under this paragraph of the bill, and upon which you propose to levy a tax of 2 cents a pound. He stated that burlaps was his raw material, and that an ad valorem tax of 15 per cent. was the equivalent of three-eighths of a cent a pound. Therefore a tax of 30 per cent. ad valorem is equivalent to a tax of three-fourths of a cent a pound. Now I will read from his testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. If we put a duty of three-fourths of a cent a pound on burlaps, then you want a duty of 1 cent a pound on bags?
Mr. BEMIS. I have said 1 cent.
The CHAIRMAN. One cent?
Mr. BEMIS. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. And if we put a duty of 1½ cents on burlaps, then you want a duty of 2 cents on bags?
Mr. BEMIS. Yes, or 1¼. Three-eighths of a cent on the pound will protect us, I claim. Other manufacturers do not agree with me. One cent a pound is all any reasonable man ought to ask.

Now, Mr. President, what is the result? The committee comes in with this bill providing for a tax of three-quarters of a cent, the lowest tax suggested between the chairman of the subcommittee and the witness here, and when the witness testified that a tax of 1 cent a pound is enough, if three-quarters of a cent is levied then you give him not the one-quarter of 1 cent protection that he asks, not the quarter of a cent between his raw material and his manufactured product that he himself said was enough, but you give him five times as much, and give him 2 cents a pound protection upon his bags, making 1¼ cents difference, when the manufacturer himself only asked for one-quarter of 1 cent difference.

It occurs to me that I have seen just such an instance in a book that may possibly have escaped the attention of members of the Finance Committee. It is pretty high authority in the Democratic party and is a law book. I shall read just a paragraph or two, showing the spirit that it seems to me enters into this thing of giving these people more than they ask.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator commences the reading, let me ask whether I understand him to state that we have placed a duty of three-quarters of a cent a pound upon the raw material for bags?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I say that you have placed a tax of 30 per cent. ad valorem upon burlaps, and that this witness stated that a tax of 15 per cent. ad valorem was equivalent to a specific tax of three-eighths of a cent, and therefore 30 per cent. ad valorem is equivalent to a tax of three-quarters of a cent, and you have, in effect, levied a tax of three-quarters of a cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Arkansas think that the witness made a correct statement?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I can not say whether the statement is correct or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Arkansas believe everything that he sees in the testimony taken by the subcommittee without any confirmatory evidence?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am very sorry to say that I believe very little of it. What part of it I have taken the trouble to investigate I have found to be in the main a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end. It is the testimony of a lot of men who came here for the purpose of presenting special pleas, to invent excuses for taxes to be levied upon people to enrich themselves.

Mr. ALDRICH. I had received that impression from some remarks I heard the Senator make before. I was a little surprised at his blind faith in this statement, and I wanted to see whether he confirmed it by other collateral evidence.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have not blind faith in the statement; but will the Senator tell me what specific rate a tax of 30 per cent. ad valorem is equivalent to?

Mr. ALDRICH. That would depend altogether upon the price abroad.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. At the present price?

Mr. ALDRICH. It would be a cent and a half a pound, I imagine, or somewhere in that neighborhood.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator imagines. If the Senator will investigate it he will find the figures in this paper. Of course I understand that when any particular figures are found in any of these documents that are against the Finance Committee they are immediately determined to be wrong; but he will find that these figures from the Treasury Department do not sustain his statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say that the present price of burlaps is in the neighborhood of 5 cents a pound abroad, in Dundee. The Senator can figure it out. That would make the duty amount to 1½ cents a pound.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Of what quality?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of the quality used in making bags.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I shall call the attention of the Senate in a few minutes to a statement made by this witness on that question. Possibly I had best do so at once. I do not know whether one of the witnesses who comes before this committee to give them information will ever tell the truth at all under any circumstances, but I presume that when they speak of specific facts they would hardly make untrue statements of prices, etc., especially against their own interest. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island who has just interrupted me if these people were sworn when they were examined?

Mr. ALLISON. They were not.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. They were not?

Mr. ALLISON. Nobody was sworn.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The practice has been on the committees that I have noticed in these examinations, in order to make them as nearly reliable as possible, to put the witnesses on oath, so as to come as near to getting the truth out of them as possible. I do not suppose an obligation of that sort would be very binding on some of these people, however, and upon the whole I commend the wisdom of the committee in not making them perjure themselves.

You asked this man the price of these burlaps. I do not know whether you knew more about it than he did or not. If you did, you did not contradict him when he made the statement, and you printed it and brought it into the Senate for its information, and you certainly will not propose to impeach your own witnesses.

I quote:

The CHAIRMAN. You think that these goods should come in by weight and not ad valorem?
Mr. BEMIS. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. I mean a specific duty, which would have to be by weight, of course.
Mr. BEMIS. That is it exactly; that is just the point I would like to make.
The CHAIRMAN. Tell me what any one of these specimens would be worth per pound abroad.
Mr. BEMIS. Very well; I will tell you exactly. The 8½, which is the one-notch piece, would be worth to-day 1$\frac{3}{8}$ pence.
The CHAIRMAN. Sample No. 2 is what?
Mr. BEMIS. Eight and one-half.
The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by 8½?
Mr. BEMIS. Eight and one-half ounces to the yard of 40 inches. I suppose you only want the comparative market. I will give it at 1½ pence for 8 ounces.
The CHAIRMAN. Give me the value per pound, on the other side, for each of these three specimens which you have shown me.
Mr. BEMIS. The value of the 8½ is about 1$\frac{3}{8}$ pence.
The CHAIRMAN. What would that be in cents?
Mr. BEMIS. It would be about 2.66 cents. The next quality is worth three forty-eighths more, which would be 1$\frac{5}{8}$ pence. The grades go by three forty-eighths of a penny every half ounce. The 7½ would be 1$\frac{1}{8}$. I simply say that these prices are lower than the present market; they have advanced.
The CHAIRMAN. The highest of these, 1$\frac{5}{8}$ pence, is only about 3 cents a pound.

It would be equal to 3 cents a pound, and a pound has 2 yards of the stuff in it. Here is a witness, a manufacturer, consuming large quantities of this article, in the presence of the Senator from Rhode Island stating to the committee that the foreign cost of this stuff is 3 cents a pound, while the Senator now says that the cost of the material abroad now is 5 cents a yard. Yet the witness was neither contradicted nor corrected.

Mr. ALDRICH. Five cents a pound, I said.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he said 5 cents a yard. However, as the Senator was present and heard this witness testify, and as he allowed the testimony to go uncontradicted into the records, and gives it the high sanction of the Finance Committee in bringing it into the Senate, I respectfully submit that he ought to stand by it now.

Now, I want to go back to this piece of law that I had just begun to read to my distinguished and very highly-honored friend, the chairman of the subcommittee. The Senate will remember that when I was diverted by the Senator from Rhode Island I was calling attention to the fact that the Senator from Iowa and the committee had in this case given the man five times as much as he had asked. He asked you for the difference between three-quarters of a cent and a cent, and instead of one-quarter of 1 cent, you gave him five times what he asked. I said there was a parallel to it that I had read in a book which I feared had escaped the attention of the Committee on Finance, but which was recognized as high authority by the Democratic party, and one I now quote from to a limited extent. I read from the sixteenth chapter of Luke, as follows:

1. And he said also unto his disciples, There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods.
2. And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.
3. Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I can not dig; to beg I am ashamed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must interrupt the Senator on a point of order. I do not think he ought to allude to the President of the United States in that way.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I did not understand the observation of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said that I questioned whether it was in parliamentary order to allude to the President of the United States in that way, that he had just been dismissed. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator from Vermont will possess his soul in patience, before I get through I think I shall explain to him that this is applicable to him and the committee that he blindly follows in all circumstances and everywhere.

But I do hope the Senator will not undertake to break the force of this passage, for I tell him it is very fine, and this book, too, I should like to commend to his careful consideration. He would learn a great deal of wisdom from it. It is true it might not have anything of protection in it; in fact, he will find it condemned by it. But while he will not find anything in it that will justify the greed that has characterized his party in their political management of this country, yet he perhaps would find something that would be of comfort and consolation to him hereafter. I hope no Senator on the other side will interrupt me again until I can finish the quotation, there being only a line or two more of it. I am sorry that quoting a few lines from the Bible should so disturb and stir up the gentlemen on the other side.

3. Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I can not dig; to beg I am ashamed.
4. I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses.
5. So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?
6. And he said, An hundred measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

When the Senator from Iowa called this man up, if he had been a debtor of the United States, he would not have said, "Sit down, take thy bill and write quickly one-half of what you owe, but one-fifth only," but when he undertakes to agree with him how much he is to be allowed to tax other people—what the Finance Committee is to agree that the people of the United States shall contribute to his fortune, the committee says, "Take thy bill and sit down quickly and write down, not twice as much as what you want, but five times what you ask, because you belong to the sacred few whose fortunes are to be made great at the expense of the many all over this broad land and upon whom we are to rely in every emergency."

When you have been doing just such things was it any wonder that the Senator from Indiana the other day should exclaim that "the ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib?" When we understand that the purpose of building up these interests, when we know the result to which they all lead, there can be no mistake in the purpose for which these things are done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now that my friend from Arkansas has finished reading from his newly-discovered——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is very old to us, Mr. President. It may be new to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it is old, so far as obeying it is concerned. But I wish to ask the Senator a practical question for my own information, because I have great respect for his knowledge of this subject. I wish to ask him simply and plainly whether he thinks that putting burlaps on the free-list entirely, so that there is no customs duty at all, would reduce the price in the United States to the people who use burlaps and have them to buy?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. As my mind would lead me to walk right out of the door if I wanted to get out of the room, I do. But I have not proposed in my amendment that burlaps should be put on the free-list.

There is another fact connected with this business that I propose right now to bring out, and the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont is pertinent and makes it fit exactly. It is shown by the evidence submitted by the committee that a manufacturer engaged in the manufacture of these burlaps said if he could have 15 per cent. protection on his burlaps over the duty he had to pay for jute he could manufacture burlaps in this country. Now you have jute-butts free. You propose to give them that material at least free. If that can be used in the manufacture of this class of burlaps he then not only has his 15 per cent., his 20 per cent., but he has 30 per cent. of protection. In other words, you do for him like the unjust steward did in the other case. When he asks you for one you give him two. When he asks for 15 per cent. to enable him to make these burlaps, you give him 30 per cent. and give him his raw material free at the same time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we have given the burlap manufacturer a greater benefit than he thought he would need in order to compete with foreign manufacturers, then on the principle that my friend has stated, that putting burlaps on the free-list would reduce the price, it would enable him by so much more to make them still cheaper and sell them still cheaper. If in one case it would reduce the price, why would it not in this case reduce it by so much more?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There is no answering a theory so effectually as to present a fact in reply. There are burlap manufacturers in this country who manufacture cotton-bagging. They have had high protection, an absolute monopoly of this market, and yet the Senator has seen this last summer that a very wicked and outrageous combination has been made by the manufacturers of that article by which the farmers of this country have been absolutely robbed of millions of dollars. That is a sufficient answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask another, then?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator think that the customs duties have any effect upon combinations, such as my friend refers to in regard to keeping up the price of the commodities? Are not these combinations just as complete, indeed more complete, in what are called free-trade countries, although there is not really any thoroughly free-trade country, and never ought to be any? Are not those combinations just as complete, just as commanding, just as monopolistic as they are in this country, and a good deal more?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think not. I will say frankly, however, that the combination of cotton-bagging manufacturers last summer was possibly not affected at all by the fact of the tariff, because the mills abroad were not being run in the manufacture of that article at the time, and the conspirators by shrewdness and cunning kept their combination hid until it was so late that bagging could not be imported from abroad. What I submit is that it is an outrage that people who have had their industries built up by an absolutely prohibitory tariff in this country, who have the absolute control of all the markets in this country in any given article, shall have the power to make this sort of combination by the protection of the United States, and the Government becomes a party to that robbery whenever it helps to build it up. The Government having been put upon notice and having seen the effect of such a combination in this instance, ought to make haste to wash its hands of any connection with it in the future, and the tariff ought to be so reduced as at least to give the cotton producers of this country the opportunity to go abroad and buy cotton-bagging if they choose. There certainly is no reason why a member of this Chamber should hereafter say that there ought to be a prohibitory tariff or any tariff at all upon cotton-bagging. It seems to me the infamy of the record these people have made is of itself sufficient to deprive them of every particle of respect they ever had, and they ought to be rebuked and punished.

But I do not propose to be drawn into a discussion of that question. When paragraph 339 is reached I intend to move that that article be put upon the free-list, and then we can discuss the right and the wrong of it.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to make an inquiry of him for information?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. In paragraph 339, which he says he expects to make a motion concerning, I see the duty on cotton-bagging is put at three-fourths of a cent a pound, provided that it shall not exceed in value 3 cents a pound. I should like to ask him as a Senator well acquainted with the value of that article if for twelve months past the price has not been more than 3 cents per pound in this country?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes, sir; it has been so for twelve months past and at all other times; and what is more——

Mr. VANCE. One more question. Would not that refer jute bags back to paragraph 333, and make them subject to a duty of 2 cents a pound instead of three-fourths of a cent?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Jute bags or bagging?

Mr. VANCE. Bagging.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly. There is no question of that.

Mr. VANCE. So——

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps there is some question about that.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to hear what the Senator from North Carolina has to say.

Mr. VANCE. I think it is hard to see any person in such a fix that something can not be said on his side of the question.

Mr. ALLISON. If I may interrupt the colloquy between the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from North Carolina——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to say that bagging for cotton, which I understand is the article the Senator from Arkansas names, has not been higher than 3 cents a pound in the last year.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. What was the statement?

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Arkansas will permit me——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask the Senator from Iowa to repeat what he said? I can hardly believe my ears.

Mr. ALLISON. I say the price of jute bagging for cotton during the last year, the foreign valuation, which is the basis of this rate, has not been to exceed 3 cents a pound.

Mr. COCKRELL. "Foreign valuation." That is a very different matter.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what this tariff is based on, and what the question of the Senator from North Carolina was based upon.

Mr. VEST. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa a question, because this is a very important part of this schedule, the most important point in it. I see upon the opposite page, in Schedule J, flax, hemp, etc., which is the estimate by the committee, that the unit of value on this article is 2.8 cents.

Mr. ALLISON. On what article?

Mr. VEST. On cotton-covering, bagging.

Mr. ALLISON. Bagging for cotton, gunny-cloth, and all similar material?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. The unit of value is 2.8 cents now. That is the average.

Mr. VANCE. That was on the importations of a year ago, 1887. It has been much higher since.

Mr. VEST. I understand in 1887 that was the average, and it shows that there must have been a considerable portion of it valued at over 3 cents, because there is only two-tenths of a cent margin between 2.8 cents and the 3 cents fixed in paragraph 339.

Mr. ALLISON. A very large part is greatly under it.

Mr. VEST. Still there must have been a large portion above it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there was a pound above it. I venture to say that that statement of valuations covers every pound of cotton-bagging made in India.

Mr. VEST. Then an advance of two-tenths of a cent would bring the whole of it under paragraph 339?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; it would.

Mr. VEST. That would be the operation.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In the testimony taken by this committee they examined a Mr. Murdock, and I should like to state to the Senate that he is not a "floor-walker" either, nor, to accept the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, is he a "walking delegate;" but he is a manufacturer and must, of course, tell the truth. A man of that high dignity and calling of course could not be guilty of falsehood. That man, in reply to a question presented to him, stated the present cost to the manufacturers of 2-pound jute bagging delivered at Southern ports from Calcutta. He sets out each item of cost. The present cost to the manufacturer and the total cost to the Indian manufacturer at Calcutta, according to this statement, is 3.1 cents per pound; yet you come here with a proposition in this bill that bagging valued at less than 3 cents——

Mr. ALDRICH. What page is the Senator reading from?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. From page 103 of volume 2 of the testimony taken by your committee. I am reading from the testimony of Mr. Murdock, who said that he was a manufacturer of this article in Charleston, S. C., and connected also, I believe, with Appleton Sturgis, in New York City, a man who could not be suspected of any bad motive in connection with this business. Being a manufacturer he belongs to that higher and better class of people who always know what they talk about. That man states the cost as follows:

	Cents per yard.
Jute-butts, 2 pounds, at 1.08 cents per pound loose	2.16
Waste, 10 per cent	.22
Cost of manufacture	.72

Making 3 cents and 1 mill as the actual cost to the Calcutta manufacturer per pound.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is about as near correct as he usually is. That is so much per yard, and it weighs 2 pounds per yard. The Senator wants to divide it by 2 to find out the price per pound.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I did not intend——

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have the Senator to say whether he insists upon his remark that this statement as read by him is correct as to the cost of this bagging in Calcutta.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes, sir; the statement read by me is correct.

Mr. ALLISON. The statement of Mr. Murdock, which the Senator was just now quoting, is the cost per yard, and it takes 2 pounds to make a yard.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. "Present cost to the manufacturers of 2-pound jute bagging delivered at Southern ports from Calcutta." Two-pound jute bagging, I presume, means by the yard, but it does not say so.

Mr. ALLISON. It says at the top the cost per yard.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. "Present cost to the manufacturers of 2-pound jute bagging." Yes, I suppose it means by the yard.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It says so a little further up.

Mr. ALDRICH. It says so.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I presume that is correct, though I do not see it. I am satisfied that it is per yard, and that I was in error in taking it to be a valuation by the pound, and that under that there would be a reduction under the bill. But I had not intended to enter into the discussion of that upon this question of bags. I propose to leave that for subsequent consideration.

No matter what the bill may propose, I do not believe that the cotton-bagging manufacturers have conducted themselves in such a way in the last twelve months in this country as to justify any levy of a tax for their protection. It may not be amiss, as I have gone as far as I have into this question, to state some of the reasons why. However, some data that I intended to use in the discussion of that question I have not with me, and I will leave that for the present.

I think I have shown sufficiently that under the present provision of the bill the committee levies a tax of three-fourths of a cent a pound upon burlaps and that that is 15 per cent. ad valorem—more than the manufacturers of that article wanted—and when that was fixed as the tax, instead of levying 1 cent a pound upon bags, as the manufacturers themselves asked, you have levied a tax of 2 cents, which is five times as much difference as was asked for by the manufacturers. This is a discrimination against the consumers of bags, against the farmers of the great Northwest, who ship nearly all their products abroad in these jute bags. It seems to me that there can be no defense for raising this duty higher than the absolute necessities for the protection of these people require.

We were told that one of the dangers to be incurred in having the duty on these articles brought down was the danger of combinations. Let me read what this same Mr. Bemis, in testifying before the committee, stated in regard to a combination in this industry:

The CHAIRMAN. Competition is sharp?
Mr. BEMIS. Yes; there is no trust.
Senator HARRIS. And never has been?
Mr. BEMIS. Never has been.
Senator HARRIS. How long have you been engaged in that business?
Mr. BEMIS. Ever since 1859. I do not wish to flatter myself before you gentlemen, but I believe to-day four parties [holding up four fingers] could make a combination in the West. Within a week I have been asked to join one, but I join no combination or trust.

When this man states frankly that he can within a week organize a combination in this great interest it certainly does seem to me that the committee ought to see to it that no such tariff is placed on these bags as to make such a trust easy of accomplishment, as this certainly does. We ought not to offer a premium for this kind of a combination. The interests of the great West demand and the interests of the farmers require that this course should not be pursued. Yet it is being done and will be done, and our protests will be unavailing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is absent, and I withhold my vote, as I am paired with him.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], but have transferred that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

Mr. BATE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	George,	Morgan,	Vance,
Berry,	Gibson,	Payne,	Vest,
Call,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,	Wilson of Md.

Cockrell,	Gray,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

334. Burlaps, not exceeding 60 inches in width, of flax, jute, or hemp, or of which flax, jute, or hemp, or either of them, shall be the component material of chief value (except such as may be suitable for bagging for cotton), 30 per cent. ad valorem.

335. Brown and bleached linen cloth containing not less than 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

336. On laces, embroideries, insertings, neck-ruffling and ruchings, trimmings, lace window-curtains, and other completed articles of lace, and tamboured window-curtains and other similar tamboured articles, composed of flax, jute, cotton, or other vegetable fiber, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. Two days ago, I believe, when the question of neck-ruffling and ruchings came before the Senate—not in regard to this paragraph—there was some conversation between the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and myself in reference to the effect of putting these cotton fabrics under the jute and hemp schedule. He asserted then that by putting them back under the cotton schedule, where they would seem to legitimately belong, and under paragraph 323, the effect would be to increase the duty. I asked then that that question should be passed over until I could make an examination; and I have made it.

I find now that the facts in regard to this matter are simply these: Under the existing law these articles of neck-ruffling and ruchings, which are made entirely of cotton, come in under what is known as the basket clause, or 35 per cent. ad valorem. They were not specially mentioned in the act of 1883, as they are now in the Senate substitute, and the effect of this proposed legislation by mentioning them specially under the jute and hemp schedule is to increase the duty from 35 to 50 per cent. The Senator admits that to be true.

Now, Mr. President, some of these articles, I find upon an examination of the testimony, are very low in value. None of them is very high priced. They are common articles used by persons who are not in affluent or luxurious circumstances; and it seems to me there is no sort of justice in taking them out of the basket clause, where they could be taxed 35 per cent. ad valorem, and putting them under this clause with a 50 per cent. tax imposed upon them.

I shall move to strike out, in lines 1357 and 1358, "neck-ruffling and ruchings;" and also to strike out, in line 1361, the words "cotton, or other vegetable fiber;" and if that motion prevails, I shall then move to insert, in line 1360, after the word "flax," the words "hemp or;" so as to read:

And other similar tamboured articles composed of flax, hemp, or jute.

That would take articles made from cotton or other vegetable fiber out of this paragraph and would leave this paragraph as it ought to be, applying alone to flax, hemp, and jute.

I am not able to say now, with my limited knowledge on this subject, what would be the entire effect of keeping the word "cotton" in this section. I have not been able in the examination I have had time to make to see how many articles would be covered by this paragraph of the schedule, because it is very broad. How it was ever put in under this hemp and flax schedule I have never been able to understand. Why the committee did not dispose of all cotton articles under the cotton schedule, and leave hemp, flax, and jute and those articles in a schedule by themselves I am not able to explain, and I have heard no reason for it.

It will be seen that in lines 1360 and 1361 the broadest sort of language is used—"composed of flax, jute, cotton, or other vegetable fiber not specially enumerated." Any article that does not happen to be specially enumerated under the cotton schedule would come in under this clause and be taxed 50 per cent. ad valorem. Those specially enumerated, "neck-rufflings and ruchings," are the commonest sort of cotton fabrics, and are put in under the flax schedule and put up from 35 per cent. under the basket provision in the existing law to 50 per cent., and I should like to hear some reason for that. If these were fine laces and embroideries that were used by the rich, I could understand it: but here is an article or fabric that is only used by people in the most moderate circumstances. We do not need the revenue and it seems to me it is unjust.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 336, line 1357, after the word "insertings," it is proposed to strike out "neck-ruffling and ruchings," and in line 1361 to strike out the words "cotton or other vegetable fiber;" so as to make the paragraph read:

336. On laces, embroideries, insertings, trimmings, lace window-curtains and other completed articles of lace, and tamboured window-curtains and other similar tamboured articles, composed of flax, jute, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the two amendments will be treated as one question.

Mr. ALDRICH. I stated the other day, in answer to a suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri, that it was true that the present duty upon cotton laces was 30 per cent. ad valorem, and upon linen laces 40 per cent. ad valorem, and it was the purpose of this paragraph to consolidate the two. It is very difficult for an expert to tell the difference between cotton lace and linen lace. It can only be told by microscopical examination of the fibers. They are identical in purpose, identical in cost, and most of those covered by this paragraph are the most elaborate articles of luxury, which certainly are entitled to pay a high rate of duty if there is anything in the whole bill that is to do it, and I am greatly surprised that the Senator from Missouri, with his economical views, should seek to reduce the rates of duty upon articles of pure luxury. There is not a single thing referred to in this paragraph that is not an article of luxury.

The Senator intimates that cotton laces are less articles of luxury than linen laces. That is not true. There are some articles of embroideries and edgings made by machinery from cotton which are of small value, and which are simply used by the common people of this country. Those are not covered by this paragraph at all, but by paragraph 323, where the rate of duty on goods of that description is fixed at 45 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

It was necessary, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, which was submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means at the same time, to make the duty in paragraph 323 specific. It is necessary that these two items, which are descriptions of laces, should be made at one uniform rate of duty and in the same paragraph. It makes no difference whether this paragraph is inserted under the jute schedule or under the cotton schedule. We simply put it under the jute schedule, as I explained the other day, because the importation of linen laces is more than the importation of cotton laces. It is simply a matter of convenience.

In regard to neck-ruffling and ruchings to which the Senator refers, I would state that the manufacturers of those articles who are located in the city of New York have been a number of times before the committee, urging that the rate we have fixed of 50 per cent. ad valorem is not adequate to protect that industry, which is quite a large one in this country.

The Senator is not correct in his statement that these are altogether inexpensive articles. Some of them, if he will examine the samples in the committee-room, he will find are very expensive articles of luxury. I certainly think the rate fixed in the bill is not excessive.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll, but before the result was announced,

Mr. VEST said: I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment, as I understand there is doubt as to the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered and the roll-call completed, it will be necessary to ask unanimous consent to rescind the order for the calling of the yeas and nays, to which the Chair hears no objection. The question will then again be taken on the amendment (unless the Senator withdraws it) by the sound.

Mr. VEST. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 7, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 5, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INDEMNITY TO CERTAIN JAPANESE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, recommending an appropriation for the relief of the Japanese subjects injured and of the families of Japanese subjects killed on the Island of Ikisima, in consequence of target practice directed against the shore by the United States man-of-war Omaha, in March, 1887.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 3, 1889.

SURVEY OF ARID LANDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation, to be immediately available, for the survey of arid lands; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 870) to provide for the retirement of a certain class of officers in the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a Senate concurrent resolution directing the printing (in addition to the usual number) of 3,000 additional copies of the final report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into recent changes in the relative value of precious metals, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT ON THE WILD SILK-WORM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the report of Professor Joseph Neumann, of San Francisco, Cal., under the act of July, 1888, upon the study of the wild silk-worm; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PENINGTON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. FORD, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10422) to provide for the purchase of the Fort Brown military reservation, Texas, and to extinguish all claims for the use and occupation of said reservation; and the same was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PURCHASE OF SCHOOL SITES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, by unanimous consent, introduced a resolution of inquiry calling for information relative to the purchase of school sites in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the ruling of the Speaker on yesterday on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kansas, in order to correct the RECORD, inasmuch as I think it does not contain the exact language used by the Speaker at that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the correction.

Mr. BLAND. The RECORD reads as follows:

The previous question was demanded by a member and ordered by the House, and a vote was actually being taken.

As I understood the Chair, and as the condition of the question exists, the previous question had been demanded, and the yeas and nays had been ordered upon that demand by the House; but the previous question had not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. That is the fact, and that is what the Chair intended to say. Of course the Chair is not prepared to say that that was the exact language used, but that was the fact. The previous question was demanded, and the yeas and nays were ordered by the House upon that demand.

Mr. BLAND. The RECORD therefore does not really state the fact, nor do I think it states correctly the language used by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the RECORD, and cause the proper correction to be made.

SIOUX INDIAN RESERVATION, DAKOTA.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. Next Thursday is the day set apart for the consideration of bills from that committee, and I desire to have this bill printed so that the members can examine it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the report will be submitted.

There was no objection.

Mr. PEEL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 11645, a bill (H. R. 11970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 11645 was ordered to be laid upon the table.

LIGHT-SHIP AND FOG-SIGNAL AT SANDY HOOK.

Mr. BRYCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11971) for the establishment of a light-ship, with steam fog-signal, at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF RULES.

Mr. REED. I ask the regular order, which is a vote upon the demand for the previous question on the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LEE. I ask the gentleman from Maine to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. REED. I have declined to yield to a number of gentlemen who have appealed to me, and I must insist upon the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the question on the demand for the previous question, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 20, not voting 205; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doors will be closed, and the Clerk will call the roll of absentees for excuses.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. CRAIN, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. DALZELL, be excused. He is absent on account of important business.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. COBB. I ask that my colleague, Mr. FORNEY, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that my colleague, Mr. CARLTON, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MORROW. I ask that my colleague, Mr. FELTON, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask that Mr. HAYDEN be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask that my colleague, Mr. SIMMONS, be excused for the rest of the day on account of illness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MILLS, be excused for the rest of the day on account of illness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. REED. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MILLIKEN, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The result of the roll-call was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are absent without the leave of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 42.

So the resolution was adopted.

The following members were absent with leave of the House:

Breckinridge, Ark.	Dalzell,	Hooker,	Penington,
Brumm,	Dibble,	Kelley,	Parker,
Caruth,	Dougherty,	Lagan,	Phelan,
Clardy,	Felton,	Laird,	Phelps,
Clark,	Forney,	Lyman,	Thomas, Ky.
Carlton,	Gay,	Maffett,	Warner,
Cutcheon,	Gibson,	Moffitt,	Weber,
Dargan,	Granger,	Morrill,	Whitthorne.
Dingley,	Hatch,	Neal,

Mr. RICHARDSON. While we are waiting for the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms I desire to make a request. The House has assigned Tuesday next for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Printing, and I ask unanimous consent to present a report at this time in order that it may be printed in advance.

Mr. REED. I shall have to ask for the regular order. The only way in which the House can be brought to understand the inconvenience to which it is liable to be put by such a course of action as has been adopted by the minority here is by being put to that inconvenience.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky (at 1 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.). Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite evident that we can not do any business here to-day, and therefore I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for a division. If we can have unanimous consent for the adoption of a resolution instructing the Sergeant-at-Arms to telegraph to absent members, requesting them to be present on Monday, I shall not object to an adjournment now.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to that.

Mr. WEAVER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYSON. Regular order.
